Other illustrations of New Mexican rumors might be given did time permit. But this, at all events, may be stated: that in the midst of all the clamor of “danger to American lives,” no two of the Americans have ever thought it necessary to come together for mutual protection; but, as has always been the case, are living where business or freak may call them—in frequent instances single Americans living in Mexican towns where for a month at a time they cannot have an opportunity to speak their own language, because they meet no one who understands it—doing, in fact, precisely what they did before these rumors began.

That the removal of the troops from the towns to the frontiers, is esteemed, by certain persons, as a very important and injurious affair, and that it has a decided effect on the price of calico and corn—that this is the all-absorbing question with the malcontents of New Mexico, is now beyond question; it is admitted in their organ, the Santa Fé Gazette. I read from the number of March 20th, from the Albuquerque correspondent, who, after showing an inamiable temper towards Governor Calhoun, says "it would be a good idea for some person to give to the public a political biography of his Excellency," and then goes on with firstly, secondly, and so on to seventhly, which is as follows:

"Seventhly, recount the means by which the Governor and his friend procured the removal of the troops from the towns to the frontiers, thereby ruining the mercantile and agricultural interests of the Territory. Show the wisdom of the movement by manifesting the falling off in the sale of goods, the difference in the price of corn and wheat, and the ruin that has been occasioned to every interest in the Territory. Show the fatherly and beneficial care the Governor took of us in that movement, by taking thousands upon thousands from the people of the Territory, in order to enable the Government of the United States to economize a little."

An Albuquerque correspondent of the St. Louis Republican of September 20th, says as follows:

"I much fear a civil war, as, when this news reaches Santa Fé, no doubt, from the excited state of the public mind, a large body of Americans will be disposed to take the law into their own hands, punish those concerned in this affair, and in that of those who killed Burnett. All this has grown out of the ill feeling of the Mexicans towards the Americans, and if Congress does not do something for us, a general war of the races will be the result."

"Troops will have to be stationed in the towns to prevent bloodshed. Most of the army are now on a campaign against the Navajoes."

So, there we have disease and remedy; the remedy is, "troops will have to be stationed in the towns to prevent bloodshed."

The Albuquerque correspondent seems to be a candid man, and in a future letter he may make a clean breast of it, and say, "troops will have to be stationed in the towns to give us a chance at the contracts, and to make a market for corn and calico."

It may not be amiss to say, that it appears, by the Santa Fé Gazette of March 13th, that the merchants keep up their spirits in spite of all the alarm for their lives. This will doubtless be gratifying to the gentleman from Missouri. I read for his benefit:

"The spirits of our merchants are peculiarly high, and in excellent tune, in spite of the hard and pressing times which all complain of in Santa Fé. In the morning you may see them talking in knots of two or three, about politics, the state of the weather, and business prospects, &c., &c.; but without that gloomy and cast-down look always perceptible on the countenance of a city merchant in the States, when business is dull, and a prospect of a speedy failure is before him. In the afternoon, if the weather is favorable, you may see these same merchants, with their respective clerks, exercising their limbs by a game of ball in the plaza, glad at being able to escape from the harassing and absorbing duties of the desk and counter, to gain a little recreation in this manner. They employ their evenings, generally, in letting off fireworks, to the no small entertainment of the natives and strangers in Santa Fé, and to the terror of the canine race; and who be to one if he should happen to get caught, as nothing on earth would save him from having a squib or cracker tied to his tail, fired, and himself started off down the street, yelling and howling as though his satanic majesty, with all his followers, were after him. These innocent amusements, however, have a tendency to keep up the good feeling and fellowship of each other, and is, perhaps, a better mode of passing the time than resorting to the drinking and gambling houses."

To convince the honorable gentleman from Missouri that the danger of being killed by Mexicans in New Mexico is baseless, and the fears of those Americans who wish for the troops in town are feigned, I read from an Albuquerque correspondent of the hanging of a Mexican by several Americans in that neighborhood—an act altogether inconsistent with real fear, and a wanton outrage, in my opinion, without justification, and well calculated to create a belief in the minds of the Mexicans that Americans entertain deadly hostility to them:

"ALBUQUERQUE, February 21, 1853.

"MR. EDITOR: On the 14th instant, we had, in the county of Valencia, an application of the law of the famous Judge Lynch. It appears that, about ten days previous to that time, a German, by the name of Max Wetzer, was barbarously murdered in Belen for his money, some five or six hundred dollars. No clue was had, until about the 11th of this month, as to who were his murderers. No investigation was had by the authorities as to the cause of his death, no excitement prevailed whatever, and, consequently, no attempt was made to ascertain who the murderers were; but the old adage, of 'murder will out,' was proven in this case, for it appears that a peon who belonged to the Alcalde, called Patricio, had been absent some days from the service of his master, and on the 11th of this month, his master, who lives in the place called Jarrales, heard of his being in the town, and sent for him and put him to work in the field with other peons. Patricio, after working about half the day, threw down his hoe and swore he would not work any longer for his master. The peons who were with him asked him, why? He responded, because he had plenty of money to pay his master; that he and others had killed that d—d gringo in Belen, and they had a whole bag of money. 'What?' exclaimed one, 'do you confess that you helped kill that man?' 'Yes,' says he, 'and what if I did, what harm is it to kill a gringo, they are not Christians, they are heretics?'—and other expressions, going to prove that he regarded it no more of a sin to kill a gringo than to kill a dog.

"One of the peons immediately informed the Alcalde of it, who had the man Patricio seized, and proceeded to examine him as to his accomplices. After many contradictory statements, he told this story: That what he said previously was not true; that he had endeavored by so doing to save his brother-in-law's life; that the truth was, that he and his brother-in-law had gone to the store of Max Wetzer about nine o'clock in the evening; that his brother-in-law knocked at the door; that Max Wetzer had retired, and called out from his bed, who was there? that his brother-in-law responded something in English—he knew how to speak it, having learned in California; that Max Wetzer came to the door and opened it, and was tying his fiza or sash at the time; Max and his brother-in-law entered, and were talking and laughing for a few minutes; that he did not understand anything except he heard the word California several times; that he thinks that his brother-in-law asked to buy some articles, and that, as Max jumped on top of the counter, his brother-in-law struck him with the thigh-bone of an ox that he had concealed under his blanket; Max fell over the counter on to the floor, between the counter and the shelves; his brother-in-law jumped over and continued striking him; and that in a few minutes he called out to him at the door, where he had stood watching, that he (Max) was dead, to come in and look for the money; he went in; they broke open a trunk but found no money in it, but at last found the bag of money under the head of Max Wetzer's bed; they took the bag of money and started for the river; they threw away the bone that Max had been killed with, into the river, and his brother-in-law washed some blood off that was on his shirt sleeve; they went into the hills and staid all night; that his brother-in-law agreed to hide the money, and only gave him a dollar out of the bag.

"The brother-in-law was arrested, but denied the whole; but on his shirt-sleeves were marks or stains of the blood that he had washed off at the river."

"The Alcalde committed them both, and on the 14th of the month two men came to the prefect, professing to have an order from the Hon. H. Mower for the prisoners, in order to convey them to Socorro for safe keeping; the Alcalde refused to deliver them, but the prefect, on application, did deliver them up, and the prisoners started in charge of the two men. On the next morning, about three or four miles from where they started, (Jarrales,) the prisoners were discovered hanging to a tree, one of them shot through the body, both of them dead. General satisfaction is expressed by the Americans of the Rio Abajo, and many are of the opinion that it is the only law by which the lives of Americans can be secure in this Territory. Among the Mexicans I have not heard of one, as yet, that condemned the act."

I say for this act there was no justification. The murderer was arrested by Mexicans, and was committed by a Mexican Alcalde, and would, without doubt, have suffered by due course of law. But I mention this matter as furnishing conclusive proof that the Americans in and about Albuquerque, which the honorable gentleman has told us is the dangerous neighborhood, have no fears but feigned ones. Such an act as this is utterly inconsistent with fears.

I trust the committee will not, by its action, show a want of confidence in the people of New Mexico. Distrust begets distrust, and confidence begets confidence.

Show, by your legislation, that the Government entertains kindly feelings for them, and those feelings will be reciprocated.

On this subject my constituents feel a lively interest; indeed, it is with them almost a matter of life and death. They are entitled to the protection of the Government, and I doubt not that they will receive it.

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I now offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the first section:

And that so much of the $300,000 annually appropriated by the act of 23d April, 1808, for arming and equipping the militia of the United States as may be necessary, shall be used for this purpose, anything in said act to the contrary notwithstanding.

I approve of the general objects of the bill now before the committee; but if it is to pass without the amendment I propose, or something similar, it will be an additional charge upon the Treasury of the United States, to what is already imposed upon it. By the act of the 23d of April, 1808, which I have before me, there is the permanent annual appropriation of $200,000, made for the arming and equipping of the whole body of the militia of the United States, including the Territories. Under that act there has been already expended the sum of $8,800,000, the greater part of which, perhaps, has never resulted in any good to the country, or to the individuals among whom the arms were distributed. My amendment to this section, provides that the expense of arming this militia in the Territories of Oregon and New Mexico, and the States of Texas and California, which have just been added, shall be defrayed out of this annual appropriation of $200,000, for the purpose of arming the militia. I think that the balance of the country will not suffer in the least by taking so much of that $200,000 as may be found necessary. Under the second section of this bill, the President would have authority, however, to arm all the troops which he might find it necessary to call into the country, either as militia or volunteers. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. VENABLE. I have no opposition to carrying out the law, to which my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] has referred; but the amendment which he proposes I think will defeat the object of the bill, which is now before the House. It is a perfect phantom of the imagination that the people of Oregon or New Mexico will furnish the Indians, who are daily plundering them of their property, rendering their lives unsafe, and driving them from their homes, with the arms with which they are furnished, for their own protection, by the United States. It would be to presume that men would war against the instincts of self-protection, and self-preservation. The cheapest and the most efficient mode of protecting our frontiers, is to place arms in the hands of those who have the deepest interest in that protection. But, a friend says to me, let them buy them. The country is worth protecting, and those who have settled our frontier territory, and who are entitled to our protection by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, have a right to ask for the protection of the Government. I am for the cheapest and most efficient mode of protection, which the interest of the individual settler, his wife and children, demands at our hands.

But I have before me an authority which ought to satisfy the mind of every one. We have the arms on hand, according to the report of the Secretary of War. We have them already in our arsenals, and it will not require the expenditure of a single dime to give us possession of the arms. All that is asked by the people of the frontier, by the residents of New Mexico and Oregon, exposed to the assaults of the Camanches upon the one hand, and savage tribes upon the other, is, that Government should place in their hands arms already manufactured, which are accumulating in our arsenals, which are not in use, and for which we have paid, in order that they may protect themselves and their firesides from the assaults of the savage foe. I do not understand that policy which says that the country is not worth protecting, and that it ought to be abandoned. We have induced men to go to frontier Territories belonging to us, and we are under obligations to protect them. All that they ask at our hands is the use of weapons which have been manufactured at the expense of the Government, which are already paid for, which are now lying useless in our armories, and which every instinct that operates upon the human heart would induce those men residing in New Mexico and Oregon to use for the protection of themselves, their families, and their property. If we wish a cheap protection, this is the one. If we wish to reduce the standing army, this is the way to reduce it. Recur to the history of our country; recur to that history in which, without arms, without ammunition, men resorted to their own rifles and shot-guns to relieve their country from the invasion of a foreign foe. Place in the hands of these individuals who have exposed themselves in settling the frontier, and for whom it is our duty to provide protection, the means of protecting themselves, their firesides, and homes—

The question was then taken upon Mr. Jones's amendment, and there were—ayes 48, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, and BAYLY, of Virginia, were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask that the roll be called, as there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that if gentlemen will vote upon one side or the other there would be found a quorum present. That can be ascertained by tellers.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the Chair state the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. CLEVELAND, the bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

SCHOOL LANDS IN OREGON.

The next bill on the Calendar was House bill No. 260, "to amend the act to establish the Territory of Oregon."

Mr. RICHARDSON. That bill only proposes to give to the Territory of Oregon a privilege which has been given, I believe, to all the States to which land has been granted for school purposes. It proposes that where the land has been taken for any other purpose, or where the section happens to be a fractional one, the people of the Territory shall have the opportunity of selecting other land to the amount which is thus lost in lieu of it. I suppose there can be no objection to the bill—I can see none—and I therefore move that it be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. The bill says that "the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon be, and hereby are authorized, in all cases where the sixteenth or thirty-sixth sections, or any part thereof, shall be taken and occupied under the law making donations of land to actual settlers, or otherwise, to cause the county commissioners of the several counties in said Territory, or such other officer or officers as they shall direct, to select, in lieu thereof, an equal quantity of any unoccupied land, in sections, or fractional sections, as the case may be." I wish to know what force is intended to be given to the word "occupied?"—if it is connected with legal titles?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly. It can mean nothing else. When you talk of "occupied under the law," of course you refer to legal titles.

Mr. HOUSTON. But may not the language there used be susceptible of other constructions?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will state to the gentleman that the words "or otherwise," are meant to cover a different class of cases. It happens every where that some of these sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections fall in fractional ones, and thus they do not get the land that Congress intended to give. It is certainly right they should have it. That is the view in which the words "or otherwise" are used here.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN OREGON.

The next bill on the Calendar was House bill No. 262, "to authorize the President of the United States to designate the places for ports of entry and delivery for the collection districts of Puget's Sound and Umpqua, in the Territory of Oregon, and to fix the compensation of the collector at Astoria in said Territory."

Mr. STUART. I think it would be advisable to stop the debate upon this bill if we mean to get through with the territorial business to-day. I move that the committee rise for that purpose.

Mr. HALL. There is no disposition to debate the bill.

Mr. STUART. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I presume there is no disposition to debate this bill. We have already a bill upon the table from the Senate, embracing substantially the same provisions as the one now before us, which emanates from the Committee on Commerce of this House. It varies little from the Senate bill, except in reference to the salaries. I believe there will be no objection to the bill. I move that it be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTRA CLERKS FOR THE LEGISLATURE OF NEW MEXICO.

The next bill on the Calendar was House bill No. 263, "to provide for additional clerks, and extend the sessions of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico."

Mr. SCUDDER. I had the honor of reporting this bill. It is a bill for the purpose of increasing the number of clerks in the Legislative Assembly of New Mexico. In order to understand the bill, and to understand the necessity of this increase in the number of clerks, we should consider first of what the population of New Mexico consists.

It was made to appear to the committee that the population of New Mexico consists of sixty-one thousand five hundred and forty-seven people. Of those, about eight hundred speak the English language, and about sixty thousand speak the Mexican or Spanish language. Of course, the Legislative Assembly, which is elected by this population, consists of individuals who speak the Spanish language alone, and of individuals who speak the English language alone. Hence it becomes necessary in their Legislative Assembly that they shall have clerks who can write not only Spanish but English. It was made to appear to the committee that the business of the Legislature of the Territory could not be carried on unless they had another set of clerks—two for the House, and two for the Council. It also appeared to the committee that the Mexicans and Americans, both making motions, in the House, it is necessary to have an interpreter, so that when motions are made they can be readily interpreted, and thus communicated to those who do not understand the language in which they are made. Consequently the committee were of the opinion that it was necessary, in order to carry on the business of the Legislative Assembly, that they should have two sets of clerks—one to record and engross in the Spanish language, and the other to record and engross in the English language; and also that they should have an interpreter. That is the substance of the first section of the bill.

The second section provides for the payment of extra clerks and an interpreter that were employed by the Legislative Assembly at its last session. Feeling the necessity of it, but without the authority of law, the Assembly did, at its last session, employ two extra clerks and an interpreter. Now, by a general law passed in 1846, the Legislative Assemblies of all the Territories are confined to two clerks. The Delegate from the Territory informs us that bills have been made out and sent to the Treasury Department for the payment of those extra clerks and of the interpreters employed by the Assembly at its last session, and the Comptroller of the Treasury doubts his authority to allow the payment. We have, therefore, reported the second section of the bill, which provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the extra clerks and the interpreter, who were employed during the last session of the Assembly, in the same way as he pays the two clerks that they are authorized by law to employ.

The third section of the bill provides for the extension of the time for holding the sessions of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico. The law as it now stands, and as it was fixed at the organization of the Territory, provides that the Legislative Assembly shall not extend beyond forty days. It is probable that when this organic law was passed, it was not taken into consideration, the delays and inconveniences that would accrue in consequence of the necessity which exists of transacting all their business in both the Spanish and English languages. And now, notwithstanding, two extra clerks have been provided for, and notwithstanding interpreters have been provided, still, it appears to the committee, that for the purpose of enabling them to perform their business as it should be performed, to have it understood by the Spaniards and the Americans, both of which constitute the Assembly, it is necessary that they should have the liberty of continuing the sessions sixty days, instead of forty, as is provided for by the organic law of the Territory.

Mr. HEBARD. I wish to make an inquiry in relation to these clerks. I see the bill provides for additional clerks. I wish to inquire how many are allowed now?

Mr. SCUDDER. The number already employed according to the law, is two in each house of Assembly. That is the general law applicable to all the Territories.

Mr. HEBARD. I understand the bill to recommend the appointment of two more for each House, two to write English and two to write Spanish. Now, I wish to inquire why one to write each language would not answer?

Mr. SCUDDER. It is necessary to have two in each House, a recording and an engrossing clerk, when the business is transacted in English only; of course it would be necessary to have duplicates if the business was to be carried on in both languages.

Mr. Chairman, it may perhaps be well, although it is very doubtful, in my mind, whether it is good policy, for the legislative business of the country to be carried on in the English language exclusively now. The time is probably not very far distant when it may be carried on in that language; but at the present time it would be a denial of justice, a denial of understanding, to a portion of those who constitute the Assembly. It is as necessary that it should be carried on in two languages, as it is that it should be carried on at all. I will merely suggest, in regard to the time for limiting the sessions of the Assembly, that I believe the Territories of Oregon and Minnesota both had their time extended. In their organic laws, the time for holding these Legislative Assemblies was confined to forty days; but since that, it has been extended to sixty days, in each of these Territories. Now, it would seem that sixty days should surely be allowed to transact the business of a Territory in two languages, when it is allowed to transact it in one language in these Territories. I have thus explained the reasons which induced the committee to offer this bill. If there be no objection, I move to lay it aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. HEBARD. Has this bill been printed?

Mr. SCUDDER. It has.

Mr. HEBARD. I have not been able to see it. If it has been printed, there have been no extra copies furnished for distribution, for I have not been able to find one. On this account I cannot say very much with regard to the details of the bill; but I believe it is one which, at least, in some of its features, is not unimportant. If you leave the question of economy entirely out of sight, the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SCUDDER,] in reference to the policy and purpose for which this recommendation is made, seems to me to merit some further consideration than has yet been given to it. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, or any other gentleman on this floor, when it is that this government of New Mexico would become Anglicized so that the translating clerks, and the clerks required to write in the Spanish language, could be dispensed with, if in the inception, we begin by making provisions by which the laws and the proceedings of the Territory shall be carried on in both the English and the Spanish languages? It seems to me that we should discourage any such attempts. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts by what means he proposes to remedy the evil if he would grant this facility from the commencement? I do not believe it is good policy. I do not believe it is for the welfare of the people of that Territory, to enact the laws of the Territory in the Spanish language. It is the policy of the Government to give whatever encouragement may be given to bring the language into uniformity. I am aware that there may be some inconvenience and some difficulty, but I believe that difficulty is not commensurate with the injury that will result and be entailed upon the people of that Territory by giving the encouragement which this bill intends.

But it seems to me, even admitting the policy of keeping the records in both languages, that the recommendation contained in this bill, relative to the number of clerks is a little extraordinary, and I am not prepared, as a matter of economy, to carry it out. I cannot see why there should be that number of clerks employed for that Assembly. That Territory has a small and limited population, and its business is limited, and it seems to me that the precedent is a dangerous one. But my chief objection is not that of economy. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts, who reported the bill, to recommend the encouragement of a policy which I consider detrimental to the interests of that Territory and inconsistent with the policy of our Government. I therefore hope that without further consideration, without further reasons shown, this bill will not be passed; at least not passed until some of the amendments or modifications I have suggested shall have been made.

Mr. STUART. As this bill seems likely to elicit discussion, I move that the committee do now rise, with a view of closing debate upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion pending that the bill be reported to the House.

Mr. STUART. Very well; if that motion can be carried, if no other gentleman proposes to discuss it, of course I do not insist upon my motion.

Mr. GORMAN. I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. STUART. Then I insist upon my motion, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the following bills, which they had instructed him to report to the House and to recommend their passage:

Bill (259) to provide for the protection of the Territories of New Mexico and Oregon, with an amendment;

Bill (260) to amend the act to establish the Territory of Oregon, without amendment; and Bill (262) to authorize the President to designate the places for the ports of entry and delivery for the collection districts of Puget's Sound, and Umpqua, in the Territory of Oregon; and to fix the compensation of the collector at Astoria in the said Territory.

The committee had also had under consideration bill No. 263, for additional clerks, and to extend the sessions of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STUART. I move the usual resolution to close debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon bill No. 263, in five minutes after the committee shall have resumed its consideration.

The question was then put, and the motion agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then put, and the motion agreed to.

So the rules were suspended.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, in the Chair,) and resumed the consideration of bill No. 263.

Mr. GORMAN. I have an amendment which I desire to offer, to come in at the end of the bill:

That the said Legislature of New Mexico shall cause to be allowed the commissioners heretofore appointed to draft a code of laws, such compensation as may be just and reasonable, and which, when so allowed, shall be paid out of the funds appropriated to defray the expenses of said Territory.

Mr. Chairman, at the first session of the Legislature of New Mexico they appointed two of your judges whom you had sent out there, together with some Spanish gentlemen, to draft a code of laws, and to look up the various laws then in force in New Mexico, and to put them in such a shape that they could conveniently be referred to, and understood. These commissioners and judges, in obedience to the act of the first Legislature that convened in New Mexico, proceeded to perform that duty. But there is no general law authorizing them to be paid. The commissioners have transmitted to me a claim to be presented to the Auditors of the Treasury of the United States. After the proper vouchers had been procured from the proper authorities in New Mexico, they also sent the same claim to the Delegate from that Territory. I presented the claim to the proper Department of the Treasury. But as there was no authority by law to pay it, although its propriety was admitted, although the right of that Legislature to create the commissioners was not doubted, yet, there being no law by which it could be paid, or any fund set apart for its payment, it has heretofore not been allowed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I should like to ask if those commissioners were appointed by authority of law?

Mr. GORMAN. They were appointed by the first Legislature that were convened in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. DUNHAM. But not by authority of law.

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir; the first Legislature that met in New Mexico appointed one or two Spanish gentlemen, residents of the Territory, who collected together the various laws that were in force in the Territory, and with two of the judges, appointed by Congress for that Territory, they proceeded to perform the duty imposed upon them by the Legislature. The Legislature would have made an appropriation for their payment, but there are no funds at their disposal out of which they can be paid. The Committee of Ways and Means of this House have the matter before them, and will, in due time, make the necessary appropriation. But it is necessary that some direction should be given, in order that the Legislature shall have the authority to act upon an account which is just and proper to be paid.

Mr. HALL. Why could not the members of the Legislature do it themselves?

Mr. GORMAN. Three of these commissioners were members of the Legislature. The judicial opinion of the judges was highly important and necessary to form a proper code of laws, and make them conform to the institutions of the country. They were selected as being, perhaps, more familiar with the Constitution and the laws of the United States, so as to make the institutions and laws of New Mexico conform more completely with the institutions of this country. They completed the laws, and the next Legislature adopted nearly all of them. This bill only proposes to give the next Legislature which may convene in that Territory, authority to make such an allowance as, in their judgment, may seem proper—such as they may deem reasonable and right. An appropriation by law, furnishing all the means, which will be made, I apprehend, by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DUNHAM made some remarks here which were totally inaudible to the Reporter.

Mr. GORMAN. One word more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must inform the gentleman that the time for debate has expired, and this amendment has been spoken against, and no further debate is in order.

Mr. GORMAN. By making an amendment to my own amendment can I be heard for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can modify his own amendment, but cannot offer an amendment to his own amendment, upon which to speak.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I wish to make an informal amendment, for the purpose of saying half a dozen words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot hear the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I propose to make some informal amendment, for the purpose of making a remark to the House. I move to strike out the last word in the bill. It is certainly in the power of the committee and the House to make this allowance to the Legislature in this way or not, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM] has suggested, and they have also to take into consideration the exigencies and circumstances under which this act was done. I want to remind the House of one single fact: that this is the first Territory we have ever had of so large a population, in which so great a confusion existed, in consequence of the operation of the war. The Mexican Government was thrust aside, and all its means of enforcing its laws cut up by the roots by the military government. The military government has been put aside, and the territorial government had but just gone into operation. And that Territory, with a large population of 61,000, merely wishes this Government to authorize this commission for codifying the laws, and drawing some order out of the great confusion which there prevails. The Territory of New Mexico, I wish to say in conclusion, contains a larger population than the Territories of Utah, Oregon, and Minnesota, all added together and multiplied by two, as appears by the last census. It is double the amount of all those other Territories put together. Under all the circumstances I trust Congress will authorize it.

Mr. STUART. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentlemen from New Mexico, [Mr. WEIGHTMAN,] and in favor of the original amendment, and hope that it will pass without modification. I know one of the gentlemen engaged upon that code of laws. He is competent and able, and would do that duty well anywhere, and I doubt not he did it well there, and certainly they ought to be paid. That Territory was without any laws, except what was known as the "Kearny Code." This arrangement, modification, or whatever you choose to call it, was indispensable. It has been done, and well done, and there is no earthly reason why those commissioners should not be paid, I trust, therefore, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. WEIGHTMAN] informally, will not prevail, and that the one offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. GORMAN,] will prevail. It is right, eminently right and proper.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I will withdraw my amendment, if there be no objection.

No objection was made, and the amendment was withdrawn.

The question now recurring upon the amendment offered by Mr. GORMAN, it was put and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. If there is no other amendment, I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN OREGON.

The next bill that came up in order, for the consideration of the committee, was Senate bill No. 263, to authorize the President of the United States to designate the places for the ports of entry and delivery for the collection districts of Puget's Sound and Umpqua, in the Territory of Oregon.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New Mexico. That bill has not been referred to any committee of this House. The Committee on Commerce has reported a bill which answers all the purposes of this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that this is a Senate bill.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I can give several reasons why the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce should be retained in preference to this one.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the business in order. The gentleman can move to lay it aside.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move to lay it aside, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. PHELPS. I would suggest to my friend that perhaps it would be better to make a motion that the committee rise. If it is right to pass a bill of this kind, go into the House, have this bill referred to the committee, and then get into committee, and adopt the House bill as an amendment to this, and send it back to the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman that this bill has been referred to the committee; otherwise it could not be taken up.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire if that bill has not been reported back to the House, with a recommendation that it be rejected? Is not that the fact?

The CHAIRMAN. Such is not the fact.

Mr. JONES. I am told that it is a fact.

Mr. SEYMOUR. The bill which has just been read by the Clerk has not, to my knowledge, been referred to any committee of this House for consideration, nor reported to the House by any committee. It has merely been reported to the House by the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman that this bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, by the House. The question is, shall it be acted upon, or passed over?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move, then, that the bill of the House, which has been passed by the committee for the same purpose, be substituted for this one. It was a bill maturely considered by the Committee on Commerce of this House; and, after consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, it was understood that the House bill should be preferred to the Senate bill. The difference is this: Both of these bills contain the same section authorizing the President of the United States to designate the ports of entry in two of the collection districts in Oregon; and the reason why this bill is recommended, rather than that the House itself should establish those ports, is the uncertain state of the commercial business of that country. At the present time, there are several applications before the Committees on Commerce of this House and the Senate, in reference to the establishment of particular points as ports; but, upon referring this question to the Treasury Department, it was recommended that a general power should be conferred upon the President, when he shall have ascertained the necessities of that Territory, and the two points at which it is desirable to establish the ports in these two districts—one in the district of Oregon, and the other in the district of Puget's Sound—to designate and establish those ports. The bill of the House, and the bill of the Senate, conform precisely in reference to these particulars.

There is another section in both bills, which increases the salaries of the collectors. The Senate bill increases the salaries of several collectors, but the House bill increases the salary of only one, and that is the collector located at Astoria, in the collection district of Oregon. It was not deemed necessary, by the Committee on Commerce of this House, to increase, at present, the salaries of the other collectors; and I believe that conclusion is satisfactory to the honorable Delegate from that Territory, [Mr. LANE,] who is well acquainted with the circumstances under which it has been deemed advisable to recommend this increase of salary.

I will add that the present salary of the collector at Astoria was found to be entirely inadequate to pay the expenses incurred by him in removing from this part of the country with his family to establish himself there. It was only the sum of $1,000, with the fees of office. Those fees, in the present state of the commerce of that district, are very small; and the sum of $3,000 was deemed a suitable sum for his salary, considering the expense of living in that Territory. That is the bill of the House; and it differs in this respect from the bill of the Senate, inasmuch as it raises the salary of only the collector of the district of Oregon; whereas the bill of the Senate raises the salaries of two other collectors, which is not deemed to be necessary by the Committee on Commerce of this House.

Now, sir, for the purpose of setting this matter all right, I move to amend the Senate bill before the committee by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting those two sections of the House bill which we have just passed, and that will conform to the present understanding of the committees of both Houses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must state to the gentleman that, according to the rules of the House, a proposition to amend this bill by the adoption of another bill, which has already been passed and reported to the House, will not be in order.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I would suggest, then, that this bill be passed by informally.

Mr. STUART. I move to report this bill to the House, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEYMOUR,] who is at the head of the Committee on Commerce of this House. I desire to know whether there are not some ports in Oregon or California, or both, to which the Government has to send money from other points to pay the salaries of the collectors at those places? Are there not some ports there where they do not collect a solitary dime, in their capacity as collectors? and does not their pay have to be sent from some other part of the country?

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I would say, in reply to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] that in regard to ports in the State of California, the Committee on Commerce have not been led into an inquiry, inasmuch as nothing upon that subject has been before them; but in reference to the ports of the Territory of Oregon, we have been informed by the Delegate of that Territory—although I am not aware of information from any other source which has come before the House, yet that is reliable enough, as we all know—that in the district of Oregon there is a considerable commercial business, yet the fees do not amount to as much, perhaps, as the salary the collector receives, and yet that salary is entirely inadequate to his support. At other places in that Territory where there are ports, there is some trade, yet the fees are very small, and, I presume, the result is the same there. The salaries of the other collectors are only $1,600, which is a very small compensation, and will scarcely support any of those collectors—together with fees not to exceed $2,000. The limit of the salary is $2,000. It is the maximum. The trade there is small at present, but it is increasing, as we all know, and it is desirable to have persons stationed where we have ports established, and where trade is concentrated, for the purpose of discharging these duties. And I do not know that it has been ever considered a reason for dismissing these officers, that there was small trade at a port. The country is new, and we have a pretty certain prospect that this trade will increase, and ultimately arrive at a very great amount, so that the salary would be paid out of the fees of the office in a short time. I do not suppose that there is any idea now to discontinue these offices.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman will find before he gets through with the examination of those ports, and their condition, that my statement is correct. I am satisfied that at some ports, although I am not prepared to say what ports, the facts exist as I have stated them to the gentleman, and I hope he will give them his attention, if not at this, at some other time.

Mr. LANE. With the gentleman's permission I will reply to his inquiries. Astoria, the principal port of that Territory, is at or near the mouth of the Columbia river. This bill provides only for the increase of the salary of its collector, which is now $1,000, a sum entirely inadequate.

The question was taken and the bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SCHOOL LANDS.

The next bill coming up in order was House bill No. 264, to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain townships and fractional townships in the Territory of Minnesota, not heretofore provided for.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, the bill just read provides for two classes of cases. The first relates to fractional, sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, which contain less than six hundred and forty acres. The bill proposes to authorize the Territory of Minnesota to select other lands to make up that deficiency.

The other class of cases is where certain townships are fractional, and do not contain the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. Where townships of that kind are found, the bill authorizes the Territory of Minnesota to select lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, according to the provisions of the act of 1826, which provides that when a fractional township is more than three fourths of a full township, three fourths of an entire section may be selected for school purposes; and when a fractional township is more than one half but less than three fourths of a full township, the one half of a section may be selected for school purposes; and when a fractional township is more than one fourth and less than one half of a full township, the one fourth section may be selected for school purposes. Such are the provisions of the act of 1826, which is incorporated into the bill before the committee. I presume no further explanation of the bill is necessary, and I therefore move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House.

The question was then taken, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SURVEYOR GENERAL IN OREGON.

Mr. HALL. I move to take up House bill No. 224, being "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands,'" approved September 27, 1850.

The bill was taken up, and read through.

Mr. STUART. I move that the committee rise, with the view of moving in the House a resolution for the termination of debate upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman, (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee,) reported, that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, and had instructed him to report House bills Nos. 263 and 264, without amendment, with the recommendation that they do pass; and also Senate bill No. 283, with the recommendation that it do not pass; and that the committee also had had under consideration House bill No. 224, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STUART. I move the usual resolution that debate be terminated upon House bill No. 224 within fifteen minutes after the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall again have resumed its consideration.

Which motion was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, in the chair.)

Mr. HALL. I regret that the Committee on Public Lands made an adverse report on this bill; for I think that it ought to pass. I will explain it in as few words as possible. On the 27th of September, 1850, an act was passed granting lands to all persons enumerated in it, who had settled in Oregon, or who should settle there, prior to the first of September, 1853, on consideration of their living upon it for four consecutive years. There are some persons in Oregon whose occupation is such as to render it almost impossible for them to comply with the act of 27th September, 1850. They are mechanics and merchants who reside in town. They went there with the earliest tide of emigration, and rendered as important service as any other class in settling that country, and perfecting the claim of the United States to it.

These persons are excluded from the benefits of the act of the 27th of September, 1850. They now ask Congress not to give them the benefits of that act, not to give them this land for nothing, but they ask that they may be permitted to enter the same quantity of land which the act of 1850 gave to the settler at $1 25 per acre. It appears to me that there is nothing unreasonable, unjust, or unfair about this. The bill, however, extends to another class of persons, whose merit is, perhaps, not so great. I mean those who may settle in Oregon Territory prior to the 1st of September, 1853, the benefits of the act of September, 1850. It appears to me, as they render important service by going to that distant Territory, inasmuch as they form as important part of the army of occupation as any other portion, that they should be permitted, also, to receive their land by paying the sum of $1 25 per acre for it. The issue presented is just this: whether these men shall be compelled, by the act of September, 1850, to settle upon the land and get it for nothing, or be permitted to get the land by paying $1 25 an acre into the Treasury of the United States for it. That is the whole principle involved in the bill. There are two sections in this bill which I think ought to be modified. The fourth section proposes to appropriate the proceeds of these lands to the improvement of some of the rivers in the Territory of Oregon. I have not sufficient information with regard to these rivers to justify me in voting for that proposition. I propose, therefore, to strike out the fourth section of the bill, which directs the manner in which the proceeds of these lands shall be applied, and let the money go into the Treasury, to be appropriated as other public money. The fifth section should be modified if the fourth section is stricken out. I propose to strike out the words "sum not to exceed — thousand dollars," and to insert "two per cent. upon all such sums," and insert a proviso at the end of the section providing that the salary of the surveyor general shall not exceed the sum of $4,000 a year. The effect of my amendment will be this: If the bill passes, as I propose, it will allow these people in Oregon, who are unable to comply with the provisions of the act of September, 1850, to purchase land according to the terms of that act at $1 25 per acre, and it will also provide that the surveyor general shall receive two per cent. of the proceeds arising from these sales, provided, however, the salary shall not, in any event, exceed $4,000 a year. His present salary is $2,500.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. HALL,] why this money is made payable to the surveyor general?

Mr. HALL. Because there is no other land officer in Oregon to receive it. We have, as yet, no receiver at the land office.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not establish an office there?

Mr. HALL. Because we do not think that the business of the country will at present justify it. There is no land to be brought into market. We do not think that, for the purpose of attending to so little land as may be sold under this act, it will justify the expense of establishing registers and receivers there.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand that the salary of the surveyor general is to be extended from $2,500 to $4,000, for the extra service?

Mr. HALL. If the gentleman looks at the bill, he will find, that in order to compensate the surveyor general for the additional labor imposed upon him by the present bill, and in order to pay the clerk hire and all incidental expenses, he is permitted to receive two per cent. upon all sales of land, provided he shall not receive more than $4,000 a year.

Mr. VENABLE. It will be observed, by attending to this bill, that the committee have reported that amendment with a recommendation that it do not pass. It does not come here indorsed by the approbation of the committee to whom it was referred. It has been truly said, that we have but little land to dispose of in the Territory of Oregon, according to the law which gives away the land to actual settlers; but here is a proposition to take away the little that does remain, and with the proceeds to improve the Willamette river.

Mr. HALL. I will move to strike that out.

Mr. VENABLE. Then, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HALL. I move to strike out the fourth section, viz:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the funds arising from the sale of said lands, as aforesaid, be and they are hereby appropriated to the improvement of the Willamette river, one half thereof to be applied to the improvement of said river above the falls, and the remaining half to be applied to the improvement of said river below the falls aforesaid.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to.

The fifth section was then read, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of said surveyor general, immediately upon the taking effect of this act, to enter into security in the sum of — thousand dollars, conditioned for the safe-keeping and legal disbursement of all moneys received by him as surveyor general by virtue of the provisions of this act. And it shall further be the duty of said surveyor general to transmit, as aforesaid, to such person or persons as shall be authorized by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory to receive the same, a duplicate copy of his quarterly reports, provided for in the third section of this act; and it shall also be the duty of said surveyor general to pay over to such person or persons as shall be authorized by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory to receive and receipt for the same, all moneys so received by him, as aforesaid, and appropriated to said Territory of Oregon, under the provisions of the — section of this act, for the uses and purposes therein specified: Provided, however, That in order to compensate the surveyor general of said Territory for the additional labors and responsibility imposed upon him by this act in receiving, safe-keeping, paying over, and accounting for the money aforesaid he shall be allowed to retain of the proceeds aforesaid a sum not exceeding — thousand dollars, which shall include the payment for clerk hire, together with all costs and expenses incidental to such special services in any one year.

Mr. HALL. I move to strike out of the fifth section all after the word "act" and before the word "provided," from the seventh to the eighteenth line. I will merely explain that the words I propose to strike out provide for paying over the money in accordance with the terms of the fourth section. The committee have already stricken out that section, consequently these words which I now propose to strike out are unnecessary and improper.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HALL's motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HALL. I propose to amend this section by striking out the words "he shall be allowed to retain of the proceeds aforesaid a sum not exceeding — thousand dollars," and inserting the words "two per cent. upon all such sums."

Mr. SEYMOUR. I should like to inquire if this is in addition—if this two per cent. will be in addition to the fixed salary which the officer has?

Mr. HALL. It will.

Mr. SEYMOUR. And what, in your estimation, being at the head of the Land Committee, do you suppose the salary of that officer will be with the addition of the two per cent. upon all sales which will be made?

Mr. HALL. My proposition is, to limit the sum to $4,000, so that this officer shall not, under any circumstances, receive more than $4,000 for his services.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I understand that the gentleman, by his present amendment, proposes to allow the surveyor to retain in his hands his compensation. I understand that to have been the case at an early day. The existing law now requires all collections of revenue from all sources, to go into the Treasury, and to be paid out by an appropriation.

Mr. HALL. I propose to modify my amendment, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.]

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HALL. I now move to add to the fifth section the following proviso: "Provided further, That the salary of said surveyor general shall in no event exceed the sum of $4,000 for any year."

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman that his allowance under this bill must be expressly confined to $4,000.

Mr. HALL. I will modify my amendment as follows:

Provided, That the salary and percentage of said surveyor general shall not exceed the sum of $4,000 for any one year.

Mr. PENNIMAN. I propose to amend by adding the words "clerk hire" after the words "surveyor general."

Mr. HALL. If the gentleman will only look at the section, he will see that that is already provided for. The surveyor general is to receive two per cent. to cover the expenses of clerk hire.

Mr. PENNIMAN. I believe that portion of the section has been stricken out.

Mr. HALL. Oh, no; you are mistaken.

Mr. HOUSTON. At any rate, the amendment is not objectionable.

Mr. HALL. Very well; I have no objection to its adoption.

The question was then put on the amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment as amended, and being put, was agreed to.

Mr. HEBARD. I now move to strike out from the fifth section the words "by virtue of the provisions of this act," and to insert in lieu thereof "according to law," so as to make it read:

"That it shall be the duty of said surveyor general, immediately upon the taking effect of this act, to enter into security in the sum of — thousand dollars, conditioned for the safe-keeping and legal disbursement of all moneys received by him as surveyor general, according to law."

As the section now stands, he is required to pay over the moneys "by virtue of the provisions of this act." Now, all the provisions of this act, for paying over these moneys, have been stricken out; and if, therefore, those words were retained, they would be unmeaning, and there would seem to be no obligation upon him to pay it over, from any provision that would be in this law.

Mr. HALL. The section, as it now stands, provides not for the payment of the money according to the provisions of this act, but for the disbursement of the money received under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BISSELL. What disbursements has the surveyor general to make?

Mr. HALL. I suppose such as the Secretary of the Treasury may impose upon him.

Mr. BISSELL. The bill does not require any. It only requires the safe-keeping of the moneys he receives under this act.

Mr. HEBARD. I believe it has reference not only to the safe-keeping, but to the disbursement also.

Mr. HALL. You can strike out the words "and legal disbursement."

Mr. HEBARD. I think the amendment I propose is certainly unobjectionable.

Mr. HALL. Well, I do not care. Let it be adopted.

The question was then taken on Mr. HEBARD's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HALL. There is a blank in the fifth section, which ought to be filled, providing for the amount of security the surveyor general shall give. I do not know what amount is proper; but I will move to fill the blank with "fifty," so as to make fifty thousand dollars, the amount of security to be given.

A MEMBER. That is too much. Make it twenty thousand.

Mr. HALL. Very well; I move to insert "twenty" in the blank.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BISSELL. I do not exactly like those words, "and legal disbursement," in the fifth line, because the surveyor general has no disbursing to do. I move to strike them out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to inquire, whether $20,000 would probably cover any defalcation this officer might make?

Mr. HALL. I am really unable to answer the inquiry of the gentleman. I supposed the amount ought to be $50,000, but gentlemen around me said that was too much, and that $20,000 was sufficient.

Mr. CLARK. I am not satisfied with $20,000, and I therefore move to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will now suggest to the gentlemen who have this bill in charge, that in contravention of the custom, and, indeed, of the law, they have made the surveyor general a receiver of money for public lands. He is emphatically one of the receivers of public money—just as much so as any other receiver of money for customs or anything else, in any part of the United States. That being true, it occurs to me that there ought to be added to the bill a provision subjecting him to the restrictions that are contained in the act of 1846, known as the Independent Treasury act, so that he shall stand upon the same footing with all the other receivers of public money.

Mr. HALL. In accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, I offer the following, as an amendment to the sixth section of the bill, to come in at the end thereof, viz:

And that the said surveyor general shall be subject to all the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the better organization of the Treasury, and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue," approved August 6th, 1848.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it in order to move to strike out "$50,000" in the fifth section, and insert some other sum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not in order to do so after the committee has inserted "$20,000." The Chair, on reflection, thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. CLARK,] to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty," and which was adopted by the committee, was not in order.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the sum then stand at $20,000?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it stands at $50,000.

Mr. FOWLER. If it was in order to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty," why is it not in order now to strike out "fifty" and insert some other number?

The CHAIRMAN. If the question had been made at the time, or if the attention of the Chair had been called to it, the amendment would have been ruled out of order.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that $50,000 is an enormous sum, and that if the committee would consider, they would be willing to reduce it at least to $20,000.

Mr. STUART. The Delegate from Oregon is satisfied with the amount at $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The alteration can only be made by general consent.

Mr. FOWLER. If the Delegate from Oregon is satisfied, I will not insist; but it strikes me that $50,000 is an enormous sum, and that it would be very difficult to get it.

On motion by Mr. HALL, the bill was then ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the amendments, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SIBLEY moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 224, "to amend an act entitled 'An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands,'" approved September 27, 1850, and had directed him to report the same to the House, with sundry amendments, and with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are various bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to some of which there are amendments to be made, and on which gentlemen may desire to vote by yeas and nays. There are many of them, however, to which there is no objection. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the bills in their order, and that such as there is no objection to may be put upon their passage.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the proposition of the gentleman will be followed by the House.

Mr. STANLY. Will the Chair state what is the exact proposition of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks the unanimous consent of the House to take up and pass such bills as have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to which there shall be no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I prefer that they should be called up one at a time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Gentlemen can object to any one they do not desire to see pass, in this way, and it will be passed by.

Mr. MEACHAM. I desire to ask what will become of those that are objected to, if this course is taken?—what will their position be?

The SPEAKER. They will come up in their regular order, as unfinished business.

Mr. MEACHAM. As the first business?

The SPEAKER. Not as the first business, because there is other unfinished business before them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. These bills may be called up in their regular order and disposed of one at a time, if gentlemen prefer it. I call for bill No. 252.

Mr. JONES. I want to know if these bills are passed by now, they will not go to the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. According to the former practice of the House they would go upon the table. But according to the decision of the present occupant of the chair, they remain as unfinished business.

Mr. JONES. Do all the bills remain as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. All that have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. If I understand it, all that have been reported this week remain as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair, he decides that all the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union yesterday and to-day, or during the week, and not disposed of, will take their places and will come up in their regular order as the unfinished business of the House.

Mr. HENN. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union have had under consideration all the bills upon the Calendar except the one reported by myself. There has been no action upon that, and I ask, what will become of it if the House adjourn to-day without going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and disposing of it?

The SPEAKER. Is that bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. HENN. It is, and is a part of the special order.

The SPEAKER. The special order will be exhausted after the adjournment to-day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will state to the gentleman, that his object can be attained in this way: He can move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from its further consideration, and bring it into the House for action.

Mr. HOUSTON. How can you do that?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent, or by a suspension of the rules, upon Monday alone.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will make that motion myself on Monday, as I desire to have that bill disposed of along with the other territorial business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the course suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, in relation to the disposition of such bills as have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if there be no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. I prefer that the bills shall come up in their regular order, and be disposed of one at a time.

Mr. HENN. I am satisfied that two thirds cannot be obtained for suspending the rules for the purpose of discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill to which I just alluded. I think, in justice, it ought to be placed upon the same footing with the other territorial business. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon the special order.

Mr. LETCHER. This is Saturday, and the usual time for adjournment has arrived. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to—ayes 72, noes 39; and

The House adjourned till Monday next at twelve o'clock.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. ROBE: A petition to establish a post route from Addison, Steuben county, New York, to Elkland, Tioga county, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. GROW: The remonstrance of citizens of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, against the renewal of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. HILLYER: Resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, praying the establishment of a weekly mail route, to be carried upon a two-horse stage or coach, from Asheville, Buncomb Court-House, North Carolina, to Clarksville, Habersham county, Georgia, via the post-offices now established with horse mail from Asheville, Buncomb Court-House, North Carolina, to Clarksville, Habersham county, Georgia.

Also, for a weekly horse mail from Whitestone post office, in Pickens district, South Carolina, to Clayton, in Rabun county, Georgia.

Also, for a weekly horse-mail from Swayne's Store, in Telfair county, Georgia, to Wanesboro', in Ware county, Georgia.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 24, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask leave to present the credentials of the Hon. WILLIAM F. DE SAUSSURE, who has been appointed to fill the vacancy in the Senate occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. R. BARNWELL RHETT, and ask that they may be read.

The credentials were read.

Mr. DE SAUSSURE came forward, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Navy Department, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a report from the Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, on the comparative value of anthracite and bituminous coal.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Is that report in answer to the resolution of my colleague?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask that it be laid on the table until my colleague returns, without any order for printing.

The report was laid upon the table.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BERRIEN presented the memorial of James J. Morrison and others, officers of the United States revenue cutter Jackson, praying to be allowed a proportion of the proceeds of the steamship Pampero, seized and sold for a violation of the neutrality laws of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of citizens of Newton, New Hampshire, praying that the bill now pending before Congress granting to every citizen of the United States one hundred and sixty acres of land, may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move to pass by the morning business and proceed to the consideration of Executive business, for the reason which I suggested on Friday last. I deem it a matter of great importance, as I think I could satisfy the Senate if, under our rules, I were permitted to do so.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the Senator from Missouri how long he expects that we shall be engaged in Executive session, if we agree to the motion?

Mr. ATCHISON. About an hour, or perhaps less time.

Mr. HALE. I would ask if the object is to take up any Indian treaties?

Mr. ATCHISON. It is.

Mr. HALE. That will take up all day; no doubt of it.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after two hours and a half spent therein, the doors were reopened.

THE COMPROMISE MEASURES.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I wish to give notice, that I shall to-morrow ask the Senate to take up the resolution introduced by my predecessor, [Mr. Foote,] commonly known as the compromise finality resolution.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. DOWNS gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way and making a grant of land for the construction of a railroad from New Orleans to Opelousas, and thence to the Sabine.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852," the pending question being upon the amendment of Mr. SHIELDS to insert the following:

For the repairs of the Long Bridge, across the Potomac, a sum not exceeding $12,000; to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner on Public Buildings.

Mr. BADGER. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. I told my friend from Illinois the other day, when he announced it, that I was decidedly opposed to it. I would much rather vote an appropriation of $25,000 to remove that wretched and unsightly obstruction to the Potomac river, than vote $12,000 for the purpose of patching it up, and keeping it in a condition in which it will continue to be an obstruction to the flow of that river. I think it will be a great deal better to remove the bridge altogether, and either establish a steam ferry-boat there, such as maintains the communication between Brooklyn and New York, which can carry over passengers from either side every fifteen minutes during the day, and will leave the river open and unobstructed, and give an opportunity to the flow of the water to wash away the shoals which have now been formed against that portion of the bridge, and much the larger portion of it which is not hollow, but which is built on the principle of a causeway. I hope, at all events, that we shall not expend $12,000 now for the purpose of patching up that miserable structure.

Mr. CLARKE. As one of the committee of which the Senator from Illinois is chairman, and as one who agreed to the amendment which he has proposed to the bill, I beg leave to say a few words. I agree in part with my friend from North Carolina, that this miserable structure should be removed. But, yet, I believe that it is necessary that there should be some communication between the District of Columbia and the Virginia shore; and there is no way in which that communication can be kept up or continued at less expense than by the temporary repair of this bridge. I believe that the bridge as it stands, with its piers and abutments, is a nuisance, and will eventually do essential injury to the city of Washington, and the health of its inhabitants. I believe that it is necessary for us to open a direct communication with the Virginia shore. There should be a bridge constructed across the Potomac river, that should not allow the deposits of the Potomac as they come down to be lodged on the flats as they are now, and become prejudicial to the health of the city, as I have no doubt they will be, and fill up the channel. But we have to make an appropriation for this purpose. Preparation will be necessary; and it will be at least one year, if not two years, before a suitable and proper bridge can be built across that river. Now, if this small appropriation of $12,000, as I consider it, be made, the present bridge can be repaired so as to have a communication until a new bridge can be built, and then, undoubtedly, the whole of this structure ought to be removed, as a common nuisance.

It was for this reason that I assented to the proposition of my friend from Illinois, in recommending this appropriation. I think, now, if the honorable Senator from North Carolina will reflect that it is utterly impossible to keep up a communication with the Virginia shore unless through the repair of this bridge, he will be satisfied that this appropriation ought to be made in order to have that repair. Then the Senator from Illinois and myself will go with him for constructing a new bridge upon a different principle, to be rid of those abutments and piers which absolutely obstruct, not only the free passage of the water, but continue the accumulation of deposits upon the bed of the river, which will eventually, if not removed, be destructive to the health of the city.

Now, if you undertake to get a ferry across, and remove the bridge, it will cost double the amount required to repair the bridge. To maintain a ferry across the river until a new bridge can be erected will cost double the amount now asked for. The better course is, I think, to repair the bridge at present, temporarily, in as cheap a manner as it can possibly be done with safety. Then, in the general appropriation bill, we can provide for the construction of such a bridge as will answer the purpose in view completely, and at the same time guard against the filling up of the river. I am, therefore, in favor of the present appropriation of $12,000 for the repair of the bridge. But still, I agree with the Senator from North Carolina, that this miserable structure should be removed from the river. It, however, cannot be done at present. If we were to go to work immediately and make an appropriation now for removing it, it would be another year before it could be removed. In the mean time there would be no means of communication between the Virginia shore and the District of Columbia. These are my views upon the subject, and these are the reasons why I agreed with my friend from Illinois, that the appropriation should be recommended to the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I should be very much obliged to the Senator who moved this amendment, or any member of the committee who has investigated the matter, to inform me where the division is between the State of Virginia and the District of Columbia. I would like to know where is the line, and whether any portion of this bridge is in the State of Virginia; and if so, whether that portion carried away was in the District or in the State of Virginia.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is a report on the table which I declined asking to have read the other day, in order to avoid taking up the time of the Senate. Perhaps the best thing I could do would be to have that report read. I would state, however, in addition to what my friend from Rhode Island has said, that on inquiry, as far as we could obtain information, we ascertained that if there was a new bridge about to be constructed, at this moment it would be necessary to make these repairs to aid in constructing a new bridge, and that the $12,000 proposed to be expended in the repair of this bridge would be wisely expended even to aid in the construction of a new bridge.

I agree with my honorable friend from North Carolina that there ought to be a new structure, and I hope before long to have such a one—one that will enable railroad cars to pass over it. I wish to have a bridge passable for railroad cars, so as to let the North and South unite here in Washington; but to do that, this bridge, or some such bridge, is necessary, and some repair is necessary to enable us to make that new structure. The locality for such a structure has not been selected, and the plan has not been provided; therefore we must repair this bridge in some way, or, as my friend from Rhode Island has stated, there will be no communication between this city and the Virginia shore, except that which is now maintained by a sort of temporary little boat which is running.

I hope there will be no further objection to the amendment. I take no other interest in this matter than that which every man in this District must feel. There ought to be some communication between the District and Virginia shore. This is the cheapest that can be possibly provided at this moment. It is only proposed now to repair the bridge temporarily. The amendment provides that the money shall be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, in order to avoid the appointment of an officer for the purpose. The object is to patch up the bridge temporarily, and make it do for the present, until we obtain a plan for a new structure.

I will answer the question of the Senator from Maine. The recent high water carried off that portion of the bridge next to Virginia, but notwithstanding that, it is within the District of Columbia; and it is the duty of Congress to make this appropriation.

Mr. HALE. I should like to know what is the boundary line between the District and Virginia?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Does this proposed expenditure of $12,000 look to a structure of a different kind than the one which has heretofore existed? Is it to be expended in connection with a plan for another and a better bridge than we have heretofore had? Or is the expenditure altogether independent of another bridge? I would much prefer that the plan for this should contemplate another structure; for if we expend this as a single appropriation, without looking to a change in the character of the structure, it will, in my opinion, be the loss of so much money; whereas, if a plan should be adopted for a permanent structure, and we should appropriate this amount now, and it should be expended for the repair of the present bridge as a part of a new structure, it would be so much money saved. I would be very glad if we could have some such an arrangement as that, before the appropriation is made.

Mr. SHIELDS. That, in my humble opinion, cannot be done. As far as we have been able to make any inquiries in relation to this matter, from many competent engineers, we have ascertained that if there is a new structure, it must be placed in a new position. It must be placed in a different locality—nearer Georgetown; perhaps at Georgetown; perhaps near the aqueduct at Georgetown. But there has been no plan, no investigation, and no survey yet made. Indeed, it will be a work of time to make a proper plan. The only question here is whether we shall patch up this bridge, and make it answer the ends designed for the present? I will state again, that these gentlemen have informed the committee, that if the locality was now selected, and the plan also in our hands, and the appropriation made for a new bridge, it would be advantageous to repair the old bridge, to aid in the construction of a new one—that it would save money even to repair it for that purpose, and that purpose alone.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am rather opposed to inserting this provision in this bill, because I think we ought to have more information upon several subjects to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate very briefly. I know that for the last fifteen or twenty years the city of Georgetown has been complaining bitterly of the destruction of the harbor of that place, in consequence of the erection of this bridge, and that its citizens have preferred very heavy claims against Congress, and asked for remuneration for the injury done to their commerce by putting up this bridge, which has destroyed their harbor. Now, if you intend to renew this bridge by rebuilding it, or building another, you do the people of that city the injury of which they already complain. I think that before you repair the old bridge, or build another, something ought to be done in reference to the feelings of that people. The interests of that people ought to be consulted before you put an obstruction in the river which will destroy their harbor. I therefore wish that the committee who have charge of this subject would inquire into the present condition of our relations with respect to Georgetown, the injury of which its citizens complained, and what further injury they may receive by the repair of the old bridge, or the building of a new one.

There is another thing that I wish to suggest to the committee, and to the Senate. It seems, from what has been said by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that the appropriation of these $12,000 is only contemplated for temporary repairs of the present bridge, to be used until some new structure can be built at some place, which is to supersede the old bridge altogether. Now, I would like very much to know what will be the probable cost of this new structure? If it is to be built according to the plan suggested some years ago, during General Jackson's administration, I think it will amount to some two, or three, or four millions of dollars. That was to be a bridge constituted of arches of stone, with suitable passes for water and vessels below the arches. I do not recollect precisely the amount of the estimate for that bridge, but it was several millions of dollars. If the appropriation is to be made, to keep up the communication between the District and the Virginia shore, allow me to say, that the interest upon half the money invested, would enable steamboats to be built which would carry passengers, and carriages, and produce of every description, from shore to shore with greater facility, in half the time, and at much less expense. If cost is to regulate in matters of this sort, I wish that consideration to be taken into view by the committee in their deliberations upon the subject, before we expend any more money upon the present structure.

If the present structure is to be abandoned at all, either for the purpose of securing the harbor at Georgetown, or in favor of another project, it seems to me that it would be rather premature to begin now to repair the bridge. I would prefer carrying on the communication by steam, as at present, to entering into the expenditure of such an amount. I hope, therefore, that we will postpone the addition of $12,000 to this bill; let the matter be considered, let the committee give us information upon these points, and offer the proposition at some period which may come up during the progress of the session.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the committee confines itself to the particular question which it brings before the Senate. When the matter to which the honorable Senator from Kentucky refers is under consideration, it will then be time enough for the committee to come forward and give the information which he requires. But, in order to get that information, we must employ competent persons to make surveys, and to bring forward plans and estimates. This we have not done; we have not been authorized to do it; we have not been authorized to employ any engineers to accomplish it. At present, the only thing that the committee has thought of was to place the bridge in a passable condition, until we could agree upon some new plan, so that the intercommunication between the District and Virginia should not be permanently broken up. Now, it is doubtful whether we will ever agree upon that plan, or not; and, if the plan should be agreed upon, if we are as successful about the matter as about other things, it is very likely that it may be abandoned. All that the committee now want is, that something should be done to give us time to consider what that plan should be; what that structure should be; where it should be located; what its expense is to be; and, in the mean time, to have some kind of communication between the District and Virginia. The gentleman from North Carolina says that we might as well have steamboats to carry on this communication. Now, the communication across this bridge is the cheapest, as far as I understand, that can possibly exist between this District and Virginia, until you get up the plan for, and construct the new bridge, if it is ever gotten up.

I will say, in addition, that a committee from Georgetown have seen me this morning, and they are perfectly willing that the bridge should be placed in a passable condition temporarily, until some new and better plan is devised for communication between the District and Virginia. My opinion is, that a proper structure will be very expensive. As far as I have been able to inquire and ascertain, it will be so—that is, if it be such a one as ought to exist in this capital; such a one as would be worthy of the capital and the nation. It should be one that would be passable for railroad cars, as well as for carriages of every other description. Such a structure will be very expensive. In the mean time, $12,000 only is asked, in order to provide a communication until this plan is determined upon.

I would say, further, that these repairs will not increase the impediments in the river; on the contrary, they will leave the river just as it is, until this whole structure is torn away, and the river is dredged. That cannot be done until you have a new structure completed and made passable.

Mr. HALE. It seems to be admitted that this structure is a nuisance, and the only question is, whether we shall continue it for any length of time? I hope we shall not do so. A word as to the idea that we are without communication with Virginia. Now, I think steamboats run every fifteen minutes during the day, from here to the city of Alexandria. It is suggested that, even when we build a bridge, it will have to be built near Georgetown. Well, there is a good foot-bridge there now, across the aqueduct. There being these two modes of communication between the District and Virginia, it seems to me that there is no necessity for patching up this bridge until a new one is built. Every one who advocates the patching up of this, admits that it is to be only temporary. Now, the probability is, that if you make this temporary improvement, it will make the bridge pretty permanent, and it will be a nuisance.

I think that a great deal is due to the suggestions of the honorable Senator from Kentucky. I think that, while we are the sole Legislature for the District of Columbia, we ought to have some regard for the only city within the District, except the one in which we are now—we ought to have some regard for the city of Georgetown. It must be manifest to everybody, who will look at the river from the bridge up, that it has done great injury to the navigable capacity of the river, to Georgetown, and to its harbor. The consent which the citizens of Georgetown have given to this matter, upon a communication with the Senator from Illinois, is to patch up this bridge as a temporary thing, preparatory to building a permanent structure.

This permanent structure cannot be anything like so expensive as the honorable Senator from Kentucky supposes. I believe that the most splendid bridge in the world—and I refer to the Wheeling bridge, which the Supreme Court have decided to be a nuisance—and I hope Congress will act as a court of errors, and set aside that decision—cost only $200,000. I believe that the bridge over the Ohio river at Wheeling cost only $200,000. That is the amount stated in the memorial of the bridge company, which has been presented to us. If that be so—if such a bridge as that can be built for $200,000, we can have one from Georgetown across the Potomac—a wire suspension bridge, with a span of from three to six hundred feet, for a mere fraction of the sum which the honorable Senator from Kentucky says was suggested years ago. That being the case, I hope we will not continue this nuisance any longer.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then we ought to make an appropriation to take away the present bridge altogether. We ought either to repair the present bridge, and make it passable, or we should make an appropriation to clear the river at once.

Mr. HALE. I will go for that.

Mr. SHIELDS. That will take much more than the appropriation we now propose. I put it to honorable Senators, if they are disposed to tear away the old bridge until we determine on building a new one, and whether it is not the wisest part, not to act, as we sometimes do, precipitately in this matter; but to make this bridge passable, and then take time to consider and agree upon some plan for a new structure, if we are to make such a new structure.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I think it well for the Senate to consider what is going to be accomplished by this appropriation, before we decide to adopt it. In order to ascertain this, I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the report made by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, on the 22d of April last, so that the Senate may see what is the nature of this structure, what is left of it, and what is the ultimate and total effect expected to be produced by this appropriation of $12,000. The Commissioner says:

"This bridge has been in a decayed condition for some time past, and lately I have feared that accidents would occur, involving the loss of human life. It should be rebuilt throughout; but what course it may be the pleasure of Congress to pursue, it is for that body to decide."

Well, then, as the whole bridge requires repair throughout, what is to be done with these $12,000? The Commissioner proceeds:

"I have made an estimate of the cost of making such repairs as will restore the bridge to use, and find that $12,000 will accomplish that object in such a manner as to make it useful for a year or two, unless again broken by a freshet."

Then here is a structure ruinous and dangerous throughout. Happily, a portion of it has been carried away by an extraordinary freshet, so that the lives of the people are endangered by attempting to cross what cannot be crossed without danger. Now, we propose to apply $12,000, not to restore the structure so as to make it throughout safe, but to patch up this broken place, and put such other repairs upon the bridge as will just enable people to use it. I, for one, am totally opposed to it. I do not agree with my friend from Illinois, that we ought to allow this bridge to stand until we determine whether we are to have another. I think that it is far better to have none, than the present one—I think that it is far better to have the river open. Why should we inflict upon Georgetown the inconvenience and loss of having the navigation obstructed, and daily becoming more and more obstructed? Why should we have this structure—a large portion of it a solid causeway, a total obstruction to the flow of water, filling up the river with shoals that, at low water, are exposed to the sun, and must ultimately become a source of disease to the whole of that part of the city? Why should we do that? I can conceive no reason for it. I would far rather that the whole bridge were taken away, and a steam-ferry established, than retain such a structure as we now have. Being of that opinion, I am opposed to this amendment for patching up this bridge; for, let me assure the Senator that just so long as you will patch up that bridge and enable people to get across, just so long you will have no other or better structure. I am only sorry that the freshet which took away part of the bridge, did not carry the whole of it away, and leave the river open and free. I believe it would have been a matter of great importance had that been done, and Congress had lent its assistance, if necessary, to establish a convenient ferry or build a new bridge. I think we ought not to continue the present structure an hour longer. I should, as I said before, be far more willing to vote $25,000 to remove it, than $12,000 to patch it up. It is an unsightly, injurious, disgraceful nuisance, and I do not want to mend it at all.

Mr. SHIELDS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. As the yeas and nays are ordered, I desire simply to say, that I am in favor of making a good bridge; but as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] remarked, if we patch up this bridge we will not build another. I am not, therefore, in favor of the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. The only reason why I offer the amendment is, that, as chairman of the committee, numerous complaints have been addressed to me by parties who complain of the want of communication, and that they have, consequently, no market; that at Georgetown there is no bridge, and the bridge in front of this city is destroyed. I therefore conceived it to be my duty to bring in the amendment and urge its adoption, for the purpose of giving these people some means of communication.

The yeas and nays were then taken, with the following result—yeas 20, nays 23:

YEAS—Messrs. Berrien, Bradbury, Bright, Clarke, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Downs, Eliot, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Pearce, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Wade, and Waller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Cass, Chase, DeSaussure, Dodge of Iowa, Felch, Fish, Geyer, Hale, Mallory, Rusk, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, and Upham—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUNTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to offer the following amendment:

For defraying the expenses of the supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; also for juries and witnesses, in aid of the funds arising from fines, penalties, and forfeitures, incurred in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, and previous years; and likewise for defraying the expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, and of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States, and for the apprehension and safe-keeping of prisoners, in addition to former appropriations, $90,000.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance to give some explanation of that amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment is in pursuance of an estimate from the Treasury Department. I have a letter from Mr. Whittlesey, the Comptroller, which can be read. That explains what the Senator from New Hampshire desires to have explained.

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, May 13, 1852.

SIR: In pursuance of your reference to me of House bill No. 146, reported by Mr. McLanahan from the Committee on the Judiciary, January 29, 1852, to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed officers of the Federal courts, with a note indorsed thereon by Mr. Houston, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, requesting you to examine the bill and make estimates based upon it, stating, as nearly as may be, how much should be appropriated in case that bill should become a law, I have to report that I have examined the subject, and submit the result of my examination and opinion, as follows:

The amount drawn for expenses of courts during the year ending June 30, 1851, over and above repayments, was over $516,000; drawn from July 1, 1851, to this date, over $548,000—balance now to the credit of that fund about $9,000; and to the credit of fines, forfeitures, and penalties, about $13,000.

During the present fiscal year the expenses have been very much increased, probably $30,000 or $40,000, by prosecutions growing out of the fugitive slave law in Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania, and prosecutions in New York and Louisiana for violations of the neutrality law. Many of the bills for these extraordinary expenses have not yet come in. There will probably be needed from this time until the 30th of June, including those extraordinary expenses, about $110,000; and if so, there will be a deficit of about $90,000.

This large deficit will occur, notwithstanding the amounts have been closely examined in this office, and my action as an accounting officer has been complained of by some of the marshals, clerks, and district attorneys as extremely rigid.

The items for services during the present fiscal year, certified by the judges, including what will be certified, which have been and will be rejected as illegal, will probably amount to $50,000. Many of the officers insist that the certificates of the judges are final and conclusive; that the accounting officers have no legal power or right to look behind the certificates; and that all the action of the accounting officers, in rejecting numerous items in the accounts certified, and reducing the amounts of others, is illegal. If that view of the law should be finally sustained, all those rejected items must be provided for, which would probably swell the deficit during the present year to nearly $150,000. How large an appropriation would be required to settle such items, certified by the judges and disallowed by the accounting officers during previous years, it is not possible to estimate or even conjecture. The sums disallowed by my predecessors and myself in the accounts of one officer, (those of Mr. Durant, late district attorney for the eastern district of Louisiana,) amount to nearly $42,000.

The judicial expenses of the Government have been greatly increased by an extension of territory, and the creation of the new districts of California, Oregon, Minnesota, New Mexico, and Utah. I will estimate them for the year beginning July 1st, 1852, and ending June 30, 1853, over and above the amounts that may be received from fines and penalties, as follows:

In case the present laws remain in force, and the certificates of the judges are to be regarded as conclusive as to the legality and amount of each item certified, I estimate the amount at $680,000.

In case the amounts are acted upon and passed, as they have been during the past year, under the present laws, I estimate the amount needed at $630,000. What the expenses would be under the present laws, can be estimated from past experience, with a reasonable approximation to accuracy; what they would be under the bill submitted by the committee, it is much more difficult to estimate. The bill does not propose a general reduction of fees, and though it would reduce some of the items of fees in a few of the districts and equalize them, it would increase them in ten instances where it would reduce them in one. For instance, it proposes to raise jurors' fees from $1 25 to $2 per day, and witnesses' fees from $1 25 to $1 50 per day. It would raise the fees and increase the compensation of district attorneys in about three fourths of the districts. It takes the fees allowed to marshals by the fee bill of February 25th, 1799 as the basis, and in every instance where any change is made in the compensation for any item of service, the bill proposes to increase it. The bill proposes to equalize clerks' fees. It allows a very liberal compensation for issuing writs, filing papers, making dockets, and indexes, taxing costs, and all general services, and a moderate compensation for making entries, records, and copies. I think it would increase the fees for any given amount of services rendered in a majority of the districts, but its precise operation cannot be determined in advance. The object of the bill is to equalize fees, and to lessen expenses by regulating the practice in many particulars in order to prevent abuses, to provide for a joinder of actions, and prevent an unnecessary multiplication of suits—to avoid all useless forms, and prevent an unnecessary multiplication of papers, orders, and proceedings—lessen the amount of labor and services performed, and to pay the officers generally better for services which are really necessary. If the same man has been guilty of half a dozen distinct offenses of the same character, which might be joined in an indictment, by virtue of the bill proposed, under the present practice, a distinct suit is prosecuted for each offense, making the same costs in each suit. And if the same person is a proper witness for the Government in half a dozen suits pending at the same time, a subpoena is issued and served on him in each suit at each term of the court requiring his attendance. The bill provides that one subpoena shall be sufficient to command the attendance of a witness on the court, to testify in all the causes in which his testimony may be needed for the United States, and the needless labor and expense of issuing and serving several subpoenas will be saved.

The greatest abuses now existing which swell largely the aggregate expenses of Federal courts, are in less than one fourth part of the districts; in which the bill in question would, in my opinion, reduce the aggregate expenses below what the accounting officers would allow under the present laws perhaps $80,000; and in the other districts, the expenses would be increased on the one hand about as much as they would be diminished on the other.

If these estimates are correct, in case the bill should become a law, there will be needed for the fiscal year commencing July 1st, 1852, and ending June 30th, 1853, an appropriation of.....$550,000
And for deficiencies for the present year ending..... 90,000
June 30th, 1852..... 90,000

$640,000

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ELISHA WHITTLESEY.

Hon. THOMAS CORWIN, Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. When I asked the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] for information, I wanted to find out, if I could, (but it seems that the letter of the Comptroller does not give the information I required, and I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. HUNTER] is not able to give it,) what proportion of these $90,000 was wanted for the darling object of the compromise—for the purpose of carrying out the fugitive slave law. I understand that this deficiency arises from the fact that the appropriations of last year were not sufficient by so much to enforce the fugitive slave law in Massachusetts, and the neutrality law in Louisiana and New York. How much of this charge has been caused by the turbulence in Louisiana, or the fanaticism in Massachusetts does not appear; but being two extremes they are lumped together, and the total amount of what is required to enforce the neutrality law in Louisiana and New York, and the fugitive slave law in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, is put down without attempting to distinguish the items. I shall vote against them both; and before any Senator votes I wish that he could read the very satisfactory report on the judicial expenses which has been made by the Committee on the Judiciary in the House of Representatives during the present session; embodying, as it does, this very report of the Comptroller of the Treasury, who is, I believe, one of the most faithful and vigilant officers we have ever had in any Department of this Government. Senators will there see the mode in which the judicial expenses have increased beyond all precedent.

I understand, as well as it is possible for me to understand anything amid this noise and confusion—and I do not make that remark in any offensive sense—that the Comptroller suggests that if these bills could be properly audited, and if a liberal allowance of illegal items were stricken out, $50,000 might be saved, and the amount chargeable on the administration of the neutrality and fugitive slave law might be reduced to $90,000. Am I not right?

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator is in error in supposing that the Comptroller says these are the only two causes of the deficiency. It arises from all the causes to which he has referred in his letter. He says, however, that the actual amount of the deficit caused by the administration of these laws, would amount to $150,000, as shown by the certificates of the judges, but that by a rigid supervision of the bills, and by the rejection of illegal items, it might be cut down to $90,000.

Mr. HALE. I have but little information on this subject; but I will tell the Senate in what way this deficit has accrued in part from the administration of the fugitive slave law. When the marshal has had to enforce it at Boston, he has been compelled to employ an extra number of officers—a very considerable number—to carry it into execution; then these officers must have compensation; but not satisfied with that, they have been employed in the double capacity of officers and witnesses. These returns show that a considerable portion of this deficiency has accrued in this way—by going out into the highways and byways and picking up such fellows as are willing to become officers to enforce such a law; and then, over and above the per diem paid to them as officers, they are employed and paid as witnesses. The returns in the Comptroller's office will show that to be the fact. In addition to that, a report I have just received shows something else; it shows how these expenses have grown up. I find in this report that—take, for instance, the district of Massachusetts—the expenses, exclusive of the salaries of judges, marshals, and district attorneys, fees and moneys advanced to the marshals, amounted in 1831, about twenty years ago, to $11,000; in 1832, to $9,000; take it in 1840, and they have got up to $18,000; in 1845, they are $30,000; and in 1851, they are $92,000 a year. That shows the manner in which these expenses have increased; and the Comptroller tells you that they have increased beyond all proper proportion, whether compared with the population or the business of the country.

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot inform the Senator with precise accuracy as to the amount of deficiency arising out of the prosecution of the fugitive slave law, and the enforcement of the neutrality law. The Comptroller says that during the present fiscal year the expenses have been very much increased; and probably they have increased to the amount of thirty or forty thousand dollars by prosecutions arising out of the fugitive slave law in Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania, and prosecutions growing out of the neutrality law in New York and Louisiana.

Mr. HALE. That does not account for the whole deficiency. But I made up my mind when the vote was taken on the amendment relating to the Nautical Almanac, not to attempt again to correct any abuse upon the Treasury of the United States, and perhaps it would have been a wiser course to have adhered to that determination. But if Senators had read the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in the House of Representatives at this session, and the very able and searching letter of Mr. Whittlesey as to the manner in which this money has been spent, and the expenses have increased until they have run up in one department to $92,000, they would be slow to vote any further sum to that fund until they had made a searching investigation, and attempted to correct some of the abuses which your officers have pointed out.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I am authorized by the Committee on Finance to offer the following amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the clerks employed in the Census Office upon extra duty, at the rate of one hundred dollars for full services, according to the office roll, the sum of $10,500.

I would state that the Secretary of the Interior recommends this appropriation, and has also transmitted a letter to the committee from the Superintendent of the Census. These clerks have been employed on extra writing, at night, for which they have received no compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have been instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment:

For expenses of treating with the Mississippi and St. Peter's Sioux, and for the extinguishment of their title to lands in the Minnesota Territory, being an addition to the appropriation, for the same object, made 30th of September, 1850, $4,723 38.

That is one of a class of amendments which I ought to have offered the other day, and is intended to supply a deficiency of the Indian service for the present year. It is the amount of outstanding liabilities for furnishing provisions to these Indians, and for the extinguishment of their title to lands in the Minnesota Territory, and, as the amendment states, is an addition to the appropriation for the same object made in September, 1850. That appropriation has been exhausted; and in consequence of the Indians being on the council grounds longer than was anticipated, this amount of expense has been necessarily incurred in holding these treaties. The treaty was held under the immediate supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the estimate comes from the Indian Department. I have been instructed to offer it, by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I am also instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of line two hundred and fifty-six, page eleven of the bill:

Provided, That after the thirtieth day of June, 1852, all payments of interest on said award shall cease; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay the said claimants the amount of principal awarded in each case respectively, and that the amount necessary for this purpose be, and the same is hereby, appropriated: Provided further, That the annual payment and satisfaction of said awards, shall be first ratified and approved as a final release of all claims of such parties, under the fourteenth article of said treaty, by the proper national authority of the Choctaws in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

I should like to have the section of the deficiency bill, to which the proviso is offered, read, in order that its object and effect may be understood.

It was read, as follows:

For interests on the amounts awarded Choctaw claimants, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, of 9th of September, 1830, for lands on which they resided, but which it is impossible to give them, and in lieu of the scrip that has been awarded under the act of 23d of August, 1842, not deliverable, east, by the third section of said law, per act of third March, 1845, for the half year ending the 30th of June, 1852, $21,800.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will offer a word of explanation, presenting a short history of this claim, which will, perhaps, constitute the best argument in favor of the adoption of this provision. By the treaty of September, 1830, the Choctaw Indians ceded all their territory east of the Mississippi river. By the fourteenth article of that treaty, provision was made that the heads of families, who might desire to remain east of the Mississippi, and become citizens of the States of Alabama and Mississippi, should be permitted to remain.

At a certain time these reservations were to be made out and established; but in consequence of circumstances, to which it is now unnecessary to refer, the time elapsed, and owing to the neglect of the officers of the Government, and the obstructions which were thrown in the way by the white population, these heads of families were prevented from availing themselves of the benefits to which they were entitled under this treaty. The rights which they held arose out of the treaty, and this state of things continued until by the act of 1842 Congress authorized in the place of the reservations under that treaty that scrip to the amount of these reservations should be issued to them. It was further provided by the law of 1842 that one half of the scrip should be deliverable east of the Mississippi river, and that the other half should be withheld till the Choctaws finally emigrated west. This was evidently intended as a means of compelling their emigration, and was, of course, a departure from the original treaty. They accepted this offer of composition for their claims, which Congress made to them; and after they had emigrated they called for the other half of the scrip. Congress again interfered upon the petition of the Choctaw council, of the nation west of the Mississippi, who asked that the amount might be funded at the rate of five per cent. interest, instead of being deliverable in mass to them. Now, the experience of the administration of this particular annuity, payable to a particular part of the Choctaw nation, making a large class of private claimants, has been found to be attended with such mischiefs, and to be so ruinous to the interests of these persons, that the Choctaw council has reversed its former determination; and whereas they have once petitioned that this amount should be funded, they now ask that the amount should be unfunded again, and that the amount which was awarded by the act of 1842 should be paid over in mass to the respective claimants. Of the policy of this final distribution, the redemption of the annuity by the payment of the principal instead of the interest, I suppose there is no Senator who will entertain a doubt. These annuities are already accumulating upon us with fearful rapidity. In the administration of annuities of this class in this way we escape entirely those considerations which apply in favor of a general annuity system to a nation at large.

The amount payable to each of these claimants becomes a vested right; and on the death of the head of a family, it is subdivided, ad infinitum, until the amounts which are payable to the different heirs have dwindled down to sums almost too insignificant to pay the expense of traveling to the agency for the purpose of receiving them. The only question which has been suggested by any Senator has been as to the competency of Congress to provide in this mode for the satisfaction of these annuities. It will be seen that this indemnity for the infractions of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, is entirely the creature of the legislation of Congress. It does not arise under the treaty itself. It is a mode of redress, giving satisfaction for the violation of the treaty; and these annuities were not created by the treaty. If they were perpetual annuities, created by the terms of the treaty, then it is admitted that we must have the sanction of a treaty to enable us to make a good and valid payment of them. The fourteenth article of the treaty provided that reservations in land should be extended to the Indians. That they did not get; and the act of 1842 provided that scrip should be tendered to them; and the Indians accepted the proposition voluntarily tendered to them by Congress. When it came to the delivery of the half which was payable west of the Mississippi, Congress again interfered, and by a mere act of legislation funded the amount of the land scrip at the rate of $1 25 an acre, and made it a perpetual annuity of five per cent., requiring the interest to be paid to them perpetually. They now ask that the amount shall be paid in full, the principal discharged, and the annuities stopped; so that the last two acts of Congress which have been passed upon this subject prescribed terms which have been accepted by the Indians. They are repealable in their character, and it is just as competent for Congress to repeal the act of 1845, which made it a perpetual annuity, as it was to change the terms of 1842, which provided satisfaction in place of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830. The whole of this annuity is nothing but a form of satisfaction which the Indians have accepted, and it is entirely the creature of legislative sanction. It is as competent for the Thirty-second Congress to repeal the act funding this scrip, as it was for the Congress of 1842 originally to enact it.

The amendment which I have offered guaranties every kind of security that no further reclamation shall be made upon us for the application of this fund, or rather for the erroneous payment of it to improper parties. It requires the receipts and release of the individual claimants themselves, in addition to which, as a matter of precaution, it requires affirmation by an act of national authority on the part of the Choctaws. With this double security, I think, it is entirely safe for the Senate to act in this matter; and, as to the policy of adopting this proposition, I suppose that no one here for a moment entertains a doubt.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have one more amendment to offer from the Committee on Indian Affairs; but, as I am advised that it will create discussion, I will merely lay it on the table, so that it may be printed and laid on the desks of Senators by to-morrow morning. It is to insert the following:

For the unliquidated balance found due the Creek Indians, for losses sustained during the last war with Great Britain, by that portion of the tribe that was friendly and cooperated with the United States, in accordance with the promise of the Government, and pursuant to a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, made to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, May, 1850, §110, §117 &c.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask that the amendment may be printed, so that Senators may have it before them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM in the Chair.) It will be printed, unless objection is made to it.

No objection was made.

Mr. HALE. I move further to amend the bill by inserting, after the amendment which was offered by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and agreed to by the Senate, for supplying the deficiency in the judiciary fund, the following:

Provided, That no officer in the United States who is in attendance upon any court of the United States shall receive any pay or compensation for his attendance as a witness on behalf of the Government at the same time that he receives compensation as such officer.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not sure that I understand that amendment. Does the Senator from New Hampshire mean that an officer residing in one State shall not receive compensation as a witness, although he is summoned to give testimony in another?

Mr. HALE. No, sir; I mean—and I meant to write the amendment to mean—that an officer shall not go out and summon in a batch of officers and pay them a legal per diem during the whole term of the court, and then let them qualify themselves as witnesses, and receive pay also as witnesses during the whole term—that they shall not be receiving double compensation from the Government, as officers and witnesses at the same time, at the same court. That is all I mean, and I believe that is what the amendment means as it is written.

Mr. DAWSON. I understand the Senator to say officers appointed; appointed by whom?

Mr. HALE. By the marshals.

Mr. DAWSON. What officers are appointed by the marshals?

Mr. ADAMS. Criers are appointed by the marshals.

Mr. BADGER. It is very obvious that, to avoid the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Virginia, it is necessary that the amendment should be amended so as to make it read that no officer of the United States, while he is in attendance upon any court in the discharge of his said office, shall receive compensation as a witness. I therefore move to insert the words "in the discharge of the duties of his said office," after the words "any court of the United States," so as to make the amendment read:

Provided, That no officer of the United States, who is in attendance upon any court of the United States in the discharge of the duties of his said office, shall receive any compensation for his attendance as a witness on behalf of the Government, at the same time that he receives compensation as such officer.

Mr. HALE. I accept that.

Mr. DAWSON. I should like to know if any officer of the Government has ever charged pay as a witness?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Georgia asks if such things have ever occurred? I will tell him. I have a letter—though I have not got it by me—from the Comptroller of the Treasury, in which he says such things have occurred, and occurred very lately, and to a pretty considerable extent.

Mr. DAWSON. Were they paid?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir; they were paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have an amendment to offer, upon the subject of paying the laborers upon the two wings of the Capitol, which is founded upon an estimate furnished by the Architect, to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HUNTER. Does an estimate from the Architect come within the rule? As I understand it, the rule refers only to estimates from the head of a Department.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The honorable Senator from New Hampshire can state whence the estimate came.

Mr. HALE. I have to state, the Senator from Pennsylvania having appealed to me before—as I thought the vote of the Senate was so decisive, that they had no money to pay workmen—that I tore the papers up, and gave up the thing in despair. I cannot say whether it was an estimate or not. It was something which the Architect drew up and put into my hands—a resolution, and then a statement of names, and figures to sustain it. The precise character of that, I do not know; but I thought the thing was dead.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask that the amendment may be read; I suppose it can be introduced by unanimous consent. It only provides for the poor men who were waiting here all winter for work. It is an act of justice and charity.

The amendment was read. It is to insert an additional section, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Architect appointed by the President of the United States to superintend the work on the construction of the additions to the Capitol be, and he is hereby authorized to examine the claims of the workmen to indemnity for the loss of their time during the suspension of the work upon said additions, for the want of an appropriation; and that the said Architect allow to such of said workmen, respectively, as were suspended from labor, during the pendency of the joint resolution making such appropriation, with the encouragement that upon such appropriation being made their labor would again be required by the Government, and who immediately had no opportunity of obtaining employment in the city of Washington, such reasonable indemnity for loss of wages for labor during the suspension of the work, as, under the circumstances of their respective cases, justice and equity may require, not exceeding, however, in any case, the average rate of the earnings of said workmen in the employment of the Government for a like preceding period of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM temporarily occupying the chair.) In reply to the Senator from Virginia, the Chair would remark, that the amendment proposes no appropriation in the bill under consideration; therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, it is not excluded by the rule.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is entirely in order. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BADGER. The only effect of adopting the amendment, without making an appropriation now, will be that the appropriation itself will be put in some small deficiency bill hereafter, and of course, will be got through without any difficulty or delay.

Mr. HALE. This is pursuing the same course that was adopted in the example set to us by the Senator from North Carolina the other day, in voting $3,000 a year to an almanac maker. That had the vote of the honorable Senator from North Carolina; so that we are but following his example when we support this amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am entirely opposed to this movement. We have individual claimants all over this wide country of ours, who are knocking at our doors year after year, but nobody pays much attention to them; but when you get a parcel of workmen here who are close by you—who can visit you every day, and talk to you and operate upon you, they become especial favorites, and, without going through the ordinary course of petitioning, as other persons have to do when they have claims against the Government, it is proposed to provide for them in an appropriation bill. This is justice to all the citizens of the country!

Mr. BORLAND. Will my friend from Kentucky permit me to say that these men have memorialized Congress. I presented a memorial some time ago from them, stating very strongly and clearly the justice of the claim which is now made by them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. President, instead of allowing the committee to act upon the memorial, and to report a bill, if they think it necessary, we are forestalling it by making an appropriation before the committees have acted. These, I believe, are the very same gentlemen whom my friend from Arkansas told us, some time ago, in one of his speeches, were such a lazy set of fellows that they did not half do the work on which they were engaged.

While I am up I wish to put this matter right. I want to state the facts as they are. When this subject was up before, I wrote a note to the superintendent of the work, asking him if he would be kind enough to tell me how these persons were engaged; how they were brought here; and how they were employed. We were told, when this matter was under discussion before, that these persons were brought here by an advertisement, which promised them certain employment, and held out certain inducements to them. I wanted to see the advertisement, and therefore I wrote to the superintendent. He sent me the following letter in reply:

"In compliance with your request, I inclose a paper containing the advertisement you speak of. No other advertisement—no invitation of any kind whatever has been issued; and the terms of this have been fully complied with on the part of the Government, as all the men who came here in pursuance of it were employed until the last of December. Respectfully,

THOMAS U. WALTER."

Here is the advertisement:

WANTED—At the extension of the United States Capitol, fifty good stone masons, to whom work will be given to the last of December. Wages $2 25 per day. Application to be made to Samuel Strong, Superintendent. WASHINGTON, September 11, 1851.

Now, here is an advertisement, stating to all the world, that work was to be given to a certain number of individuals—stone masons; that they would be paid $2 25 per day—more than double the price for which we get men of that character in my quarter of the country; but I do not object to that. The advertisement sets forth, also, that they were to be employed until the last of December. The agent charged with the execution of all this, tells us that every person who made application in pursuance of this advertisement, was employed up to the time specified in the advertisement, and paid according to contract. These are all the facts, and yet we hardly have a session upon an appropriation bill, but some gentleman gets up and makes a motion to provide for these laborers.

Mr. DAWSON. It is just on the eve of a presidential election.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is said that it is just preceding a presidential election, and that that is the reason it is urged.

Mr. HALE. Order! Order!

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I do not conceive that that has anything to do with it. I felt it my duty to state these facts to the Senate. Here they are. Here is the advertisement, and here is the agent's statement. I say that every person who engages to work for Government, stands on the same footing, and if you make an exception in favor of laborers in Washington city, you ought to extend it all over the country. I am against the whole of it from beginning to end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. MANGUM in the chair.) The Chair would remark that the amendment is most ingeniously drawn, and seems to have been drawn with a view to evade the rule. But another portion of the rule will comprehend it, to wit:

"And no amendment shall be received, whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

This must be regarded in the light of a private claim. Here no appropriation is made, and yet the amendment will create the necessity of an appropriation by the Government.

Mr. HALE. Will the Chair allow me to suggest that this is exactly similar to the case of Lieutenant Davis. The amendment there was admitted and adopted. It was a private claim to the amount of $1,500 a year. The amendment made no appropriation; but when we adopted it, it created, in the words of the Chair, a necessity for an appropriation. If the decision of the Chair be correct, that this is a private claim, that was a private claim also; but the President of the Senate was then in his place, and received it. There can be no difference between the two, except that one refers to stone-masons, and the other to an almanac maker. It seems to me the rule ought to be applied to both. I should be glad individually and sentimentally that the opinion of the Chair should be sustained, because it would cut the almanac maker off; but still, I think the rule ought to be applied to both.

Mr. BADGER. There is no sort of similarity between the cases at all; and none can be made out, except by casting some reflection conveyed by an expression used in a contemptuous manner toward a highly meritorious officer, whom the Senator from New Hampshire has thought proper to characterize as an "almanac maker." The two cases have no resemblance at all. The amendment to which the Senator alludes was a proviso which I offered, and which was adopted by the Senate upon an amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire. That proviso was to continue, under this law, to an officer of the Government a compensation which he had heretofore received. That was all it was.

A proposition to increase the salary of an officer of the Government, or to diminish the salary of an officer of the Government, is not a proposition at all like a private claim. It relates to the payment of the salary or compensation of a public officer. This is an amendment, the object of which is to provide for a certain claim. Undoubtedly it is a private claim. These persons are not officers of the Government. This is a claim on the equity of the Government, for which, as I have more than once stated, I am ready at any proper time to vote. But I do not choose to embarrass this deficiency bill with it; and I submit therefore that the decision of the Chair is correct, that this proposition cannot be offered as an amendment to this bill.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, May 24, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.
The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

SALT SPRINGS IN IOWA.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is a motion to suspend the rules, holding over from last Monday, for the purpose of introducing the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 55.

Mr. CLARK. In connection with this resolution, I wish to make a short statement of the purpose I have in view in offering it. After I have done that, I apprehend there will be no objection whatever to its introduction. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was then read by the Clerk, as follows: A bill to relinquish to the State of Iowa lands reserved for Salt Springs therein.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the twelve salt springs, and six sections of land adjoining, or contiguous thereto, the use of which was granted to the State of Iowa, by the act entitled "An act supplemental to the act for the admission of the States of Iowa and Florida into the Union," approved March 3d, 1845, shall be, and the same are hereby granted in fee simple to the State of Iowa, to be disposed of, and the proceeds to be applied as the Legislature of that State shall direct.

Mr. CLARK. I now call for the reading of the fourth section of the act of Congress upon this subject.

It was read, as follows:

"Fourth. That all salt springs within the State, not exceeding twelve in number, with six sections of land adjoining, or as contiguous as may be to each, shall be granted to the said State for its use; the same to be selected by the Legislature thereof, within one year after the admission of said State, and the same, when so selected, to be used on such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Legislature of the State shall direct: Provided, That no salt spring, the right whereof is now vested in any individual or individuals, or which may hereafter be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall, by this section, be granted to said State: And provided, also, That the General Assembly shall never lease or sell the same, at any one time, for a longer period than ten years, without the consent of Congress."

Mr. CLARK. I desire further, that the fifth section of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, upon this subject, shall be read.

It was read as follows:

"Sec. 5. The proceeds of the sales of said lands constitute a fund for founding and supporting a lunatic asylum and the other object herein specified. The amount realized therefrom must be invested, and the interest only can be used: Provided, That the commissioners of the lunatic asylum may, if they deem the interests of the institution and the wants of the State demand it, in the first instance use $5,000 of the principal of the fund to assist in the building and furnishing of said asylum: And provided, also, That $5,000 of the principal is hereby placed at the disposal of the superintendent of public instruction, for the use of the college of physicians and surgeons at Keokuck, to be paid over as he may from time to time deem advisable."

Mr. CLARK. The reading of this section of the act of Congress—

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa, how long his explanation is likely to last? If he designs to make a regular speech, I must object to it.

Mr. CLARK. I shall not occupy more than three or four minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa must be aware that discussion is not in order until the resolution is regularly before the House.

Mr. CLARK. I supposed that there would be no objection to giving me the opportunity to make a simple explanation of the object of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can proceed if no one objects.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I do object to any departure from the rule.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. Put your resolution upon its passage. No body objects to it.

Mr. CLARK. I ask, then, that the resolution be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules, for the purpose of introducing the resolution.

The question was then put, and the motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the resolution was introduced.

Mr. CLARK. I have no purpose to detain the House beyond a very few minutes. I consider that my object is already sufficiently explained to the House by the reading of the section of the act of Congress relating to this subject, and the section of the act passed by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa. It will be perceived by the act supplemental to the act for the admission of the States of Iowa and Florida into the Union, that Congress gave the State of Iowa twelve salt springs, with six sections of land adjoining. The language of the act is, that six sections shall be granted to the State of Iowa for its use. Now, the object of Congress was, without doubt, to make a donation of these springs with the land. But there is a proviso in the section which prohibits the State from selling the lands. By the language of that proviso, they can only lease them for a term not exceeding ten years. But it is found extremely inconvenient and unprofitable to use these lands in that way. They do not subserve the purpose for which the donation was intended.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to ask him one question? I wish to know if there is any object sought in this bill except that of giving the State of Iowa the power of disposing of these salt springs and the land accompanying them?

Mr. CLARK. None whatever, except for the appropriation of the fund.

Mr. CLEVELAND. That is a matter for the State of Iowa to determine. If that is the only object of the bill, I do not see why the House is not ready to vote upon it without further explanation.

Mr. CLARK. All we want is that Congress shall give to the State of Iowa complete power to dispose of these lands.

The question was then put, and the resolution was adopted; and the bill was brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. CLARK. I now move to put the bill upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there an amendment pending?

Mr. CLARK. There is.

The amendment was read as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the rights of third parties: And provided, further, That if any of the lands which have been selected by the authorities of the State of Iowa, under the act aforesaid, shall have been legally claimed by pre-emption or otherwise, the State shall be authorized to select other lands in lieu thereof.

Passed the Senate, February 9, 1852.

Attest: ASBURY DICKINS, Secretary.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is the question upon ordering the bill to a third reading?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. JONES. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question being first upon the adoption of the amendment, it was taken, and carried in the affirmative.

So the amendment was adopted.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is necessary that we should do something to facilitate the transaction of the business of this House—

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I call the gentleman from Tennessee to order. I object to his speaking when there is no question before the House.

Mr. JONES. I have a proposition to offer. It is that the rules be suspended, and that a resolution be adopted, providing that it shall be the standing order of the House, this day and each succeeding day, until all the committees shall have been called, to call committees for reports; and that no other business shall intervene until that call shall have been gone through with. Give the committees an opportunity to relieve themselves of the reports and bills which have been accumulating for the last two or three months.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order for me to ask a question of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The question will be put on the motion to suspend the rules.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HART. I object. The House is dividing upon the question, and remarks are not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the Chair if it is in order for me to ask a question? If the Chair says it is not, that ends it, and gentlemen may take their own course. I shall be controlled by the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama addressed the Chair, I believe before the Chair announced the call for a division. He was called to order, however. The gentleman from Alabama will state his question. If it is a question of order such as is proper to be offered, the Chair will consider it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not propose a question of order, but one relating to the business proposed to be transacted.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to make an inquiry relating to the matter now before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is it a question of order or a question relating to the business now before the House?

Mr. FOWLER. I think it is. I wish to inquire if the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is to spend one hour each day upon the subject?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to suspend the rules for the purpose stated—to introduce a resolution making it the order of the day for to-day, and each succeeding day until all the committees shall have been called for reports.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. There is no resolution before the House. The only proposition is to suspend the rules for the introduction of a resolution.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I ask that that resolution may be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] will reduce his resolution to writing.

Mr. JONES. It is not necessary. The Clerk will take it down. I move that the rules be suspended in order to enable me to introduce a resolution that it shall be the standing order of this House for this day, and from day to day, to call committees for reports for one hour, to the exclusion of all other business, until all the committees shall have been called.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to that, for that is the rule of the House now. That is exactly what I want. One hour each day of course. I thought the gentleman's proposition was intended to cover the whole day instead of one hour of each day.

The question was then taken on the suspension of the rules, and there were, on a division—ayes 132, noes not counted.

So the rules were suspended, and the resolution was admitted.

Mr. JONES. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. What is the precise form of the gentleman's resolution?

Mr. JONES. It is that it shall be the order of this House for this day, and each succeeding day, to call for reports from the committees for at least one hour, until all the committees shall have been called.

Mr. MASON. I move to amend the resolution by inserting "two hours," in the place of "one hour."

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my call for the previous question, if the gentleman wishes to submit that amendment, so that the House may have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have not yet heard the resolution read.

The Clerk then read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be the order of the House for this day, and each succeeding day, to call the committees for reports for one hour, daily, to the exclusion of all other business, until the committees are called through.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would inquire if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] proposes this as a standing rule of the House?

Mr. JONES. Only until the committees shall have been called through?

Mr. STEPHENS. I submit, then, a question of order. The rules of this House prescribe the manner in which business shall be discharged. To change this standing rule of the House requires one day's notice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia, upon the ground that the proposition is not to make a permanent change of the rules, but to suspend the existing rules.

Mr. STEPHENS. I submit, if the rules can be suspended for the purpose of changing the general order of business without changing the rules? If this is to suspend the rules for a week or a month, it is a permanent change of the rules. The suspension of the rules can only apply to particular measures, and not the general order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say that the House very often makes a particular bill the special order, from day to day, until disposed of. This proposition is very like that, for it is to make reports from committees the special order until they are called through.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is an express rule of the House which makes it competent for the House to make any particular bill the special order.

The SPEAKER. It is competent, in the opinion of the Chair, for the House to suspend all the rules, and to make the special order proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

The question was then taken on the amendment submitted by Mr. MASON, and, on a division, there were—ayes 64, noes 76.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was then put upon the original resolution of Mr. JONES, and it was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. Will a motion be now in order?

Mr. JONES. The resolution just adopted takes effect from its adoption.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that it does not take effect until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It is for this and each succeeding day.

Mr. BROWN. I thought it was from this day.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question, and will detain the House but a few moments. Some days since, when we were referring bills from the Speaker's table, a bill proposing to grant the right of way and a donation of public lands to aid in the construction of the Selma and Gunter's Landing railroad, was, at my suggestion, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I moved the next morning to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole. I did it because some of my colleagues, at the time I made the motion, thought that it was improper. They believed that the bill should have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. And inasmuch as I desired time to consult my colleagues, as I did not wish to do anything in violation of their feelings, I moved the next morning to reconsider the vote. I have had a consultation with them, and am satisfied, and think they are perfectly satisfied, that it should go back upon the Calendar, and go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. We certainly are not very sanguine in our expectations that this bill will be reached this session.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion? We are acting now under the order of the House.

Mr. COBB. It is to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. My object is to have it go back where it originally was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can call it up after we have executed the order of the House. Reports are now in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

INDIGENT INSANE.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred "A bill making grants of public lands to the several States of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons," reported the same back with various amendments, and with a recommendation that it do pass. The Clerk read the bill and amendments.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, with regard to the bill which has just been read, and which was printed at the last Congress, I propose only to submit a few remarks. I do not wish to consume the hour devoted to the reception of reports from committees in discussion. I will state merely the provisions of the bill. The first section of the bill provides for the granting of ten millions of acres of the public land to all the States of the Union to be apportioned on the compound ratio of geographical area and representation, according to the late census, to be applied to the support of the indigent insane.

Mr. STANLY. It is very difficult to hear the gentleman's remarks, so great is the confusion outside of the bar.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will preserve order outside of the bar.

Mr. HALL. The Committee on Public Lands have reported an amendment to that first section, providing that there shall be granted to each State public land at the rate of 50,000 acres for each Representative in the House of Representatives, according to the census of 1850. This will increase the grant about 1,500,000 over the donation proposed in the original section. My own impression is, from all the information I can derive upon the subject, that 10,000,000 acres are sufficient for the purpose of the bill; and I, therefore, prefer in that respect the original bill to the amendment. The second section of the bill provides that the States within which public lands of a suitable quality are situated, shall select the lands granted by this bill within their own limits, and that the States which have no lands shall be required to select within the Territories from the land now subject to private entry. It further provides that the land thus selected shall be subject to the right of pre-emption, and shall not be sold for more than $1 25 per acre. The Committee on Public Lands propose to amend that section in two respects. In the first place, that in the event of lands situated within any State not being worth $1 25 per acre, in the opinion of the Governor of that State, it may select its lands within the Territories of the United States. In the second place, the committee move to amend that second section by providing that if the lands selected by any of the States are not sold within twenty years after the passage of this law, the grant shall cease and the lands revert to the United States. It appears to me that both of these proposed amendments are right and proper.

The committee propose to strike out the whole of the third section, which provides, on the completion of the apportionment of these lands, patents shall be issued to the several States for the portions allotted to them respectively, and that thereupon the States shall assume the management and sale of the lands thus apportioned. It is entirely unnecessary. The act itself vests the title in the States to their respective portions. It will be only the imposing of an additional amount of labor on the clerks of the land office, and the increasing of the expenses of the land department. The remaining sections of the bill provide, that these lands, when selected, shall be applied faithfully to the support of the indigent insane; that the proceeds of the sales shall be invested in State or United States stocks by the States, and that the dividend arising shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of the indigent insane. The Committee on Public Lands propose to amend the fifth section by inserting the words "or some other safe stocks yielding not less than five per centum per annum upon the par value of said stocks." It was thought by the members of the committee that, perhaps, it would be inconvenient to some of the States to invest the proceeds of the sale of these lands in the United States or State stocks, and, therefore, gave permission to them to invest the money in other safe stocks at not less than five per centum. This is a matter of no great importance, but may be of great convenience to the States, and for that reason the means of investment were extended. It is proposed also to amend the bill so as to permit the States, besides its insane, to provide for the deaf and dumb, or blind. I understand that the lady who has been chiefly instrumental in effecting this grant thinks that amendment improper. I am therefore willing that it shall be rejected. I will not consume the time of the House in the discussion of this bill. I trust, however, that it will not go to the Speaker's table.

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to a question of order. We are now acting under an order of the House passed this morning, which is to receive reports from committees. My point of order is, that we are not allowed to discuss the merits of the bill reported, and that as the gentleman from Missouri is going on to discuss the merits of this bill, and to give the reasons for its passage, he is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the right to report, carries with it the right to dispose of the matter reported. What would the gentleman propose to do with the matter reported? The matter reported must be disposed of, under the existing rules, as in ordinary cases. About this, the Chair has no doubt, and he, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. CLARK. With the permission of the gentleman from Missouri, I will ask him a question. Do I understand the gentleman to say, that the apportionment is to be according to representation in the House of Representatives?

Mr. HALL. I will reply that the original bill proposes to apportion these lands among the States in the compound ratio of geographical area, and the representation in this House according to the last census. It provides further that no State shall be rated at more than 50,000 square miles.

Mr. CLARK. Will that do justice to the new States?

Mr. HALL. I think it would; but the Committee on Public Lands propose an amendment to the effect, that these lands shall be apportioned among the different States, at the rate of 50,000 acres for each Representative. That is more favorable to the old, and not so favorable to the new States.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me there is no more justice in it, than to confine Wisconsin to three Representatives in all time to come, and Iowa to two.

Mr. HALL. I think that the original bill does justice to the new States, that the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands does not; and hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. This appears to be a very important bill, and one not very easily understood. I, for one, desire to have that bill printed that I may see and read it myself; and I would suggest to the gentleman to make the motion that the bill may be printed, so that we all may have an opportunity of examining it, for, sir, very important principles are involved in it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order, and that is, that one member has no right to hold the floor and farm it out to whomsoever he pleases, and to permit them to make speeches within his hour.

The SPEAKER. The right of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to receive explanations and suggestions from members around him, the Chair once before decided is in order.

Mr. HALL. If there are no more inquiries to be made—

Mr. MOREHEAD. I wish to know of the gentleman if this bill has ever been printed?

Mr. HALL. I will state to the gentleman, that the bill was printed at the last session of Congress, but has not been printed at this session.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I wish further to make an inquiry. It is not my purpose to embarrass the bill, or impede the wishes of its friends. It may be that I shall vote for it. I would ask its friends to have it laid on the table and printed.

Mr. HALL. If this bill be postponed to a day certain, and be made the special order, it will not embarrass it; but to postpone without making it a special order, it would kill it.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I hope the gentleman will make the motion to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] a question. This bill proposes a distribution of the public lands within the States. I desire the gentleman to inform me whether there are any provisions which regulate the selection of land? For instance, where will Maryland select her lands?

Mr. HALL. In the Territories of the United States.

Mr. HOUSTON. Where will Ohio select?

Mr. HALL. There is a provision of this kind: that if any of the States in which public lands are situated, do not have lands which, in the opinion of the Governor, are worth $1 25 an acre, then that State may also select her lands in the Territories. It depends entirely upon the Governor, where she may select them.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the point I wish to get at. The lands are better in some States than in others. In Alabama, there are no Government lands worth selecting under this bill.

Mr. BISSELL. With the view of affording every gentleman a fair opportunity to give this bill as full attention as can be desired—as I am satisfied that is the way to secure friends for it—I move that it be made the special order for this day two weeks, and from day to day until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make that motion unless the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BISSELL. I understood the gentleman to have yielded me the floor to make the motion I desired, that this bill be made the special order for this day two weeks, and from day to day until disposed of, and that in the mean time it be printed with its amendments.

Mr. HALL. I hope the gentleman will give me his attention. I will have no objection to the gentleman making such motion, provided we can keep the bill from the Speaker's table. If his motion be made, and the bill be not disposed of to-day, it will go upon the Speaker's table. I move, with a view of keeping this bill alive, so that the gentleman may make his motion, that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BISSELL. I make the motion I suggested before.

Mr. KING, of New York. I rise to a question of order, that it is not in order to move to make this bill a special order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, if objection is made.

Mr. KING. I am opposed to making it a special order. I will have no objection to any other disposition which gentlemen may propose to make of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the objection, that it is not in order to submit the motion to make this bill a special order.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to inquire of the Speaker, whether it will be in order to make a motion to postpone the further consideration of this bill two weeks?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. BISSELL. I would inquire, whether it will require more than a majority to take up the bill at that time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that it will be competent for a majority of the House to proceed to its consideration when that day arrives, unless by some privileged motion it be set aside.

Mr. BISSELL. Then I make the motion, and hope it will be put.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I ask if it be in order to make a motion to commit this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is in order. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to make a motion to commit.

Mr. HALL. I did.

The SPEAKER. The motion to commit to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and print is pending. Another motion is submitted, that it be postponed to a day certain, (this day two weeks,) and that it be printed. The question is first upon committing it to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would suggest to the Chair that a motion to postpone to a day certain will take precedence and carry with it the motion to commit.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is, that, according to the practice of the House, the motion to commit takes precedence of a motion to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My impression is different.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Chair will see by referring to the 46th rule, that "when a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lie on the table, for the previous question, to postpone to a day certain, to commit or amend, to postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they are arranged." The question to postpone has precedence. I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken first upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] to postpone the bill to this day two weeks.

Mr. BISSELL. I trust that this motion will not be voted down, unless gentlemen are going to defeat the bill.

Mr. STANLY. I hope the motion will prevail.

The question was then taken upon Mr. BISSELL's motion, and there were—ayes 89, noes not counted.

Mr. ORR demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 115, nays 49; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Allison, Ashe, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bibbhaugh, Bissell, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Thompson, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Woodward—49.

So the bill was postponed, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALL was still entitled to the floor.

Mr. SIBLEY. I wish the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to allow me to propose the following amendment as an additional section, and that it be printed with the other amendments:

"And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the land hereinbefore granted to those States, in which there is no public domain, there shall be issued to said States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, land scrips for an amount equal to the distributive share granted to such States respectively, under the provisions of this act, to be disposed of for the uses and purposes prescribed in the foregoing sections of this act."

Mr. STANLY moved to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the bill was postponed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, which latter motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. HALL it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions, and that they do lie on the table, viz:

The petitions of citizens of New York city, and of Dayton, Ohio, in favor of a grant of land to the members of the Western Farm and Village Association;

The petition of 460 citizens of Wisconsin, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Chicago to Jonesville, and branches thereof;

The petition of Elisha Camp for aid in completing a railroad from Sackett's Harbor to Ellensburg, New York; and

The petition of citizens of New York, praying for aid in the construction of a railroad from Saratoga to Sackett's Harbor in said State.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Joseph M. Wilcox, of the State of Missouri, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (No. 265) for his relief, which bill was read a first and second time by its title, committed to a Committee of the Whole, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALL, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (No. 123) "to relinquish to the State of Missouri, on certain conditions, the two per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands sold in said State since the 1st day of January, A. D. 1821, and reserved by the act of Congress of the 6th day of March, A. D. 1820;" reported the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute therefor.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and be printed.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the consideration of the petition of the settlers on the Menomonee purchase, in the State of Arkansas, praying for an extension of the preemption laws, and the time of payment under them, and that the same be laid on the table.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 92.

Lands, reported the bill authorizing certain soldiers in the late war with Great Britain, to surrender the bounty lands drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof, and moved that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it with or without amendment?

Mr. HALL. It is without an amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to withdraw his motion, and let this bill be put upon its passage. I think there will be no objection to that, for it will not occupy any length of time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw his motion to commit?

Mr. HALL. I supposed the House was tired of the Committee on Public Lands occupying its time, and I therefore moved to commit the bill; but, if the House is disposed to indulge the committee further, I will withdraw that motion. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage now.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I only wish to say a word or two in explanation of that bill. Some three or four years ago, a bill, similar to that in all respects, was passed with regard to the land situated in the State of Arkansas, and I believe that it was the intention of Congress, at that time, to extend the provisions of that bill to all the States of the Union. My recollection is, that the Committee on Public Lands, of which I was a member, so ordered the bill to be amended; but, be that as it may, the present bill only proposes to extend the provisions of the law, which is in force with regard to lands in Arkansas, to all the States of the Union. It merely authorizes the soldiers who received bounty lands for services in the war of 1812, which are of no value, to surrender those lands to the United States, and to select other lands, subject to private entry, in lieu of the lands thus surrendered.

Mr. FICKLIN. With the permission of my friend from Missouri, I wish to ask him this question: Does this bill, as it is now reads, provide for those lands which have been sold by the States for taxes?

Mr. HALL. I will only say this in reply to the remark of the gentleman from Illinois, that the committee supposed if the land was worthless, it was not probable it would have been sold for taxes, and in addition to that, the gentleman knows very well that the purchaser holds an indifferent title when based upon a tax sale. But, it is true, as the gentleman states. The same laws prevail in Arkansas, and I have never heard any difficulty arising in consequence of the lands being sold for taxes in that State.

Mr. POLK. I rise to a point of order. I would ask if the hour appropriated for the consideration of reports, is not expired?

The SPEAKER. It is just out.

Mr. POLK. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Tennessee propose instead of the business now before the House?

Mr. POLK. I call for the regular order of business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The hour allotted to reports from committees has expired.

Mr. HENN. I would ask if the unfinished business of Saturday does not now come up?

Mr. POLK. If I understand it this is resolution day; and by a resolution of the House we appropriated one hour to the reception of reports.

The SPEAKER. It is petition day. The regular business under the rules will be to call the States for petitions, beginning with the State of Maine.

Mr. HALL. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. POLK] to withdraw his proposition, in order that I may make a motion that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, otherwise it will go on the Speaker's table.

Mr. POLK. I will do so.

Mr. HALL. I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENN. I now repeat the question which I propounded to the Chair just now.

The SPEAKER. Petitions are in order from the State of Maine.

SELMA AND TENNESSEE RAILROAD.

Mr. COBB. I now call up the motion which I made to reconsider the vote by which the bill No. 14, granting the right of way and making a donation of public lands to the Selma and Tennessee railway was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I am not going to put it upon its passage. I moved that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I thought then it would be as well there as anywhere else. Some of my colleagues differed with me, and thought it was better to refer it to the Committee on Public Lands, and let it take its change to be reported again. I see no better chance of putting it in that way than by referring it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and my intention upon this occasion simply is to get rid of the motion to reconsider, and let the bill go back to the Calendar, where it belongs, to be considered if it is ever reached; but I doubt very much if it will ever be reached. Those who have meritorious railway schemes must rely upon the charity, or, at least, the liberality of the House towards the conclusion of this Congress, when we ask that those bills may be taken up, and they are satisfied that they are proper measures to be passed, that they will take them up. Without that, I have no expectation of ever seeing another railway bill acted upon that is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I may probably find a speech upon my remarks now, that will take a very wide and extended range. I may probably talk about the degradation of the prices of the public lands; the donations of public lands to the States for railroads and various other purposes, as well as various matters connected with the State of Alabama. I move that the motion I made to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. FULLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to report a bill authorizing the issuing of a new register to a vessel.

The SPEAKER. Is it a bill of which previous notice has been given, or one from a committee?

Mr. FULLER. It is a report from a committee.

Mr. HENN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is to call States for petitions, beginning with Maine.

Mr. FULLER. Will it be in order to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order.

Mr. FULLER. I make that motion, then.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Are we not acting under a suspension of the rules already?

Mr. FULLER. No, we are not; the hour has been expended.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOUSTON. There are two or three appropriation bills, that require but little time in which to dispose of them. The pension bills, for instance, have been before us for some time. We have passed no appropriation bills yet, and I would like the House to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union this evening, and pass these appropriation bills. They are mere matters of form, more than anything else. It is necessary that it should be done, because at the beginning of the next fiscal year, it is proper that the funds should be at all points where pensions have to be paid out; and to accomplish that, the bills should be passed now. I therefore move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STUART. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to submit a resolution, instead of the one he proposes, and that is, that we shall go on to-day, and dispose of the territorial business in the House, which we can do to-day. I think such a course will facilitate the business of the House, more than anything else we can do.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama withdraw his motion?

Mr. HOUSTON. I waited to see if any gentleman would propose the business for us to-day, after we stopped the call of committees for reports. No proposition was made, and now I make this motion. I would like the House to indulge me by going into committee.

The question was then put upon Mr. HOUSTON's motion; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 72, noes 49.

Mr. TUCK demanded tellers, which were ordered, and Messrs. HAMILTON and HOUSTON were appointed.

The question being again put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 75, noes 48.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the first business before the committee, the consideration of the annual message of the President of the United States, and the resolutions in relation thereto.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to pass by the other business on the Calendar, and take up House bill No. 44, "making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States, for the year ending June 30, 1853."

The motion was agreed to, and bill No. 44 was taken up and read through by the Clerk.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not desire, in taking up this bill, to occupy any of the time of the committee. I merely wish to say, that the bill which has just been read is strictly in pursuance of the estimates of the Department. It is known to every one who has reflected at all upon this subject, that pension bills are controlled and restrained by the amount of pensions that are admitted at the Department which, according to law, passes upon them. By referring to the estimates, these items will all be found set forth. They are not set forth in this bill precisely as they are in the estimates. They have been separated, as they are here, at the request of the Department, but the amount is the same, and the destination of all the appropriations is the same. There are two of these bills, and unless some gentleman desires to discuss the merits of the bills, I would be glad that the general discussion should not be commenced upon them. All the other appropriation bills are ready for action, and as soon as the House will indulge me, I intend to commence calling up the regular bills for the supply of the various departments of the public service. If, however, there is to be a general discussion now, I would prefer that this bill should be laid aside to be reported to the House, and that the discussion should be had upon bill No. 45, which I will immediately call up. But I think the discussion ought to take place on neither of these bills.

Mr. STUART. I wish to submit a few remarks to the committee—and they shall be very few—and I respectfully request that gentlemen will hear me that I may have their judgment upon the subject. Here are two bills represented by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to be somewhat formal in their character, but necessary to the business of the country. Let us act upon them, and act promptly. And, sir, I desire to submit a motion that the committee rise, in order that we may limit debate, unless, indeed, the committee, by unanimous consent, will adopt the suggestion which I make. I do this not for the purpose of dictating to any gentleman, or to the committee, but for the purpose of ascertaining the sense of the House. If the House will agree to this, I then propose to go to the business that has been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in regard to the Territories. We can take up that business in the House, and probably dispose of it all to-day; at any rate we can do it to-day and to-morrow.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the gentleman I will say this in reply to his suggestion, that if the committee will allow the Chair to report both these bills—Nos. 44 and 45—to the House, I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, to take up the territorial bills. The same explanation applies to both of these bills; and the estimates are here, with the written explanations of the Department.

Mr. STUART. I should be very glad to adopt any plan that would bring about the object I have in view. As I said before, I merely wish the attention of the committee, that they may decide this question; and I will abide as cheerfully as any gentleman by whatever seems to be the sense of the committee. I wish gentlemen to determine now whether they will take this course in reference to these two small and comparatively unimportant bills, and let us take up the territorial business that has been reported to the House, in the House, and dispose of it, so that it may go early to the Senate, and meet with final action there. For the purpose of effecting that object, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. The gentleman from Michigan says that these are very small bills. One of them appropriates in the neighborhood of $2,000,000, and I wish to make a speech upon it. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman will allow me to make the motion to rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Virginia wants to make a speech—if he is going to discuss the bill—it is better that the discussion should go on this evening. I hope the gentleman from Virginia is not to be the first gentleman to lead off in promiscuous debate on these appropriation bills. I do not think it usual. I appeal to the gentleman to let the general debate be postponed; and the first day I can do so—to-morrow, if the House will allow me—I will bring up the general appropriation bills. They are ready, and have been for months, to be discussed; and if the gentleman wants general discussion, I do not intend to endeavor to restrict it on those bills; but do let us report these small bills.

Mr. BAYLY. I will deal with the gentleman, and with the committee, with perfect frankness. I do wish to make a speech on other subjects than this bill, and I prefer to make it on this bill rather than upon others, to which I may feel it my duty to speak. The House knows that a member can speak but once to a bill. Now, I may have to speak to the other appropriation bills themselves; and as I fancy that, on these pension bills there will be but little debate, and as I have not troubled the House with a speech on politics generally this session, or even at the last Congress, I should be glad to have an opportunity of being heard.

[Loud cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan is that the committee do now rise, with a view to limit the debate. If the gentleman from Virginia forces me to it, I must insist upon the question being taken.

Mr. BAYLY. I will state to the gentleman that I took the floor, supposing that we were going to the business on the Speaker's table. I have not got the papers and documents that I wish to use, and I move that the committee do now rise, that we may go to the business on the Speaker's table, so that I may have a chance to be heard to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has already been made by the gentleman from Michigan. Has the gentleman from Michigan withdrawn that motion?

Mr. STUART. I have not withdrawn the motion. I made it from a desire to take the sense of the House upon this question, whether they will occupy this week in talking about something that is of no earthly consequence, or proceed with the territorial business.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question was then taken on Mr. STUART's motion, and on a division there were—ayes 44, noes 37.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. ORR. It does not require a quorum to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is correct. It does not require a quorum to rise.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then I withdraw the demand for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee do now rise is decided in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 44, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STUART. I offer the usual resolution to close the debate upon bill No. 44, now pending before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in five minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to amend that resolution by striking out "five minutes," and inserting "two hours" in lieu thereof.

Mr. HOUSTON. Why, the gentleman from Michigan still has the floor, and may intend to move the previous question on his resolution. The gentleman from Virginia cannot get the floor.

Mr. POLK. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order. He has no right to the floor then. [Laughter.]

Mr. STUART. I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] moves to amend the resolution by striking out "five minutes," and inserting "two hours."

Mr. STUART. The gentleman from Virginia has not had the floor.

Mr. BAYLY. Yes, I have had the floor.

The SPEAKER. (Mr. JONES of Tennessee occupying the chair temporarily.) The gentleman from Michigan offered his resolution. The gentleman from Virginia rose and was recognized by the Chair, and the gentleman from Michigan did not then contest the right of the gentleman from Virginia to the floor. The gentleman from Michigan could not have said anything upon the motion which he made, except to have moved the previous question, and that he did not do.

Mr. STUART. It is no unusual thing for some one else to get the floor whilst I am upon it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was put upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 17 voting in the affirmative.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist that there are not enough.

Mr. OLDS. That is not one fifth of a quorum. The negative side being then counted, there were 52 noes.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are not ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the gentleman to modify his resolution, so as to allow a few hours' debate.

Mr. BAYLY. There is such a motion now pending.

Mr. STUART. The gentleman from Virginia has moved an amendment to allow two hours.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That is not long enough.

The SPEAKER. On a division there were not one fifth of those present voting in favor of the yeas and nays; and, consequently, they were not ordered.

Mr. ORR. Oh, yes, they were ordered. The vote was—ayes 17, noes 52.

Several Voices. "No, no," and "They were not ordered."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is right. One fifth of those present did vote for the yeas and nays, and the roll will, therefore, be called.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a point of order. It has been decided again and again that on a motion to adjourn you may have the yeas and nays with less than a quorum, but that you cannot take the question on doing business of a legislative character with less than a quorum. Every one knows that there is a quorum in the House, and that if the question had been taken by tellers that fact would have been shown. But I insist that you cannot proceed to take this vote by yeas and nays upon the showing of the count just now.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair is of opinion that this is a constitutional right, and that when one fifth of those present order the yeas and nays, they have a right to have them entered on the Journal.

Mr. STANLY. Does not this same Constitution provide how many members shall be necessary to transact business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if, upon the call of the roll, there should not be a quorum voting, it would be no decision of the question. The Chair thinks further, that taking the question by a division—calling the yeas first, and then the noes, or by tellers, is as much the doing of business as is the taking of yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I dislike to have the rules and practice of the House changed by these new lights, and I therefore appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The SPEAKER. A motion was made to lay the resolution to close debate upon the table. Upon that question the yeas and nays were called, and on a division there were 17 in favor of taking the yeas and nays, and 52 against it. Seventeen being one fifth of those present, or voting, the Chair decides that it was a sufficient number, under the Constitution, to order the yeas and nays. From that decision the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] takes an appeal, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] moves to lay the appeal upon the table. The question now is on the motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. This is an important question of parliamentary law. I believe the decision of the Chair is perfectly right, and I ask for the yeas and nays on laying the appeal upon the table.

Mr. DEAN. I ask that the provision of the Constitution which regulates this matter, may be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. STUART. I object.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move that the House do now adjourn, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The House refused the yeas and nays.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn, and upon a division there were—ayes 25, noes not counted.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STUART. I demand tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays, upon the motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. FULLER, of Maine, and GOONRICH were appointed.

The House was then again counted, upon ordering the yeas and nays, and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 56.

So, more than one fifth having voted in the affirmative, the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. One question of order is still pending.

Mr. BAYLY. Well, my point is in reference to that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia, nevertheless, cannot make one question upon another.

Mr. BAYLY. I want to call the attention of the Chair to his own decision, which, in my judgment, is a correct one. The House certainly have the power to order the yeas and nays, with less than a quorum. But I submit that less than a quorum cannot decide the question of order.

The SPEAKER. There has been no voting upon the question to show that there was not a quorum present. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. STUART. Will the Chair state the question to the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] moved that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon House bill No. 64, shall be terminated in five minutes after the committee shall next have resumed its consideration. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] moved to amend by striking out "five minutes" and inserting "two hours." Upon that the gentleman from Michigan demanded the previous question. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] then moved to lay the resolution upon the table. Upon that motion the yeas and nays were demanded, and, upon a division, there were 17 in the affirmative and 52 in the negative. The Chair decided that, according to the Constitution, which says that "the yeas and nays of the members of either House, on any question, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal," they were ordered. From that decision, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] takes an appeal; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] moves to lay the appeal upon the table. The question, therefore, now is, Shall the appeal lie upon the table?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to ask the Chair if the yeas were called for when, upon the demand for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, the Chair announced that there were 17 in the affirmative?

The SPEAKER. They were counted, and the Chair announced the number as 52.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The point I make is, that when the Chair announced that there were 17 voting for the yeas and nays, and the other side was not called for, it was irregular for the Chair to count the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion that there be a call of the House cannot be made at this time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit that it is a motion which takes precedence of the one then pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will indulge the gentleman in his motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HART. Is it in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HART. I make the motion.

The question was taken, and the result was—yeas 67, yeas 52.

Mr. HIBBARD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered—yeas 26, yeas 85.

The question was then again taken, and the result was—yeas 64, yeas 90.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I now withdraw my motion for a call of the House. I also, with an understanding with the gentleman from Michigan over the way, [Mr. STUART] withdraw the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, and the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Then the question will recur upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia to the resolution of the gentleman from Michigan, to strike out "five minutes" and insert "two hours."

Mr. STUART. If it is admissible, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question, and modify my motion to suit the wishes of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY].

The resolution was then reported, as follows:

Resolved, That all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon House bill No. 44, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, shall cease in two hours after the committee shall again have resumed the consideration of the same. And if the committee shall not sooner come to a conclusion, it shall then proceed to vote upon such amendments as may be pending, or shall be offered, and shall report it to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to appeal to the gentleman from Virginia, and the gentleman from Michigan, if they desire to hang speeches upon political subjects upon this bill, to allow this bill to pass, and I will then call up one of the general appropriation bills, upon which they can make as many speeches as they like.

Mr. STUART. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then put, and the resolution adopted.

Mr. STUART. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then put, and there were, on a division—yeas 90, yeas not counted; so the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that the first business before the committee was, the consideration of House bill No. 44, making appropriations for the payment of pensions.

Mr. WASHBURN addressed the committee an hour, in regard to the compromise measures, and the futility of attempting, by declaratory resolutions, to give those measures greater force, or more durability, than the laws themselves are calculated to give. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BAYLY. I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was put and the motion agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman, (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut,) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 44, to make appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the United States, for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1853, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution. I ask that it may be read for information.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that in the present condition of the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, the motion cannot be entertained.

RESOLUTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

The resolution was then read as follows:

Resolved, (if the Senate concur.) That this House adjourn sine die on the first Monday in August, at 12 o'clock, m.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. HARRIS. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to, and

The House adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

THE NAUTICAL ALMANAC.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to inform the Senate, where and at what Observatory the observations and calculations for the "Nautical Almanac" are made?

Why the same are not made at the National Observatory at Washington?

What expenses are necessary therefor, except the pay of the Superintendent?

What progress has been made towards making a Nautical Almanac?

For how long a period of time the calculations of the first almanac are expected to extend?

Whether it is necessary to the perfection of the "Nautical Almanac" to make observations at more than one Observatory, and if so, are they made at two Observatories, and if so, at what two?

Whether any persons except the Superintendent, have been paid for services in preparing the "Nautical Almanac," and if so, how many, and what compensation have they received?

When it is expected that a Nautical Almanac will be prepared for publication?

What improvement, if any, is it expected the American "Nautical Almanac," when published, will have over the English?

Is it expected that any errors of former astronomers or observers are to be corrected, or any new means suggested by which more precision is to be given to astronomical science?

After the first American "Nautical Almanac" is published, will the succeeding numbers probably cost as much, or more than the first?

Will the same time be necessary for the second and subsequent numbers respectively, as for the first?

ST. CLAIR FLATS.

Mr. WALKER submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War report to the Senate the best plan, in his opinion, for the improvement of the St. Clair Flats, in Lake St. Clair, and State of Michigan; together with an estimate for the execution of such plan.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. BELL submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War communicate to the Senate the estimate of the cost of improving the navigation of the Tennessee river, heretofore made by Colonel Long, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, and any further, or additional estimates, which may be suggested by recent examinations of the obstructions to the navigation of that river.

DEPARTMENTAL PRINTING, BINDING, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. BORLAND, April 26th, in relation to printing, binding, and advertising executed by order of the several Departments, which was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretaries of the Departments, respectively, of State, Treasury, War, Navy, and Interior, and the Postmaster General, be directed to communicate to the Senate statements of the quantity of printing, binding, and public advertising, which has been done for, or by order of the Department over which he presides, and on what account, and the amount of money paid for the same, and to whom paid, for each year since the 4th day of March, 1849, up to this time; and what remains to be done, and how much is to be paid for it under any existing contracts, arrangements, or agreements, written or verbal. Also, copies of the several contracts under which said printing, binding, and advertising, has been or is to be done; and, also, statements whether said contracts, arrangements, or agreements, have been made in pursuance of public advertisement or otherwise.

SALT SPRINGS IN IOWA.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the Senate bill to relinquish to the State of Iowa the lands reserved for salt springs therein, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the above-mentioned bill, and it was concurred in, as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the rights of third parties: And provided, further, that if any of the lands which have been selected by the authorities of the State of Iowa, under the act aforesaid, shall have been legally claimed by preemption or otherwise, the State shall be authorized to select other lands in lieu thereof.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR RAILROADS.

Mr. FELCH. I desire to ask the Senate to take up, this morning, a bill which will occupy but a few moments. It is a general bill, granting the right of way through the public lands to railroad companies. I ask that it may be taken up and passed, because individual companies are making applications, and this bill will supersede the necessity of legislating upon each case separately.

Mr. DAWSON. Do I understand the Senator from Michigan to say that he wants this bill passed in order to prevent companies of individuals constructing the same roads?

Mr. FELCH. I will state that the bill authorizes the proper Department to grant the right of way, upon certain specified conditions, through any of the public lands, to railroad companies organized under the State authorities. We have been in the habit of granting the right of way upon the application of individual companies whenever it has been asked. We have passed one or two such bills at the present session. We have now before us applications from a great number of companies for that purpose. This is a general bill, which will supersede the necessity of special legislation in each case. It gives no land—nothing but the right of way.

Mr. DAWSON. Does it give the right of way for one hundred feet on each side of the road?

Mr. FELCH. Only for seventy-five feet.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill to authorize the construction of railroads through the public lands in certain cases was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being made, it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was subsequently read a third time and passed.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM in the chair.) The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODHEAD] yesterday offered an amendment in relation to the payment of workmen employed on the Capitol. The Chair then intimated that, under the rule, he regarded it as out of order. The Chair reaffirms that opinion, and decides that, under the rule, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am sorry that it is so decided, but I do not feel disposed to argue the question with the Chair; nor do I know that it would be in order for me so to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order to debate the question upon an appeal taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to offer an amendment which merely allows the transfer of an existing appropriation. When the fire which destroyed the library occurred, a certain sum was appropriated to repair the damages occasioned by that fire. It was more than enough for the purpose. Since that time, there has been a fire in one of the apartments used by the Supreme Court. A transfer of the balance of the former appropriation is asked, in order to repair the damage done to that apartment. The amendment is, to insert the following:

Svc. — Be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings be, and he is hereby authorized to apply any unexpended portion of the money appropriated by the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriation to meet the expenses incurred in consequence of the late fire at the Capitol," approved January 13, 1852, to the payment of the expenses necessarily incurred in repairing the damage lately done, by fire, in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court, and in making other repairs about the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will now offer the amendment which I sent to the Chair yesterday evening, and which the Senate ordered to be printed. I see that the amendment has not been laid on the tables of Senators; and, therefore, I ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

The amendment was read, as follows:

For the liquidated balance found due the Creek Indians, for losses sustained during the last war with Great Britain, by that portion of the tribe that was friendly and coöperated with the United States, in accordance with the promise of the Government, and pursuant to a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, made to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, May, 1850, $110,417 90.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Mr. President, the proposition which I have just offered forms a part of the ordinary estimates of the Indian Department for the current service of that department for the present year. It is asked to be placed upon the deficiency bill, because it is an acknowledged obligation of the Government for the object mentioned in the amendment, which is now due and unpaid. The proper place, therefore, for it is in the deficiency bill, and nowhere else.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest to him that I wish to raise a question of order on that amendment.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. If the chairman of the Committee on Finance intends to raise the preliminary question of order, I would prefer that it should be raised now and disposed of, before the discussion of the merits of the amendment shall be entered upon.

Mr. HUNTER. I raise the question of order, that this amendment is not in order. It seems to me that it provides for a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. MANGUM in the chair.) The facts of this case are not known sufficiently to enable the Chair to decide.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Then I will state the nature of the case as briefly as possible, so as to give the Chair information in order to enable it to decide. In the first place, this is a part of the regular estimates of the Indian Department, coming through the Secretary of the Interior. It is estimated for by the Department, as a part of the regular expenditures of the Government for this year. It is reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs under the belief, by the committee, that it is not a private claim. It is a rule of that committee not to offer as an amendment to a bill of this kind, any claim which they recognize as private. The claim arises under the treaty of 1814, or rather under the capitulation of 1814, made between the United States and the hostile and friendly Creeks. It is based on the promise of indemnity for the losses of the friendly Creeks, which they sustained during the war, at the hands of the hostile Creeks. The number of claimants amounts to between seven hundred and one thousand, including a large portion of the tribe. The losses of the friendly Indians during the war, were ascertained by an agent of the United States, and forty cents on the dollar of the ascertained amount was paid to them. They now ask for the balance. That is the nature of the claim.

I submit to the Chair, therefore, that it can hardly be considered as a private claim. I think the very point in controversy must have been decided upon a question raised upon an amendment introduced by the Senator from Tennessee to this bill, the other day, which, I believe, was ruled to be in order, though it was lost on its merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is inclined to the opinion, that this is not one of the sort of private claims indicated by the rule; for it has been the practice heretofore upon many occasions, when a bill has been passed by one branch of Congress and not passed by the other, to attach it to the appropriation bill. I imagine that the true interpretation of the rule, does not include claims of this character.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will now state very briefly, and in the smallest compass possible, the prominent points and facts in this case; and I shall not go into a more enlarged discussion of the merits of it, unless I find that my remarks shall have provoked a discussion which may render that necessary. It is, as is stated in the amendment, a liquidated balance already found due, by an accredited and authorized agent of the Government, to the friendly Creek Indians, for losses sustained by reason of hostilities with the other portion of the tribe, during the war of 1814. It is based upon a letter issued in pursuance of instructions from the War Department to General Pinckney, who was then at the head of our forces, and represented the civil and military authority of the United States in the Creek nation. It was at the close of the war, at a time when several disastrous battles had broken down the power of the Creek Indians, and caused them to sue for peace. At that time, General Pinckney sent to the Indians a letter, stating the terms of capitulation on which peace would be granted. He was the agent of the War Department; and acting for that Department, he stated:

"They will retain so much of the conquered territory as will appear to the Government of the United States to be a just indemnity for the expenses of the war, and as restitution for injury sustained by its citizens and the friendly Creek Indians."

It was upon this clause of the letter of General Pinckney to the Creek Indians, that the whole of this claim for indemnity is based. In pursuance of the terms laid down in this letter, the capitulation was made at Fort Jackson, on August 1st, 1814. The promise of General Pinckney was declined to be recognized in the treaty made by General Jackson, on the sole ground that his powers, as limited by the instructions of the Government, did not embrace the subject of indemnity for the losses of the friendly Creeks. It occasioned some difficulty, some delay, in the completion of the treaty; but it resulted in an arrangement with the friendly Creek chiefs, by which they agreed to sign the capitulation on condition that General Jackson would attach to it the letter of the 23d of April, containing the promise of indemnity for losses, and attach to it also a solemn protest entered into by which they imbodyed their complaints against the Government for what they termed a spoliation of a portion of the friendly Creek territory. These documents were attached to the terms of capitulation which was entered into by the hostile Creeks.

The agent of the Government of the United States, then residing in the country—a man who appeared to possess the confidence of the Government, who had grown gray in the service of the Federal Government in that country—was called upon by the War Department to state the nature and the character of the claims which the friendly Creeks set up for indemnities for losses during the war. In pursuance, and in strict execution of that order, he proceeded to discharge the functions thus committed to him; and in 1815 he made out a schedule of the losses, which were transmitted to the War Department, upon which he based an estimate that the amount of $100,000 would cover the losses. This estimate of his was pronounced to be notoriously imperfect at the time. It formed, however, the basis of the appropriation of $85,000, which Congress made in 1817, the distribution of which was afterwards directed by the War Department to be made rateably between the claimants according to the schedule which had been furnished. The successor of Colonel Hawkins, who was intrusted with this mission and the distribution of this money, completed the schedule, and distributed the $85,000 which had been appropriated, rateably, according to his instructions from the War Department, among the claimants. He found that the aggregate amount of the claims was $195,000. Eighty-five thousand dollars was paid; thus leaving the precise balance for which an appropriation of $110,000 is now asked.

This forms a brief outline of the claim. It is, therefore, as I have stated, for a liquidated balance of sixty cents on the dollar, on claims adjudicated to be good by an officer of the United States, in express pursuance of instructions from the proper authorities of this Government, upon which claims there has been a pro rata distribution of forty cents to the dollar. It would seem, therefore, that the real question now presented is one of the very simplest character. It is, whether this Government, in extending a simple act of justice to a dependent people—its friends and allies in a war more disastrous to them than to the hostile Creeks—can honorably and justly compound its debts of gratitude at the rate of forty cents to the dollar?

Mr. President, it may be asked, why has so simple a debt as this, one of such acknowledged validity, been prosecuted so unsuccessfully against the Government of the United States heretofore? I will present a brief array of facts to show that, in this injustice, the Indians themselves have never acquiesced, but that the balance of this indemnity has been a constant traditional cause of complaint, which they have presented against this Government from that day to this. I will endeavor to show that they exercised a sleepless vigilance in prosecuting it; that they have been delayed under one pretext or another from that time to this; and that there has been no obstacle, no impediment, in the way beyond the mere difficulty of presenting the matter before Congress in such a manner as to demand its attention, which has ever occurred to prevent this simple act of justice being done to them, except a most extraordinary report of the Committee on Claims, made in 1824, in the House of Representatives. I shall not now speak of that report, further than to say that it is the most perfect array of unpardonable blunders from beginning to end, based upon the wildest misconception of the facts, and misconception even of the very character of the claim which was submitted to its consideration, that I have ever had the necessity of investigating. If the report of the Committee on Claims, of 1824, is at all relied upon by the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee, who, I understand, intends to discuss this claim, I shall then feel it necessary to take up that report, dissect it, and show its palpable mistakes so plainly that not a doubt can be entertained but that there was a total misconception by that committee, of the very question submitted to it; that it did not have more than half of the papers before it; and that the most material of the documents—the original report of the Indian agent, the first who took any schedule of the claims—was not before that committee at the time it came to the conclusions imbodyed in the report. The whole of the facts which constitute this claim form a part of the documentary history of the Government. They are imbodyed in a very elaborate and detailed report communicated by the Indian Department to the Committee on Indian Affairs, under date of August 20, 1850, which forms the basis of the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in favor of the claim.

The original act of appropriation was made in 1817 for the sum of $85,000, which was distributed among the claimants according to the schedule, the aggregate of whose demands amounted to $195,000. This leaves the precise balance now proposed to be appropriated, which I therefore term a "liquidated balance." A detailed statement of this distribution of the appropriation of 1817, is contained in a report from D. B. Mitchell, agent of Indian affairs, dated Creek Agency, March 18, 1818. In this report, he goes on to state the particular amount of the claims in favor of each one of the towns or districts of the Creek nation, and the amount of the appropriation distributed in satisfaction of each claim, amounting precisely to the sum of forty cents upon the dollar.

I have also a printed document here, which exhibits not only the aggregate of the claims in favor of each one of the Creek towns, but it also contains the names of each particular claimant, the amount of money which was awarded to him, and the precise amount in dollars and cents which was paid in part satisfaction of the claim. I shall not read it, as it is a lengthy document, but I merely wish to apprise Senators of the fact, that it shows not only the gross amount of the claim, not only the entire history, nature, and character of the claim, but even the name of the claimants, and the amount due to each of them. Everything may be found in the documentary history of the Government, where the facts can be consulted by any one who entertains any doubt as to the genuineness of the claim.

I have stated that this balance has been made the subject of continual complaint on the part of the Creek Indians. In 1817 they appeared here, and obtained the original appropriation. In 1821, in 1824, in 1827, at various periods from 1830 to 1838, and continually, I believe, from 1842 to the present time, they have been pressing this matter before Congress. In 1841 the Administration thought proper to send out an accredited agent of the United States, to ascertain among the Creek Indians what were the causes of complaint for which they claimed redress or indemnity at the hands of the Government. It is remarkable that an old chief, venerable for his age, one of the Creek warriors, whose fidelity had been tested in the disastrous war of 1814, named this unsatisfied claim as a portion of their grievances. He spoke of the amount they had received from the Government as being but an insignificant trifle in comparison with the aggregate amount of their claims against the United States. He details a very interesting colloquy which he had with General Jackson while he was President of the United States, in which the justice of the claim was fully recognized by the President, but he put off the Indian under the promise that the Government would pay the money after the Creeks moved west. It appears that the President of the United States at that time recognized the justice of the claim, but very artfully suggested this impediment—a mere political question which he was anxious to accomplish—the removal of the Indians—as the only thing which was at that time in the way of the payment of the claim.

Thus, there has been a constant recognition of this claim—a constant pressing of it by the Creek Indians. But it appears that there have been no auspices under which they have ever presented it so favorable as those which now surround it; and that is in consequence of a new policy which has been adopted by the Indian Department of ordering all the proper agents of the United States for each tribe to prosecute the legitimate business and claims of the Indians before Congress.

I have presented now the outlines of the claim. I shall not speak further upon it, unless I find that the report of the Committee on Claims of 1824 shall be seriously insisted upon as a reason why this appropriation ought not to be made. If that should be the case, I shall have something to say in reference to that report.

Mr. BORLAND. I have a few words to say in addition to the very clear and satisfactory statement which I think my colleague [Mr. SEBASTIAN] has made in presenting these claims.

I have looked with some care into this so-called deficiency bill, and I have found it exceedingly difficult to fix my mind on a single item in the whole bill, except this one of $110,000, that really does come up to the full meaning and intention of a deficiency. It conforms in every particular to the requirements of the rule respecting additions to an appropriation bill; and then it possesses every feature, especially the most favorable features, of a deficiency, appealing to the justice, gratitude, generosity, and common fairness of Congress. We find that a portion of the Creek nation of Indians, appealed to by the Government of the United States when it was at war with other tribes of Indians—and with a portion of that very tribe—appealed to to stand by us, and render us important services at that very difficult and troublesome period of our existence as a Government; and we find that these Indians came up to our help and assistance, and stood faithfully by us through all these difficulties, when they were pressed by hostile encounters with their own people, subjected to great hardships and loss of property, and in constant danger of a sacrifice of the lives of their men, women, and children, under the assurances, repeatedly made by authorized officers of the Government, that if they would stand by us, they would obtain compensation for all their losses and all their hardships. And yet, from the year 1817 up to the present time, they have received but two fifths of the claim which they have clearly established, and which the Government has recognized as being established—which they recognized as far back as 1817. The claim was recognized to the fullest extent for which it was then presented. It was not pretended that the whole amount of these claims was ascertained.

It was a conjectural amount, and was stated to be conjectural because the Indians could not be got together to make a statement of their losses, many of them being absent in consequence of its being the hunting season. But this conjectural statement was made, and $85,000 were appropriated as part of the indemnity, and an agent was appointed to go out and pay the claimants pro rata. When he undertook to perform this duty, and the Indians were assembled, the claims exceeding the $85,000 that had been appropriated, amounting to $110,000, were established and recognized. There they stand, as my colleague has shown, upon the record; and the $85,000 being only sufficient to pay them forty cents on the dollar. Sir, the action of this Government is incapable of recognizing a claim more fully than this is recognized, not only as a just claim against the Government, but one which has been partly paid. A surprising thing to my mind in this whole matter is the long delay of justice in this case. It was not only recognized at the time, but it has been recognized by the Executive Department of the Government ever since, and year after year we have had this matter urged upon the attention of Congress, without success. I cannot conceive what more evidence can be required by any Senator to establish the justice and equity of this claim, or to show that it is a subsisting debt, which every consideration of justice and gratitude makes binding upon this Government. It may fairly be considered an appropriation for carrying out the plighted faith of the Government, the precise amount of which has been specified and settled years and years ago.

Mr. President, I do not think that anything more can be necessary to satisfy the minds of Senators in regard to the justice of this claim. The facts to which I have alluded have been exhibited to the Senate by my colleague as they are recorded in the official records of the Government. Everything has been in print, and laid upon the tables of Senators for years back. It is not therefore a matter which is new or not understood.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall not have a great deal to say in relation to this claim, for I do not believe that a great deal is known about it. I do not believe we can ascertain with certainty upon what it was originally grounded, for it is a very ancient transaction; and even if we were to discover this, I very much doubt whether we have any means of knowing the persons to whom the money should be paid, or who is legitimately entitled to it.

The transaction, as has been stated by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. SEBASTIAN], arose out of the Creek war. When a treaty was made, in 1814, with a friendly portion of this tribe of Indians, who had suffered by depredations, and who also lost a portion of their lands, they were not satisfied with that treaty; however, they signed it, and added the following paper by way of explanation. In it they say:

"We call ourselves, as we are, masters of the land. We have adhered faithfully, in peace and war, to our treaty stipulations with the United States. Finding that General Jackson, in drawing the lines around our country to retain so much of that conquered from the hostile Indians, as he deemed just, found it necessary, for political motives and purposes, to run a line within which there is a great quantity of lands actually our property, for which he, as an equivalent, leaves to us the conquered Indians' lands between Coosa and Tallapoosa. We do not deem the exchange as an equivalent. It shall not, however, interfere with running the line, as we rely on the justice of the United States to cause justice to be done us. And, on these conditions, we request that General Pinckney's letter, of the 23d of April, to Colonel Hawkins, and the answer thereto, of the 25th, be sent on with the treaty, which we will sign after delivering this instrument."

This was referred to a committee of the House of Representatives, in January, 1817. At the head of that committee was Mr. Lowndes, of South Carolina. He made a report on the subject, and his report concludes thus:

"At the time of the treaty, the friendly Creeks would have been satisfied, in the opinion of Colonel Hawkins, to have received as an indemnity for their losses the sum of $60,000. As it is to be considered in some measure a claim under a treaty, as they seem to have expected that some fixed sum would be distributed among them as an equivalent for their losses, and as to do so will be to make it the interest of each sufferer that the losses of another shall not be exaggerated beyond their real amount, the committee believe it will be best to appropriate a definite sum, to be applied, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to indemnify the friendly Creek Indians for property destroyed by the hostile Creeks, in fair proportion to their losses."

In consequence of this report being made, a sum of something more than $80,000—a sum exceeding that designated by Colonel Hawkins—was appropriated. That sum was distributed among the Indians; but the question came up again in 1824—it is to be observed that it was submitted to the examination of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and that Mr. Lowndes was chairman of that committee—at a time when they had every means of deciding on the actual amount which was due, when they had the evidence of living witnesses to guide them, and were, therefore, in a better position than we can be. In 1824 this subject was again referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, at the head of which was Mr. McLane, of Delaware, who made that report which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. SEBASTIAN] thinks so ridiculous and unsubstantial. Mr. McLane says in that report:

"It is the opinion of the committee, that the sum of $85,000, appropriated by the law of 1817, was intended to be a full indemnity for all the losses of the friendly Indians, and was equal to any reasonable expectation. This appears to be manifest from the estimate by Colonel Hawkins, that the chiefs would have been satisfied, at the date of the treaty, with the sum of $60,000; and, in the letter of the acting Secretary of War to D. B. Mitchell, the Indian agent, directing the application of the money, he is informed that, as the law is general in its terms, and predicated on Colonel Hawkins's estimate, 'it will be proper to pay the claimants mentioned in the estimate only a portion of their claim at present, as it is probable that there may be other claimants entitled to the benefit of the law, who are not mentioned in the list of claims furnished by Colonel Hawkins; therefore, a final distribution of the money should not take place until the whole amount of the claims is ascertained."

Appended to that report is an extract of a letter from Colonel Hawkins to Mr. George Graham, Chief Clerk of the War Department, dated "Creek Agency, August 1st, 1815," in the following terms:

"As to the extent of the claims, I have no data to calculate from. Part of the vouchers were taken on by Mr. Cassidy, the general's secretary, and the remainder given in since, to the assistant agent at Coweta, which I have ordered on here. Whatever they may be, I will forward them as soon as received. I believe, at the time of drawing the lines for the treaty, $60,000 would have been received as an equivalent. The Indians of the Lookabaatche were the most faithful, and the greatest sufferers. Their town was besieged for eight days, and when they had to retreat, it was destroyed, with all their property but what they could carry off when they retreated to Coweta. Some of Coosaude, Tuskegee, Coweta, and Tallahassee, had their houses burnt, their stock and provisions destroyed; some few to a considerable amount, but mostly to a trivial one. The losses sustained were by no means general, as many of the friendly towns did not lose anything but what was taken by disorderly individuals of Floyd's army."

This statement, it should be observed, is contained in a letter from Colonel Hawkins, who was much better acquainted with all the circumstances than any other individual then living, or who has lived since.

Now, Mr. President, here is the testimony on which the committees of that day—committees which were nearly contemporary with the transaction to which this claim relates—acted, and this is the result of their investigations. I do not believe that the testimony of Mr. Mitchell, who was afterwards Creek agent, and who undertook to say that a larger sum was due, was any better or higher authority, or, indeed, so good authority, as was the authority of Colonel Hawkins. At any rate, this was a committee, at the head of which were those distinguished men, Mr. Lowndes and Mr. McLane; and both concluded that the sum of $60,000 would have been enough to satisfy any just demand against the Government, and for that purpose they appropriated the sum of $85,000.

How, then, are we to go behind this testimony and look into this old transaction? And, with what certainty can we pretend to estimate what is due, and to do justice now? How do we know, even if more were due, to whom it ought to be paid? This claim is alleged to be for losses sustained by individuals. And how can we ascertain who are the heirs of those individuals, or who is now entitled to receive this pay? Is there any authentic record by which this can be ascertained? Was it designed to pay these parties individually, or was it a general estimate upon a sum total, relying upon the capacity of the Indian agent to ascertain who was entitled to receive it? I think that that was probably the case. I do not know how the fact is in relation to that, but it does seem to me impossible that we can go back now and ascertain what was the truth in relation to this old demand, and the persons who would be now entitled to receive it, if in truth more was due at the time than Colonel Hawkins stated to be probably due, or was thought to be due by those two committees, who had much better means of ascertaining the truth than we have, and in whose judgment I am disposed to rely. How, sir, can we have a final judgment in relation to these private claims, if such reports as these, and if such men as these, cannot be considered as adjudicating the matter finally? Sir, if this state of things is to go on, it is manifest that every claim, no matter what may be its character, may succeed. If claims are to be renewed here year after year, and century after century, it will hardly happen that some committee will not be found to report favorably, and that, at some time an unguarded moment will be found, at which such claims will be passed.

Sir, in my opinion, if justice was not done by this committee at that time, in whom I must say that I have confidence, it is impossible for us now to do justice, and I am unwilling to reopen the case for the purpose of adjudicating it again.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will undertake, very briefly, to answer the objections which the Senator from Virginia has urged against the justice of this claim. The first objection which seemed to strike him most strongly, is the fact, that admitting that there are unsatisfied claims, money should not be appropriated to satisfy them, on account of the difficulty of ascertaining to whom the money is due. That will be the fault of the Indians, and not ours.

If it should turn out that whole families have died out, and that there is no living person to represent them, or to receive the sums due, as a matter of course, the money appropriated will remain in the Treasury of the United States. But he asks whether there is any schedule of the claims, whether there is a list of the persons to whom this money is to go? As I before stated, by a reference to a printed document, it can be ascertained not only what is the amount originally due, but the name of the Indians to whom it was due, and the amounts which have been paid to each.

I have a list styled—

"Claims of the friendly Creek Indians for losses sustained by them in their civil war, agreeably to the terms of peace offered by Major General Pinckney, the 23d of April, 1814, and the preliminary to the treaty of Fort Jackson in that year; presented and liquidated at Fort Hawkins, in July, 1817."

I find by this list that there was due to James Lovell, $250, of which $100 has been paid; to Andrew Lovell, $103, of which $41 has been paid; to George Lovell, $1,652, of which $661 has been paid, &c.

This schedule of these claims and other claims, showing the amounts due and the sums which have been paid, runs through some twenty or thirty pages of this printed document, presenting, probably, the most accurate estimate upon which this money can be disbursed, more accurate than is afforded for any other appropriation in this whole bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the date of that document?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It was dated in July, 1817. It is a detailed account of the losses, and was made out by Colonel Mitchell, the successor of Colonel Hawkins, reporting the amount he had paid to each Indian, and the amount remaining unpaid at the date of this report. I have not read the whole document through, because it is very voluminous; and I submit it to the Senate because it answers the interrogatory which has disturbed the Senator from Virginia so much; and I have further to say, in answer to his difficulties, that I am informed by the present agent of the Creek Indians, that he has seen that document among the Indians, and that there are many living yet who were among the Creeks who followed the fortunes of the United States in the war with England, and that the neglect to satisfy the claim is a constant and ceaseless cause of complaint among them. One of those old chiefs is yet living, and when the Government of the United States sent a special mission there to ascertain the causes of their complaint in 1842, this old chief referred to these unpaid balances on this very class of claims, and reproached the United States for their want of justice in not attending to their payment sooner.

The next ground is, that the Committee on Ways and Means, in 1817, had all the documents before them. They had not as many documents as we have now, and there is nothing in the facts which were before them which we have not. It will be seen that the Committee on Ways and Means, of 1817, called upon the War Department to furnish them all the information on file in that office. They are furnished with Colonel Hawkins's report, which Mr. Calhoun says was imperfect; and this report of the committee was the basis of the appropriation in 1817, and not the report of Colonel Hawkins.

I intend to show that that $60,000 to which Colonel Hawkins alludes, as being a sum which would cover all the just expectations of the Indians, at that time, growing out of the drawing of the line according to the treaty, referred to claims for lands taken from them by the terms of that treaty, and did not include claims for losses in consequence of depredations of the hostile Creeks among them. That being the fact, the allegation that they were satisfied with that amount for all their losses must fall to the ground.

But I will read from a document which was the basis of the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, in the year 1817. It is the report of Colonel Hawkins, who was resident in the country during the war, who was mainly instrumental, and on whom the Government relied, in bringing about a peace.

It is dated, "Coweta, April 1st, 1816." He says:

"I herewith transmit, in obedience to the orders of your department, a report on the claims of the friendly Indians for losses sustained by them in their civil war, agreeably to the terms of peace offered by Major General Pinckney, 23d April, 1814, and the preliminaries to the treaty of Fort Jackson, of August following. It is imperfect, from the peculiar situation of affairs here, and cannot be otherwise till all the hunters are in, which is not expected till the last of next month."

Here is the claim, admitted on the basis to be imperfect, from the peculiar state of affairs then existing; and that was the only document which reached here prior to the appropriation of 1817.

He further says:

"I believe, from the best information I have obtained, the whole amount of just claims will not exceed $100,000; and it is probable, upon a revision in presence of the claimants, there may be a deduction in some of those reported on. If it should be deemed advisable to take order on this report, and appropriate money for the purpose, a sum not exceeding $100,000 will be sufficient."

Then, sir, if $60,000 was all that was necessary to meet this claim, the committee reported an appropriation of $25,000 more than the Indians claimed—a species of generosity on the part of our Government of which it is not commonly guilty. If they had the estimate of Colonel Hawkins then before them, that estimate was $15,000 less than these reports make it. This must be based on the coming in of the hunters in the fall season.

Now, sir, so well satisfied was the War Department that this report was imperfect, that it did not embrace the whole of the claims to be covered by this general appropriation, that in the instructions transmitted to the successor of Colonel Hawkins they direct a pro rata distribution of this amount among all the different claimants. In answer to the instructions of the War Department, General Mitchell, in a letter dated March 18, 1818, says:

"I have now the honor to inclose a concise statement of the accounts presented by the friendly Indians for losses during the late war, and of the application of the sum appropriated by Congress for their payment, by which it appears that a little upwards of $100,000 is still due.

"The gross amount of the claims presented, including the abstract made by Colonel Hawkins, is very little over or under $300,000; but they were reduced by the chiefs to $195,417 90."

I have thus shown that the committee in 1817, when they made this general appropriation, based it on an estimate which was admitted on its face to be imperfect; that the War Department, in making this estimate, recognized the fact, that the appropriation was not expected to amount to a full satisfaction of the claim, and directed it to be distributed pro rata among the claimants; and that Mr. Mitchell, who responded to the orders of the War Department, stating the manner in which he had distributed the money appropriated for this claim, stated also what amount was still due, and says that there is the same evidence to prove a claim for $195,000, as there was to prove that $85,000 were due. There is no kind of rule by which this can be scaled down; there is no kind of evidence by which we can tell that these claims were excessive, because Mr. Mitchell was governed in the distribution by the amount to be appropriated, and not by the extent to which they were liquidated.

I apprehend that ample allowance was made for all such losses when he prepared the schedule of the claims. The gross aggregate amount of these claims he estimated at $300,000; but he says that, in view of all the circumstances, he had prevailed on the chiefs to reduce the sum to $195,000; and then that amount was scaled down by another process, and $85,000 were appropriated; but it was not expected that that appropriation would prove sufficient; it was known by the War Department that it was not sufficient, and, therefore, they ordered a distribution to be made, not as a final satisfaction of the claim, but pro rata at the rate of forty cents to the dollar.

The chairman of the Committee on Finance has relied upon the fact, that, in a communication of the 29th of August, 1815, from Colonel Hawkins, he stated as his opinion that the Indians would have been satisfied with $60,000 at the date of drawing the lines of the treaty. I will now refer to the capitulation of 1814, and the subsequent history of this transaction of Colonel Hawkins, to show that this had reference wholly to the claim for lands, and not for spoiliations. I will call attention to a part of the letter of August 15th, 1815:

"1st. As to the nature and extent of the indemnity which the friendly chiefs claim, in consequence of the letter addressed by General Pinckney, of the 23d of April, 1814:

"As soon as the terms of peace were offered, as expressed in the letter referred to, I took measures to explain them literally to the friendly Indians, and, through them, and the prisoners in our possession, to the hostiles who had fled, or were flying, to Pensacola.

"When General Jackson arrived as sole commissioner, he addressed a speech to the chiefs, among whom there was but a single hostile one; marked his line, which, he said, should not be altered; he altered it, notwithstanding, to accommodate Tookaubatche. The chiefs replied to him, which the General's secretary and the agent took in writing for him. They, in conference, repeatedly urged the justice of their claims to losses, as promised in the terms of peace offered; and the General as often denied having powers to act upon it. Upon being asked, among other things, as his powers extended only to retaining as much land conquered from the hostiles as would indemnify the United States for the expenses of the war, upon what principles he took the lands eastwardly to Georgia, belonging obviously to the friendly Indians? The General answered, he did it from political motives—to prevent an intercourse between the Indians and the Spaniards and English in the Florida; to have a border, to know and separate his enemies from his friends, which was as beneficial to friendly Indians as to the United States; and also gave the friendly Indians the lands in the fork of Tallapoosa and Coosa. The speaker asked where the hostiles were to be placed, if he took all their lands? His answer was, you have room enough to take them among you. The speaker said the war was not yet settled, and they were called on for lands to pay the expense of it; and before it was settled, he supposed there would be another call. The General replied, he would take it upon himself to settle it, if it lasted twenty years, without calling on them for any more land.

"It struck me forcibly, at the time, that the General, who was authorized only to retain lands conquered from the hostiles, to indemnify the United States for the expenses of the war, should take nearly eight millions of acres from the friendly Indians, over and above all the hunting grounds of the friendly Upper Creeks, giving, without consulting them, what he called an equivalent, which they did not deem such, and did not feel themselves authorized to adjust this equitable claim of theirs. I suggested to the General, upon extending the line eastwardly, for the motives assigned by him, if he could, for a reasonable equivalent, where that line touched Flint river, go up the same, it would be a great accommodation to Georgia. Upon which, after some reflection on the subject, and making inquiries as to how far up the line should go, and at what creek it should leave the river, he said his powers would not justify it, and he would adhere to his first line.

"The speaker, after conferring with the chiefs about him, stated to the General that there were no hostile chiefs there; but the heads of the nation—masters of the land—were; they were friends, met to settle matters, and not to quarrel; they were talking for information; he would be ready in a day or two to do what was demanded of them; but, before he signed any papers with him—as he would not admit their claims in the treaty—he should make and sign a treaty expressive of them, and who were masters of the land.

"On the 8th of August, they sent for the agent and General Jackson, and expressed a determination, before they yielded up and signed away their lands, to grant, as a mark of national gratitude, a donation, for his distinguished services, to the General; and to Colonel Hawkins and his family, to whom they owed much, and whose children were natives of their land; to the two interpreters, one of whom had all his property destroyed, [Mr. Cornells]; and, in the instrument which they would sign, to express their claims under the terms of peace offered."

The letter from which I have caused an extract to be read, was a letter written by the agent of the United States on the 1st of August, 1815, in answer to an inquiry made by the War Department for the purpose of ascertaining the character and nature of this very claim. He there gives the history of the negotiation, the prominent point of which is the construction given to the treaty by General Jackson extending his powers to taking lands, not only from the hostile Indians, to bear the expenses of the war, but for political purposes, taking eight millions of acres from our allies, the friendly Creeks. This was meeting out to the Indians a strange kind of justice; it was a strange method of complying with what was agreed upon with General Pinckney, that their rights should be respected. It was the kind of respect paid by the stronger to the weaker party, where it is the misfortune of the weaker party to have its rights and fortunes determined by considerations of the interest or policy of the stronger party. Here was a case in which lands were taken from the Creeks notoriously for the purpose of indemnifying us for the expenses of the war, and in running the line, we usurp and take by force, for a political purpose, the lands of our allies. General Jackson said he would give lands between the forks of the Coosa and Tallapoosa as an equivalent. But Colonel Mitchell says they expressed themselves dissatisfied with this. That was the cause of complaint, and it was this equivalent for the $60,000 to which the drawing of the lines has reference. There is another thing shown by the letter of General Pinckney of April 23d, 1814. There was then no question about the object of the treaty of 1814, and that the Government was under obligations to indemnify the Indians for lands. But as the powers of General Jackson did not extend to making them an equivalent for the eight millions of land taken from them, they stated that they wanted a document signed which would express their dissatisfaction with that arrangement; and the agent said it struck him as strange that he should take eight millions of acres from the friendly Creeks. They said they regarded the lands in the forks of the Coosa and Tallapoosa as not an equivalent for the lands taken from them. I will refer to the document of 1814 as illustrating the same idea.

Now, Mr. President, it must be remembered that during the whole time of the negotiation which finally did not assume the form of a treaty, but of an ordinary military capitulation, it was stated on its face, in the arrangement made between the United States and the hostile Creeks, when, in point of fact, it was known that but one hostile chief was present at the negotiation. They say:

"Finding that General Jackson, in drawing the lines around our country, to retain so much of that conquered from the hostile Indians as he deemed just, found it necessary, for political motives and purposes, to run a line within which there is a great quantity of lands, actually our property, for which he, as an equivalent, leaves to us the conquered Indians' lands between Coosa and Tallapoosa. We do not deem the exchange as an equivalent. It shall not, however, interfere with running the line, as we rely on the justice of the United States to cause justice to be done us. And, on these conditions, we request that General Pinckney's letter of the 23d of April, to Colonel Hawkins, and the answer thereto, of the 25th, be sent on with the treaty, which we will sign after delivering this instrument."

With regard to these reports of the committees, the first was that based on the letter of the 23d of April, referring to the different classes of claims. It stated the two conditions on which they sustained the treaty of August, 1814. It is plain, therefore, that the $60,000 which it was supposed the chiefs would have taken at the date of the treaty, had reference to the land claim, and not to any claim for spoiliations; and this is the claim which the Committee on Claims, in 1824, thought had been submitted to them instead of the claim for spoiliations. The Committee on Claims in 1824, say:

"That the claim, on the part of the friendly Creek Indians, is to an indemnity for certain losses which they sustained from hostile Indians of their own tribe during the Creek war, and is founded upon an instrument delivered by them to General Jackson, on the 9th of August, 1814; by which they complain that in running the line to retain lands conquered from the hostile Indians, he run it in such a manner as to take a quantity of the lands of the friendly Indians, for which no equivalent was afforded; and express their reliance on the justice of the United States to do them justice."

I stated that the committee, in 1824, did not understand the character of the claim submitted to them. The claim submitted to that committee was one which asked indemnity for spoiliations. Their houses were burned, their cattle were driven away and destroyed, and here, as I have shown, the committee of 1824 state that the land claim was the claim which was considered before them, and it was for this land claim that the Indians themselves were satisfied with $60,000. But it is exceedingly strange, that if the committee of 1824 relied upon the letter of Mr. Hawkins, they could not also have taken a statement which went far over the $60,000, especially considering that the report was admitted to be imperfect from the nature of the case, and requiring his successor to complete it. By the letter of Colonel Hawkins, it was shown that, instead of this claim amounting to only $60,000, the amount was $195,000, on which was paid the sum of $85,000. From the report of the committee, in 1824, it appears that that committee totally misconceived the character of the claim which was submitted to them. The Creeks had two claims—one for indemnity for their lands which were taken, and for which they accepted $60,000 as an equivalent; and the other arising out of spoiliations to their other property; and they ask that they should be indemnified for the loss sustained in the destruction of that property during the war. It was by the committee of 1824 confounding these two claims together, that the chairman of the Committee on Finance has fallen into the misconception of the case which he has.

Sir, there are many other documents which would fortify this view of the case, but these claims are proverbially of so little general interest, and it is so difficult to command the attention of honorable Senators upon claims which possess so little general interest, that I will forbear further to press upon the attention of the Senate other matters. Having adverted to the known facts of the case, to show that it was originally founded upon the promise of the Government that the stipulation of 1814 was made on the faith of this promise;

I have shown that the report of the committee, in 1824, was founded on a gross misconception of the character of the claims referred to them; that the Indians had two claims; that the claim for land was submitted to Congress, in 1824, but that the claim for spoliation was not; that the Government recognized the appropriation, made in 1817, as an imperfect satisfaction, and ordered a pro rata distribution of that sum. These constitute the leading and prominent facts of the case, and, in my opinion, are unanswerable.

Without detaining the Senate further with the consideration of the case, I shall now submit the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to say one word as to the fact upon which the Senator from Arkansas rests his argument. He says the allowance was made, and the estimate of Colonel Hawkins was made, on the supposition that it was to compensate the Creeks for their lands only. On the contrary, it appears by the letter of Colonel Hawkins, referred to in the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, in the House, in 1824, that he referred to their claims of every description. He says:

"I believe, at the time of drawing the lines of the treaty, $60,000 would have been received as an equivalent. The Indians of Tookaubatchee were the most faithful, and the greatest sufferers; their town was besieged for eight days, and, when they had to retreat, it was destroyed with all their property but what they could carry off when they retreated to Coweta. Some of Coosaude, Tuskegee, Coweta, and Tallahassee had their houses burned, and their stock and provisions destroyed; some few to a considerable amount, but mostly to a trivial one."

I refer to this, to prove that the estimate was designed to cover claims of every description; because it is not a very certain and clear matter that they were entitled to indemnity for the land. If it was, who would say that $60,000, or even $85,000, was a sufficient indemnity for eight millions of acres? Here was a war in which the tribe engaged, and when the United States made peace with them, they ordered the commissioners to exact an indemnity in the shape of lands, and in exacting it some losses fell on the friendly Indians; and for the purpose of satisfying them, not perhaps because the Government thought the tribe, in its tribal character, was not responsible for the injuries inflicted, but for the purpose of satisfying and compensating that portion of the tribe which was friendly to this Government, it was disposed to give them such amounts as it thought would be enough to settle all their claims of every description. That was estimated at $85,000, and that sum was appropriated. Colonel Hawkins thought a less amount would have satisfied them. I think some further evidence as to some larger claims came in, after the report of Colonel Hawkins was made, and the committee determined to be liberal in the matter, and thought they were making a liberal settlement when they appropriated $85,000 to be paid to those Indians.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The very language in which Colonel Hawkins alluded to that claim, shows that it had reference to the land, and not to the claim for losses. He says, "I believe, at the time of drawing the lines of the treaty, $60,000 would have been received as an equivalent." Now, this expression, "as an equivalent," occurs in two other documents. It occurs in a previous part of this letter, and shows to what it applies. He says that they complained that the exchange of land for the 8,000,000 of acres which were taken from them, was not an equivalent; and this was an obstruction which they urged against the signing of the treaty; and it will appear from the letter of Colonel Mitchell, that months before the signing of the treaty, they had been taking an inventory of these very claims, so that they constituted no cause of complaint at the time of the treaty. But the fact that 8,000,000 of acres of land had been taken from allies and friends of the United States, for which they did not think they had received an equivalent in the lands given in exchange, was the cause of the murmurs which delayed the treaty from the 8th to the 9th of August, before they finally signed it. It is further shown in the instrument which they signed on the 9th of August, and which I have read to the Senate, and in which they say it is for the purpose of expressing their dissatisfaction at that point of the treaty, that they did not regard the exchange as an equivalent. Here is the very phraseology used in the letter of Colonel Hawkins, in which he says that $60,000 would have been taken as an equivalent at the time of drawing the lines of the treaty, showing distinctly that it was the spoiliations upon their lands, taking 8,000,000 at one fell swoop, for which they supposed they received no equivalent at all, in the forks of Coosa and Tallapoosa, to which they had reference when they speak of $60,000 as an equivalent. These other claims were based upon a letter of April 23d, and that was not the subject of contest at the time; so far from that, for months preceding, under instructions of Mr. Pinckney, the agent of the United States, they had been making an inventory of their claims, preparatory to the capitulation of Fort Jackson, in 1814.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas. I wish to ascertain what commission, or what individual, made the assessment of damages for each individual, according to the document to which he has referred, of 1817; and, further, to ascertain, if I can, whether the assessment of damage for these various Indians had been made before or subsequent to the appropriation of the $85,000 that was made to satisfy their claims. If the gentleman can give me information on these points, I will thankfully receive it.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I can answer the Senator on these points. The schedule by which the amount of loss sustained by each individual was ascertained, was, in part, accomplished by an agent residing in the country during the war, who was Colonel Hawkins. He made a report, which was on the files of the Department at the time of the appropriation, by which he estimated that $100,000 would probably be sufficient. He states that his report was very imperfect, from the nature of the case, because many of the Indians had not come in from their fall hunt, and the estimate could not be completed until they had come in. In 1817, by the law of March 3d, the appropriation was made. On the 20th of March of that year, the Department transmitted the amount of money to the successor of Colonel Hawkins—Colonel Hawkins had died, and Colonel Mitchell was appointed his successor—and instructed him to withhold the money until he should take an inventory of all the claims, and then to distribute it pro rata among them, because, say the Department, it is possible that there are other persons entitled to the benefits of the law whose losses may not have been ascertained at the time of the appropriation. I have the reports of the agents, and the instructions issued to them, establishing these facts. The report of the successor of Colonel Hawkins was made in April, 1818. I can now answer the Senator from Kentucky precisely. For the purpose of making this abstract of claims, it appears that the Indians had been assembled together at three different councils; one was before the date of this report, the second was upon the first of July, 1847, and the other was upon the first of January, 1818. The different agents, it appears, had to resort to three different councils before they could get all the warriors and braves of the nation to come before them and make out a schedule of the claims. From the list furnished, it appears that it was made out at three different times; and the entire aggregate of the claims thus ascertained was the basis upon which was distributed, rateably, the general appropriation of 1817. It was confined neither to the class of those who first, second, or third in order assembled, and gave in their claims, but was distributed among the whole batch of them at different times, so that each one of the claimants received upon his claim forty cents to the dollar.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the Senator, at this particular point, explain what influence the treaty which was made with this friendly tribe of Indians in 1821 or 1822 had upon the claims of the Indians against the Government of the United States?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I can answer the question. The treaty of Indian Springs was made in 1825. It was the first made by the Government with the Creeks, in which they ceded all their territory east of the Mississippi. It was made by that portion of the party that had generally adhered to the fortunes of the United States in the war of 1814. It caused such dissatisfaction to the hostile Creeks that they rose and murdered a great many of the friends of General William McIntosh. A treaty was then made, in 1826, in which the United States set aside the treaty of Indian Springs, as having been made without the authority of the nation, but still stipulated for a cession of the territory, and in the fourth article $100,000 was stipulated to be paid to General McIntosh and his followers. That appropriation was paid—a portion of it at the time, and a portion about two years since—and has been distributed among them.

Mr. DAWSON. The question which I asked was, whether this claim was not then presented and adjusted under that treaty?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have examined all the treaties made between the Government and the Creeks since then, to see if this claim was alluded to in any shape at all.

Mr. DAWSON. Was it ever presented?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I find that it does not appear on the face of any treaty made since that time. I will further state to the Senator from Georgia, that the treaties made between the United States and the Creek Indians since 1817, when this appropriation was made, have always been made—except the solitary treaty of 1825—with a large majority of the nation who have never been friendly to, or taken any active influence in, prosecuting the claims of the friendly Creek Indians. These claimants have presented themselves before Congress, but could not awaken any interest among the majority of their nation, for the purpose of insisting on their claims at the time of the formation of the different treaties.

Mr. DAWSON. What I desire to know is, whether, in the treaty made at Indian Springs with McIntosh and his portion—the friendly portion—of the tribe, this claim was then presented by McIntosh, the chief of the friendly Indians, to the commissioners, and asked to be considered?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have no evidence that it was then presented. It is not alluded to on the face of the treaty.

Mr. DAWSON. No evidence that it was ever asked for by them?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. No evidence at all. On the contrary, since 1825, when the treaty of Indian Springs was made, I find, by reference to a report from the Indian Bureau, that the Indians have been pressing this matter before Congress at several times since that period, showing that they have never received satisfaction for, and have never abandoned the claim.

Now, Mr. President, a solitary fact to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate, and upon which the Senator from Virginia relies so strongly, is this, that in the statement of Colonel Hawkins we are told that $60,000, paid on the drawing of the lines of the treaty, would have been taken as an equivalent. That it had no reference at all to the claim now before the Senate, is evident from the fact, that whatever credit may have been given to this agent of the United States—and I admit he had most ample means of information, for he had, as the Indians say in the solemn declaration which they signed previous to the signing of the capitulation, grown gray in their service, and they wishing to give him some testimonial of their gratitude had a reservation made for him of three square miles, which was stipulated in the treaty—this statement of his was made on the 29th of August, 1815; and in April, 1816, but a few months afterwards, he made the estimate by which he said $100,000, he presumed, would be enough, and advised that amount, at least, to be appropriated, but stated that the schedule of claims was necessarily imperfect on account of the hunters and warriors not being in from the fall hunt. So that whatever credit may have been accorded to the statements of this agent, on account of his great experience and thorough knowledge of all the facts, we have a right to resort to his subsequent declarations, in which he estimates the amount as still larger, and the statement of the subsequent agent of the United States, who completed and finally made out a complete return and schedule of these claims. The latter estimates the amount at $195,000, and this is the amount upon which the pro rata distribution was made. I can, therefore, admit all that is contended for by the Senator from Virginia, and the utmost that could be made out of the state of the facts which is presented to the Senate would amount to this: that one estimate amounted to $60,000; that five months afterwards the same agent estimated the amount at $100,000; and that, in a few months after that, by the successor of that agent, upon an actual statement of their claims in the presence of their chiefs, in which they were required to state the articles destroyed and their value, the whole amount of the claims was found to be $195,000; and this is the only, the first and the last, statement of the claims which was ever introduced here as full and complete in its character. I believe I have answered all the questions to which the Senator from Virginia has alluded, and shall not trouble the Senate any further.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I propose the following as an amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any one except to the Indian in person who may be entitled to the same in case he or she be now living, or in case of death to his or her children.

Mr. BORLAND. I approve of the object of that proviso. I am in favor of having such a proviso attached to all appropriations for the payment of Indians. I do not think, however, the Senator has made it sufficiently comprehensive. It provides only for the payment to the Indians themselves, or in case of death to their children. Now, this is a debt due to the Indian, and is part of his estate; if he should be dead, of course it goes to any of his heirs, no matter who they may be, whether his children or any one else. If we undertake to pay it at all as a debt, of course we must pay it to any of the heirs who may be living. If the Senator will say, instead of to the child, "to the legal heirs," I think it will meet the case.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to saying "his widow or child." My object is to prevent this constituting a fund to be bought up by speculators and agents. That is all I have in view. I would modify it by saying "to his widow or child."

Mr. BORLAND. Say "to his heirs."

Mr. BROADHEAD. Say "heirs-at-law."

Mr. HALE. I object to "heirs-at-law." That would bring in a set of persons whom I want to keep out. I suppose assignees are heirs at law.

Several SENATORS. No! no!

Mr. HALE. They would be legal representatives; I do not want to put them in.

Several SENATORS. Put in "to his widow, children, or heirs-at-law."

Mr. HALE. Well, I have no objection to that.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have not the slightest objection to the proviso which the Senator proposes. I hope it may be adopted. It can have no practical application, however, in this case; and I merely avail myself of the occasion which the Senator has offered to say that this claim is presented here by the intervention of no agent or attorney whatever, except the agent of the United States; and I shall regard the vote upon this amendment as at least solving one problem, and that is, whether it is possible for a claim of this character to get through without the intervention of paid attorneys or agents; for this has been presented under other auspices altogether.

Mr. BADGER. I am exceedingly glad that the Senator from New Hampshire has offered this amendment to the amendment. I am decidedly in favor of the original amendment; and the proposed modification of it which he offers will remove the only objection I can have to it. It will then be put in a shape that the money will be insured to the parties who are entitled to it, whose fidelity the Government intended to reward; an engagement which I think we ought to carry into effect; but we should adopt measures to prevent any portion of it—and certainly to prevent the larger portion of it, which happens to be the case nowadays—from stopping, in its transit, in the hands of agents.

The amendment to the amendment, as modified, is as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any one except to the Indian in person who may be entitled to the same, in case he or she be now living, or, in case of death, to his widow, children, or heirs-at-law.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. I do not mean to occupy the attention of the Senate long; but I am unwilling that the vote shall be taken on this amendment without stating briefly the reasons which induce me to oppose it. These claims are not founded upon any treaty. They rest on a demand made by the claimants at the time of the execution of the treaty; which demand Congress seemed to consider as constituting an equitable claim upon us, and that equitable claim they seem to have fully satisfied by the appropriation which they made in 1817, to an amount exceeding that which the then Indian agent thought the Indians would be well satisfied with at the time they made the demand. Now, these claims are spoken of as liquidated claims.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to make one remark? I desire to call his attention to one fact. The amount of $60,000 which Colonel Hawkins states to have been the amount with which the Indians would have been satisfied when the lines of the treaty were drawing, refers altogether, as my colleague, I think, has clearly shown, to any claims they might have had with regard to the amount of lands given them in exchange for those which they had given up. If the Senator will refer to the treaty—he will perceive Colonel Hawkins's letter refers to it—he will find nothing said about any claims except with regard to the lands. It does not refer to any other claims whatever. These claims for losses of property are not mentioned in it. It provides only for the disposition of the lands.

Mr. PEARCE. I think it appears from the documents which the Senate have before them, that the $60,000 does refer to the claims for indemnity.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Will the Senator allow me to correct him in one mistake. This claim was made at the date of the treaty. It was not founded upon the treaty, but was urged as an equitable claim against the Government afterwards. I wish to remind the Senator that the treaty was made August 1, 1814. This claim is founded on the letter of April 23d of that same year. It has the sanction of the treaty, for it was a letter of General Pinckney to Colonel Hawkins, who was in the confidence of the friendly Creeks, stating the terms on which peace would be made, and asking the intervention of the friendly Creeks as messengers to the hostiles to get them to come up and capitulate, telling them for that purpose, and as an inducement to these new exertions of theirs in favor of peace, that in the arrangement of the ceded territory their claims for land would be received, in addition to which their warriors would be pensioned, and all their property lost or destroyed during the war, would be paid to them. That was some five or six months before the capitulation. As soon as they received these terms, they set about to bringing in the hostile Creeks, and they resulted in the capitulation of 1814. They relied on the letter of Colonel Hawkins so exclusively, that they never mentioned it, except to have it attached to the treaty. The claim they urged was a claim for an equivalent for the difference between the eight millions of acres of land taken from them and that which they received, which they repudiated as such. The claim for which this appropriation is asked, arises from the letter, previous to the treaty of General Pinckney of April 23d, and did not form the subject of controversy at the time of the treaty.

Mr. PEARCE. That makes no difference in the view which I take of the matter. I only want to show that these claims are not founded upon a treaty stipulation. In relation to the claims to which the $60,000 are applicable, I find in the letter of Colonel Hawkins this language:

"Part of the vouchers were taken by Mr. Casseday, the General's secretary, and the remainder, given in since to the assistant agent at Coweja, which I have ordered on here. Whatever they may be, I will forward them as soon as received. I believe, at the time of drawing the lines of the treaty, $60,000 would have been received as an equivalent."

As an equivalent for what? For these claims for which vouchers had been given, not as an equivalent for the eight millions of acres of land, which had been taken from them. Certainly, it is not to be considered as an equivalent for that land. I understand that the lands situated in the fork of the rivers mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas, were granted to the friendly Creeks as an equivalent for the lands belonging to them, which were included in the cession of the whole tribe. I think it is very clear from this letter of the Indian agent, who speaks of the destruction of the property in their towns, that it was not land for which they asked the $60,000 as an indemnity, or for which they would have been willing to receive $60,000. It was for the destruction of their other property, or else the letter has no significance at all. Else, why should he speak as he does, in this connection, of the destruction of their towns, and movable property? The vouchers could not relate to the eight millions of acres taken from the friendly Indians. No vouchers were necessary for that. But this $60,000 is mentioned, as what the Indians would have been willing to take for the losses described in the same paragraph, and to which alone there is any reference—that is, “their houses burnt, their stock and provisions destroyed.”

The claims are spoken of as liquidated claims. How liquidated? by whom, and by what authority? This Government never gave any authority to any officer of theirs to ascertain and determine these claims, so as to bind the United States. They passed the act of 1817 appropriating $85,000 for the satisfaction of the claims; and, as the committee say, in full indemnity. It was so considered by Congress then, and certainly was so considered by them in 1824, as we must suppose from the report of the committee of that date. The Indian agent of that day was required to distribute the $85,000 among the Indians; and, in order to enable him to ascertain how the distribution should be made, he received from the Indians themselves their schedule of the claims. It does not appear that he made any inquiry into the amount of the property destroyed, and the claims they could properly urge upon the Government; but he took from the Indians this statement of losses, as they chose to assess them. It does not appear that any testimony was taken to verify the statement; but if it had been, it was an unauthorized act, or authorized only for the single purpose of enabling them to make a distribution pro rata of the money appropriated as a reasonable indemnity. In no sense, therefore, can they be said to be liquidated claims, because liquidated claims must be determined and ascertained by some competent authority, and there was no competent authority here. Therefore, I think it is altogether an error to speak of them as liquidated claims. They were indefinite claims, not ascertained, nor attempted to be ascertained, with any precision, which were settled by the appropriation of $85,000.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I wish to correct him in one remark. He says there was no authority from the Government to the agents to make the schedule of the claims. There is an express authority given in a letter, in which they are told, in so many words, to do so; and the report to the Government, and the two letters from Mitchell and Hawkins are in response to those instructions, and contain the estimates upon which reliance is placed here.

Mr. PEARCE. I have seen the letter, and have it before me; but it does not justify, I think, the inference of the Senator. It is from the Secretary of War to Mr. Mitchell:

“I inclose you a copy of the law making an appropriation of $85,000 to indemnify individuals of the Creek nation for losses sustained during the late war, together with a copy of the correspondence with Colonel Hawkins, and his estimate of damages sustained by them, respectively. These papers were laid before the Committee on Claims, and the law was predicated on them; but as it is general in its terms, it will be proper to pay the claimants.” &c.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Senator has got the wrong letter. I will read a letter which seems to have escaped his attention, of August 29, 1815, from the War Department, informing Colonel Mitchell, “that it is the wish of the President that you shall proceed to the liquidation of the claims of the friendly Indians on the principles of General Pinckney’s letter to Colonel Hawkins. The result you will transmit to the Department, to be laid before the President, for his ultimate decision and approbation.”

Mr. PEARCE. The President had no authority to bind the Government by any such order. No agent of the Government could be authorized, except by act of Congress, to liquidate claims so as to bind the Government; and if the President undertook, with that view, to make such an order, he transcended his authority. It belongs to Congress alone to authorize the liquidation of any claim against them, in such a form as to bind the Government. It appears, so far as I can gather from the papers, that these statements were received from the Indians. It further appears that the estimate which they made was reduced by their chiefs from $300,000 to $195,000; but it does not appear, so far as I can ascertain, that any proper sifting of the evidence was ever resorted to to ascertain what amount of these claims was really due. There we find that the Indians, at a subsequent period, seemed to have passed over this matter. The treaty of Indian Springs was made in 1825, and I have not found that anything was said at that time of these claims. When these friendly Indians were negotiating with the Government of the United States, there was the opportunity, the proper time for reviving these claims, if they had not been fully satisfied—if the Creeks had not supposed themselves to be satisfied, so far as the Government of the United States intended to satisfy them; but we do not find at that time that they set up any fresh demand for the balance of these alleged liquidated claims. Yet, neither in this treaty, so general in its scope, which provided for the removal of all the Creeks to the west of the Mississippi, (those of Tookaubatchee excepted,) nor in the treaty of 1826, which annulled that of the Indian Springs, and provided for their removal from the limits of Georgia, is any stipulation to be found touching these claims.

I have very great suspicion and distrust, I confess, of Indian claims, unless they be proved most satisfactorily. I know that Indian claims are often passed by the accounting officers here which, I think, ought not to be passed. I know that, under the law allowing bounty lands, a large number of claims have been proved up for these Indians. I know that, in a single batch of one hundred and eight cases, no less than forty-six have been proved up in the case of minor heirs of Indians, and each of these Indians had only one heir—left but one child—and in each case, I understand, a cross-mark is made—that cross-mark evidently that of an expert, not the crooked scrawl which an illiterate Indian would make. That is the character of Indian claims. They are stimulated and kept alive by agents, who derive vastly more profit from them than the Indians do, and who, I have no doubt, will get, out of this claim, two thirds, or half of the whole amount, if passed. I am not disposed to vote for claims which were not liquidated by proper authority—not vouched for by proper evidence, which have been standing so long, and have been repudiated by the committees of Congress so many years ago.

Mr. BOBLAND. Mr. President, I am sorry to continue this discussion; but I think the Senator from Maryland, as well as the Senator from Virginia, has clearly fallen into a misapprehension of the reference of Colonel Hawkins to the two classes of claims of the Indians upon the Government. I think so, from what I consider a very clear and satisfactory report made upon this subject by Mr. Brown, formerly the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he shows, I think beyond question, that the Committee on Claims, in 1824, to which the Senator from Virginia referred, clearly misapprehended, or failed to discriminate between the two classes of claims, for want of information before them at the time. The former Commissioner of Indian Affairs—Mr. Brown—states, in his report, that the Committee on Claims did not have the information before them at the time they made their report, and therefore they considered that the reference of Colonel Hawkins was to the property destroyed; whereas he made two estimates—two references: one to the indemnity which they required for the land—the difference between the land taken from them and that ceded to them; and the other to the property lost or destroyed during the war.

As to the authority of Colonel Hawkins to enter into that examination of the losses of the Indians, for the purpose of liquidating their claims, I think there can be no question—acting as he did under the authority of the War Department. My colleague has read the instructions of the War Department to him at that time. It is true, as the Senator from Maryland says, that the War Department had no authority to undertake to pay these claims; but the Senator must recollect that that act of the Department was recognized afterwards by the Congress of the United States, in making the appropriation of $85,000—they recognized the authority with which he had entered into that liquidation of these Indian claims, else they never would have made the appropriation of money to pay what he reported had been due. But Colonel Hawkins states, in substance, that his estimate was a conjectural one; that it did not embrace all the claims, for the reason that some of the Indians were not in from the fall hunt. On the death of Colonel Hawkins, Mr. Mitchell was appointed in his place, and succeeded him to all the duties formerly imposed upon him; and he was directed to go on with the liquidation, and ascertain with precision what amount was due.

The Senator objects to the mode in which the claims of the Indians have been liquidated by this agent. He says it was probably done in a careless way. But it appears that so far from being careless in admitting claims, it is clearly proved, that, although there were $300,000 of claims presented to Colonel Mitchell by the Indians, yet, together with the chiefs of the Indians, and at the suggestion of the chiefs, he reduced the whole amount to $195,000—bringing them down almost one half—not admitting one claim that was not clearly and fully proved.

There was no disposition on the part of the Indian chiefs, on that occasion, to permit individual Indians, either by agents or themselves, to fix on the Government any claim not justly due. The whole amount—$300,000—presented by the Indians, was so closely examined, and so strictly pruned down to what was actually proved, that the whole amount was reduced to $195,000. So far, then, from there being any foundation for the belief that the claims were presented, and loosely allowed by the agent, there is the best evidence for the belief that the Indian chiefs acted in good faith, and that the agent was faithful and strict in the investigation; and the amount ascertained and liquidated by him, ought to be assumed as the true amount, or at any rate, the smallest amount the Government could be supposed to owe the Indians.

I wish to refer again to the fact that the statement of Colonel Hawkins, that $60,000 would have been sufficient to satisfy the Indians originally, must have referred to the difference in the value of the land taken from them, and that assigned to them, from the fact that not one word is said in the treaty about the losses of their property. It is true, these losses of property were part of the consideration which induced them to make the treaty, and they are referred to in the letter of Colonel Hawkins, and by the Secretary of War, in his instructions to him, as a part of the consideration preliminary to the formation of the treaty. My colleague has already said it was one of the considerations on which they were brought forward and induced to treat at all; yet there was no provision made in the treaty for these claims, and they rested upon that, which has satisfied them more than the treaty itself—the assurances which they had received from General Pinckney, the authorized agent of the Government, at that time, to induce them to come in and make the treaty. They recognized it as constituting a claim upon the good faith of the Government; because it was the very foundation of the treaty itself. We are told, in another communication from Colonel Hawkins, not that $60,000 would be enough, but he conjectured, from his general acquaintance with the subject, that $100,000 would be required.

Now, if the Senator takes the estimate of Colonel Hawkins, that $60,000 would be sufficient to cover up the claims, he will find it difficult to get clear of his other estimate of $100,000. He cannot have referred to the same losses, but to different amounts. If $60,000 would have been sufficient in the first instance, there is no ground upon which he could have said that $100,000 would be probably the amount required.

The truth is, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has stated that Colonel Hawkins must have referred to two distinct classes of claims—one provided for in the treaty, the other, referred to by the letter of General Pinckney, in reference to which Colonel Hawkins was directed by the Secretary of War, to make a liquidation—one, in the estimation of Colonel Hawkins, being $60,000, and the other $100,000. But, even the $100,000 he states is conjectural altogether.

He died before a proper examination and estimate could be made. Colonel Mitchell succeeded him, and very thoroughly and carefully investigated the whole subject, and ascertained that, instead of $100,000, $195,000 was due. That was not as much as the Indians claimed, but what they proved—being little more than half what they claimed. So that, if there is any obligation at all on the Government, as was clearly recognized by the appropriation of $85,000 in 1817, to pay anything then, it must be for the whole amount proved by the Indians when called upon by the agents of the Government to prove their claims, and which those agents testify was clearly proved and substantially established before them.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It has been suggested to me that some doubts are entertained in consequence of the action taken at the treaty of Indian Springs. I have a document which possesses enough interest to command the attention of the Senate, which I shall read, to show that one of the chiefs, in 1842, still spoke of these as liquidated but unpaid claims, and spoke of the talk he had with General Jackson, when President. I submit it for what it is worth. It shows that the Indians did not regard the treaty of Indian Springs as forming any bar to the claim:

"MAIN CANADION, CREEK NATION, February 3, 1842."

"At a council of Creek chiefs and head men of the Creek nation, the following remarks were made to the undersigned by Opothe-yo-lolo, at the place and date above:

"Opothe-yo-lolo. You have been sent here by the President to see the Indians, and we have some business about which we are constantly talking. We have claims, and have made out and sent the papers in relation to them, and I will now just mention the heads of them. When you look over the papers you will see all about it.

"A number of years ago, (1813,) the Creeks went to war among each other, and the whites were called in, and General Jackson came in and settled the war, and gave the Indians a talk at the close of it.

"Afterwards we heard that General Jackson was made President, and a delegation of Creeks went to Washington to see him. When General Jackson talked to the friendly Creeks, at the close of the war, (1814,) he told them they had lost everything they had, and that they must have a list of everything they had lost made out, and they should be paid for it. And they understood that Congress had appropriated money to pay them, and that was the reason they went to Washington to see the President. The losses were all taken down, and the Indians received a little money for them; but they were not paid half what was due.

"When the Creek delegation went to Washington to see General Jackson, they said to him:

"You were once a general in command of the Army, and are now at the head of the Government. When you were a general of the Army, and in the Creek nation, at the close of the war, you told us at Fort Jackson that we had a fine scope of country at the West, and towards the big sea; and that we had a great many bad neighbors at the west and south; and that we should be paid for all our losses and claims.

"When we told the President what we just said, he told us that he had given us a talk a long time before; and that since then things were taking another turn, and that he would then give us another talk; and if we would agree to what he said, he would do what we asked him to do.

"When the President talked to us, he said:

"I gave you a talk a long time ago; but I did not think you were going to be so badly off as you are. You are very poor, and cannot live as you have lived heretofore, and you had better sell your country and go to the West. But if you don't choose to do that, you must have your lands surveyed, and each man have his own land; and those that choose to sell may do so, and move to the West.

"General Jackson told us that, if we would agree to this, and have our lands surveyed, and let those go West who chose, and if we would all go to the West, that after we should all get to the West, the door should be wide open for us to communicate with the Government, and we should have all our claims paid.

"General Jackson told us that he had the money then for us; but that he did not wish to pay it to us in the old nation, for there were a great many bad people of the whites there, who would get all our money away from us; and he did not wish to give our money to the white people.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, upon the amendment as amended, resulted—yeas 12, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Borland, Brooke, Chase, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Rusk, Sebastian, Smith, Soule, and Walker—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Berrien, Bradbury, Brodhead, Butler, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Feich, Fish, Fox, Gever, Hale, Hunter, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Shields, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, Upham, Wade, and Weller—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALKER. I move to amend the bill, by adding at the end of the last item of appropriation for the Indians, the following:

Provided, That no money, appropriated by this act for the benefit of any Indian or Indians, shall be paid to any agent or attorney, but such money shall be paid directly to the Indian or Indians respectively entitled to the same.

Mr. BADGER. I merely wish to inquire whether there is any appropriation in the bill for Indians?

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not think the amendment, as it stands, should be adopted. There is an appropriation in the bill to pay the St. Regis Indians, which was reported by the Committee on Finance. I do not know whether that money belongs to them individually or not. I cannot say as to that matter at this time; but I know it has been the custom of these Northern Indians to receive their money through their chiefs. These are a civilized people. They are an agricultural people. They are as capable of transacting their own business as are the people of Wisconsin or Missouri. I believe that is the only appropriation in the bill for Indians, and hence I can see no necessity for the amendment. But, Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer. I believe, however, that I cannot do it now with propriety. It is to carry out the treaty ratified yesterday by the Senate. Therefore, if there is no further amendment now to be offered, I would move that the Senate adjourn. But, in order to have an opportunity to offer the amendment to-morrow, I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed till to-morrow. If that is done, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that it would be better to allow the bill to be reported to the Senate. He can offer his amendment in the Senate.

Mr. ATCHISON. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BORLAND. I have an amendment to offer.

The PRESIDENT. No amendment can be received until the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is disposed of.

Mr. WALKER. In my opinion, the amendment which I have offered cannot affect the case stated by the Senator from Missouri, for the amendment simply declares, in the first instance, that no money shall be paid to an agent or attorney, but shall be paid to the Indian or Indians respectively entitled to it. If these Indians be entitled to the money, as a tribe, it will be paid to them as a tribe; if they are entitled to it per capita, it will be paid to them per capita. It is disjunctive—"Indian or Indians—and I am very confident that it cannot affect the case suggested. It simply excludes the intervention, between the Indians and the Government, of agents who generally get the larger amount.

Mr. COOPER. I think, Mr. President, that the adoption of this amendment may lead to mischievous consequences. Last year in the appropriation bill a similar provision was inserted, and in consequence of it the United States have been, or I presume will be, obliged to pay a claim of $48,000. The claim of Kendall & Co. has been before the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has been reported upon. It arises under a provision introduced by way of an amendment to the appropriation bill of last year. I state this in order that the Senate may know what they are about to do. The Kendalls were the attorneys and assignees of a portion of a claim, in consideration for their services rendered to the Western Cherokees, or Old Settlers. A provision was inserted last year that the department should not pay to the agents the proportion of the claim—five per cent.—to which they were entitled, but that they should look to the Indians for it. The whole amount was paid to the Indians, and they refused to pay anything to the attorneys and assignees. As a consequence of this, the United States are now obliged to pay to Kendall & Co. what was due to them, and upon the best and most thoroughly-understood principles of law. The United States intervened and prevented them from acquiring what was due to them, and hence became in equity liable for the amount. Now, I am afraid that this will have precisely the same effect. I think, at any rate, the honorable Senator had better withdraw it for the present. I have no objection at all to the introduction of a provision of this kind, if it be properly guarded, and which shall have operation in future upon such services. But if men, on the faith of assignments of a fund to be paid by the Government, have been laboring in order that justice may be done to these people, I say that to introduce an amendment into this bill, to prevent them from realizing what they have bargained for, may involve the United States or work injustice to these persons. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted until, at any rate, we have some understanding of it. I believe there is a provision in the bill, somewhat different in form, but, in substance, intended to have the effect which I presume is designed here.

Mr. BROOKE. I was going to suggest that the last section of the bill contains the substance of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, and is almost identical with it in words.

Mr. WALKER. Will the Senator from Mississippi be kind enough to read it.

Mr. BROOKE. The bill provides:

"That no part of the appropriations herein made for the benefit of any tribe, or part of a tribe of Indians, shall be paid to any attorney or agent of such tribe or part of a tribe; but shall, in every case, be paid directly to the Indians themselves, to whom it shall be due, or to the tribe or part of a tribe, per capita, unless the imperious interest of the Indians shall require the payment to be made collectively. Nor shall the Executive branch of the Government recognize any contract hereafter made between any tribe or part of a tribe, and any attorney or agent, for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or under this act."

Mr. WALKER. That being the case, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I desire to submit an amendment, to come in after the appropriations in the bill for the surveys of the public land, appropriating $15,000 for the survey of the northern boundary of Iowa.

The PRESIDENT. On what authority does the Senator offer it?

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. On the authority of an estimate of the Secretary of the Interior, made in pursuance of an estimate sent by the surveyor general to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior. I have a long letter in my hand on the subject, recommending that the appropriation should be made. The commissioner is now upon the ground, surveying the northern boundary of Iowa; and, unless this appropriation is made now in this deficiency bill, the surveyors will have to come from the field, and wait until an appropriation is made in the general appropriation bill. An estimate in this case was made out, and sent to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives; but it did not reach that committee until it was too late to be acted upon by the House, and then it was transmitted to this body through my agency. I found that it was not included in the bill, and I went to the Department in relation to the matter. This letter to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I believe explains it:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

WASHINGTON, April 23, 1852.

SIR: Understanding from the Hon. George W. Jones, of the Senate, that the Committee on Finance had received no estimate from the Department for an appropriation to continue the survey of the northern boundary of Iowa, I beg leave to submit herewith a copy of a communication addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on the 10th of February last, and to request that a further appropriation of $15,000 may be made, to meet the deficiency in the appropriation of 30th of September, 1850.

When this estimate was submitted to the House, it was not deemed necessary to send it to the Senate, as the bill had not then reached there; and it was supposed that the Committee on Ways and Means would, as a matter of course, forward to the Committee on Finance any special estimate or explanations sent to them during the pendency of the bill in the House.

I am, sir, with much respect, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM A. GRAHAM,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER,
Chairman of the Committee on Finance,
Senate of the United States.

Mr. HUNTER. No such estimate came to the Committee on Finance; but one of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means told me that it was ascertained that such an estimate had been sent to that committee, but that it had been lost.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that the letter which has been read shows that an estimate has been furnished, which brings this within the rule as an amendment proper to be offered.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no doubt that there was an estimate.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. My amendment is to insert the following:

For determining, running, and marking the northern boundary of the State of Iowa, on the parallel of 43 degrees 30 minutes north latitude, in addition to the appropriation heretofore made for the same object, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. I have an amendment which

I wish to offer. It is to add at the conclusion of the appropriation for the Collins line of steamers the following:

Provided, That the proprietors of said line of steamers shall receive on board of each ship of said line an officer of the United States Navy, whose duty it shall be to have entire charge of the United States and Royal mails carried on board of said ship to and from the United States and England; that said proprietors shall support, free of all charge to the United States, the above-named officer during the time he shall be attached to said ship; that the officer so acting as mail officer shall be selected from the list of passed midshipmen by the Secretary of the Navy; that said proprietors shall provide accommodations in every respect equal to those provided for first-class passengers, for the above-named officer; and he shall have, further, for his exclusive use, a mail room, with secure lock and key, and a mail boat, both of which shall be subject to his orders; and that the said officer shall receive no pay in addition to his regular pay for sea service, but while acting as mail officer as aforesaid, said officer shall be allowed the pay of sea service.

I have a few remarks to make upon this subject, but I suppose the Senate is somewhat fatigued, and I therefore move an adjournment.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senator will move to postpone the subject, so as to allow me to have the opportunity of laying a resolution on the table.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I withdraw my motion, and move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I hope that motion will not be agreed to. I think the Senator from Arkansas does himself great injustice if he thinks the Senate can be frightened into adjourning by being threatened with the infliction of a speech from him. I know that we shall listen to him with a great deal of pleasure; and I can assure the Senator that I would rather hear a speech from him to-night than to-morrow morning. I hope we shall have the speech now.

I think we ought to get through this deficiency bill. I think we ought to get rid of it before the Baltimore Convention sits. [Laughter.] I beg to assure Senators that I am in earnest about this. [Renewed laughter.] I say it for this reason: If we do not get rid of this bill before the meeting of the Baltimore Convention, we shall not get rid of it before some time in July, because there are a good many of us—some of us who are not candidates, as well as some who are—who will go down to Baltimore during the sitting of the Convention. There will be nothing done that week.

Mr. BADGER. Then there will be the Whig Convention afterwards.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir; then the Whig Convention will soon come on. I did not know that my friend from North Carolina felt so anxious about that, but it seems that he does. Some of us will go down there too; so that, if this bill is not disposed of before the Baltimore Convention sits, there is no knowing what will become of it.

Aside from these general considerations, I see that the Democratic Review, which is the organ, par excellence, of the Young Democracy, has issued, in advance, some sheets upon this subject, in which there is an admonition given to the Senate and to Congress, how they should dispose of this matter.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT. The proposition pending is to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that proposition debatable?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. HALE. I knew very well that South Carolina does not take much interest in these Conventions. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. HALE. Hence, I can understand why the honorable Senator wishes to cut me short. But I appeal to the Senate if these suggestions are not pertinent to the question of postponing this bill further. I do hope that we shall have a vote upon it at an early day. I care as little as any Senator how it is disposed of. But I think it is due to the Government, and due to the country, that we should vote upon it at some time or other.

Some of us middle-aged men do not know exactly where we belong—whether to the "Old Fogy," or to "Young America." But I was about to say to the Senate, that this matter of the Collins line of steamers had entered so much into the politics of the country, that the Democratic Review, which is the organ par excellence of "Young America," has issued, in advance of its regular day of publication, some sheets, which have been sent on here in relation to it. We had no premonitory symptom that that was about to come. Unlike the Senator from Arkansas, who has given us notice that he proposes to enlighten us upon the subject, they come right down upon us, and intimate that this matter enters very largely into the politics of the country. If it be so, I ask if it is not necessary to a fair settlement of these matters that they be disposed of before the Conventions sit? because if the bill is not disposed of by that time, there is no knowing when it will be disposed of. There is no knowing how some of us will feel after these conventions adjourn. There is no knowing whether we shall all feel as disposed to go to work in earnest, and accomplish the business of the country as we do now. Some of us, who are full of buoyant hopes, may come back with the weeds of disappointment hanging about us. I think, that while we are in this city, we had better settle this bill, and we can do it more easily at this time than at any other. For this reason, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who has charge of this bill, will urge a late sitting to-day, and to-morrow, and the next day, so that, to say the least of it, we may dispose of this matter this week. For myself, I am willing to sit as late as anybody, and I shall vote against adjournments just as long as the chairman of the committee who has the bill in charge, will stick to it.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, I have but very little to say on this amendment. I stated, in the course of my remarks the other day, that this company had failed to comply with its contract in several particulars, and thereby had saved a considerable amount in their expenses. Among the items mentioned by me at that time was that of failing to receive and carry upon each of their ships four passed midshipmen, as the contract required, and one mail agent; and that they had failed also to furnish an apartment on board the ships for the proper conveyance and care of the mails. Now, I have been unable to learn why they failed to comply with their contract in these particulars; and I propose this amendment for the purpose of remedying, to some extent at any rate, what I consider a wrong done by them in failing to comply with these conditions of their contract. In the commencement of the service of these ships, some officers of the Navy were received on board—how many I do not know. But very soon that was discontinued. I learn, from an officer of the Navy who was on board one of these ships, that the company failed to provide a room for the mails, and that the mails were thrown carelessly, without much attention, into a common room with the baggage, where the passengers and every one else had free and common access; and that there was no one on board the ship to take special care of the mail, and see that it was properly and faithfully carried across the Atlantic. I consider this wrong, and I have offered this amendment to remedy to a certain extent that wrong.

The amendment requires that the company shall receive on board of each of these ships, a mail agent, who shall be an officer of the Navy of the United States, to superintend and take charge of carrying the mail in these ships; and it requires the company also to provide a suitable and convenient apartment for the keeping of the mail. It was urged at the time when the first appropriation was made—when the contract was made for these vessels, that a certain number of officers of the Navy should go on board them, that they should be trained to the management of steamships such as they would have to manage in the event of war. It was deemed a very important provision, that each ship should take four officers of the rank of passed midshipmen on board of them; and at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, these officers might be changed from time to time, so as to allow all the officers of that grade to have a proper and efficient training in the management of these ships, preparatory to their use and management by our officers, if they should have to be taken for war purposes. The failure to comply with that part of the contract—the failure to place these officers on board of these ships, has been an important element in the estimate which has been made of the character and value and purposes of these ships. I consider it next in significance to the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina, to show that these ships are not now regarded as ships-of-war, or capable of being made such, and are not looked to for any such purposes. I consider the failure to comply with this part of the contract, as next in significance after the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina, to show that the object is to cut off even the seeming connection between these ships to the Navy. They do not now provide for the training and disciplining of our officers, to take charge of them in case of their being used for the purposes of war.

This amendment does not go to the extent of supplying that defect, or remedying that wrong; but it goes to the extent of doing all with regard to them that I think now is seriously intended to be done, and that is, to make use of them as mail steamers only, and to provide for the proper and safe conveyance of the mail, under the direction of an officer of the United States. The failure to comply with the contract in this particular, I have been utterly unable to understand. There stands the contract, in itself equal to an act of Congress, because it was made under the authority of an act of Congress, and not subject to be changed, except by the same authority that brought it into existence. No such authority has been given by an act of Congress, that I know of. I can see, therefore, no objection that can or ought to be urged to this amendment by the friends of this line—those who desire to sustain it; because even with this provision, it exempts the proprietors from the expense of carrying on board of each ship, four officers of the Navy of the United States. It goes to the extent of recognizing them as mail steamers, and provides for the safe carrying of the mail upon them as such, and so far as an act of Congress can negatively do so, it recognizes their exemption from that part of the contract which requires them to carry four officers, and will give them at least some color of lawful authority for disregarding their contract to the extent to which they have already disregarded it.

Mr. RUSK. The original contract provided, that the officers of the Navy should be received on board these ships. It was found very soon that the provision answered no good purpose. Disagreements grew up naturally, as every man could see they would grow up, between the managers of these ships and these officers. Hence, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized by law to dispense with that provision of the contract, if he chose to do so; and he did dispense with it.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the Senator refer me to the act of Congress authorizing the Secretary to dispense with it?

Mr. RUSK. I would do so if I had the act by me. I am certain, however, that authority was given, and this requirement was dispensed with. Now, it is sought by this amendment to make it obligatory upon the company to carry a midshipman in every one of these ships—to do what? To take charge of the mail.

Mr. BADGER. A traveling postmaster.

Mr. RUSK. What will this traveling postmaster have to do? The mails are put on board the ships; they are locked up there; they remain in safe custody of the officers of the ships. Now, what object, in the name of God, can be accomplished by putting these midshipmen on board the ships? They will have nothing on earth to do; but they will remain there in perfect idleness. A room is to be fitted up for each of them. They are to be made a sort of aristocrats in the ship. What will be the consequence? Is it necessary to raise up your midshipmen in idleness, requiring them to perform no service at all, and giving them aristocratic notions, by putting them in separate rooms on the first footing? If that is the case, why then there would be some propriety in the amendment. If it is adopted, it will create great embarrassments, but it will be no benefit to the steamships, no benefit to the midshipmen, and certainly no benefit to the officers.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, I have no reply to make to that portion of the Senator's remarks with regard to the aristocratic feature of this proposition. If I believed there was any such feature in it, I should be very willing to strike it out, and let the aristocracy of the concern rest alone with this company, whose claim seems to be regarded as paramount to the interests of the Government and the Post Office Department. An officer of the Navy of the United States, it seems to me, cannot be considered as being placed in a very aristocratic position, when he is placed on the same footing with the first-class passengers who go on these steamships. Certainly, if he goes there as an officer of the Government at all, he is entitled to be treated as a gentleman—treated as other passengers of respectability on the ship are treated. I cannot see how it would make him an aristocrat.

The Senator says there is no use for these officers on board these ships. I beg leave to differ with him in regard to that; and I wish to state the reason why I think there is use for them. I have stated that there is no secure room fitted up on board these ships, with lock and key, for the purpose of carrying the mails safely. I have stated this on the authority of a respectable officer of the United States Navy, who knows it personally. A room of this kind is not prepared; the mails are thrown in loosely with the baggage; and free access is had to these rooms, backward and forward across the Atlantic, by any one on board the ship who has any baggage or anything in the room. And the same officer states another fact, that so far from all the mail matter being carried as mail matter in these ships, the pursers of these ships receive and carry mail matter as individuals; packages of various kinds are placed in their charge, and carried backward and forward, and delivered.

The object of the amendment is to correct these evils; to provide for the safe-keeping and carrying of the mails; and to see, also, that all the mail matter is put into the hands of the proper officers, and carried in the mail; and that other people do not violate the Post Office arrangements, and thereby deprive the Department of the full amount of revenue to which it is entitled.

The Senator from Texas says that the law authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to dispense with the services of these midshipmen on board these ships. I stated that, if there was such authority, I had never seen or heard of it. If the Senator can refer me to it, I shall be very glad to hear it.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from Texas states the fact.

Mr. BORLAND. It may be so; but I am not aware of it; I looked at the contract, and saw its provisions, and I have seen no legislation in regard to that point since. Was there any special act of Congress passed for this purpose?

Mr. HUNTER. That provision was inserted in one of the appropriation bills last year.

Mr. BORLAND. Then, sir, I am wrong upon that point, but I am not wrong in this, that it adds to the value and force and significance of the proposition of the honorable Senator from North Carolina to separate these ships from the Navy. It cuts the last link, and fully establishes, as far as an act of Congress can establish, the fact, that they are not a part of the Navy, and that they are not intended to train our naval officers to the duties of managing and commanding steamships of war, but that they were to be put into the hands of civilians altogether, having no connection with the Navy or any duties performed by the Navy. It shows that they are to have no influence in training the officers of our Navy, and, as I think I did show, at least to my own satisfaction, the other day, they are not capable of being converted into ships of war. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Brodhead, Brooke, De Saussure, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Sebastian, Soule, and Underwood—11.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Bradbury, Bright, Chase, Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Downs, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Toucey, Upham, and Wade—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I have an amendment which I wish to offer now. It is a very small matter, and I should be very much pleased if the Senate would now adopt it. I offer it with the consent of the Committee on Indian Affairs, before whom the matter has been investigated, who have unanimously reported in favor of it, both at the last and at the present session.

The amendment is to insert—

For payment to James M. Marsh, to cover the loss of his property, destroyed by a band of Sioux Indians in the month of July, 1849, while extending the second connection line of the public surveys in the State of Iowa to the Missouri river, under contract with C. H. Booth, Surveyor General of the United States, $1,200.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM in the chair.) The Chair is under the impression that, under the rule, this amendment is excluded, as it provides for a private claim.

Mr. JONES. This gentleman was a Government surveyor. He was executing a contract under the Government of the United States. His property was taken from him by the Indians while in the discharge of his duties as Government surveyor, and this payment is guaranteed to him under the intercourse law of 1834. Under these circumstances, I think this ought not to be considered as a private claim. If it is ruled out upon that ground, I shall not press the matter now, but I shall offer the amendment when the rule is changed, which I hope will be done to-morrow, as I understand that my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] intends to offer an amendment to the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the case came within the principles of the intercourse law it might come within the provisions of the rule which says that—

“No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.”

But the impression of the Chair is, that this is strictly a private claim, and that it is therefore excluded by the rule.

No further amendment being offered, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring with the amendments made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BADGER. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. CHASE. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to lay on the table informally, and have printed, an amendment which I intend to offer, in regard to the Collins line of steamers. It is the same amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was ordered to be printed informally.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. BADGER, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the thirtieth rule be amended, by striking out therefrom the following words: “and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate.”

RAILROADS IN MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA.

On motion by Mr. BROOKE, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill granting lands to the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, in aid of the construction of certain railroads therein; and having been amended so as to conform to similar bills heretofore passed, it was reported to the Senate, the amendments were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 25, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the call of the committees for reports.

Mr. OLDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit a motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of House bill No. 144, for the purpose of having it referred back to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. To what does the bill relate?

Mr. OLDS. It is to regulate the postage on newspapers.

There being no objection, it was accordingly

Ordered, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 144, to amend an act entitled “An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes,” passed March 3d, 1851, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution, which I ask may be read for information.

It was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if, at the time of the liberation of the Irish exiles, a national ship happen to be in the neighborhood of Australia, the President is requested to proffer it to them as a benefice to them.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object, and ask for the execution of the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALL. I wish, before proceeding to present reports from the Committee on Public Lands, to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House bill No. 120, authorizing certain soldiers in the late war with Great Britain to surrender the bounty land drawn by them, and to locate others in lieu thereof, was yesterday referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I do not wish to consider the motion now, but only to enter it for future consideration.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions, and that the same be laid on the table, viz: Of Rebecca Davis; of John Edgcomb and William Davis; of Joseph Dacre, on behalf of the heirs of Y. J. Thoron; of Samuel Lake and other citizens of New York, praying that land warrants may be made assignable; of Nathan Averill, for a grant of land; of citizens of Montgomery, Philadelphia, and Cumberland counties, Pennsylvania, praying for a modification of the bounty land act; of citizens of Wyoming county, New York, of citizens of Michigan, of citizens of Wyandotte county, Ohio, of citizens of Germantown, Pennsylvania, of citizens of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, of citizens of Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, of citizens of Onondaga county, New York, in favor of a modification of the bounty land act; of officers and soldiers of the war of 1812, of citizens of Maryland, praying that the benefits of the bounty land act be extended to the men of Barney's flotilla; of sundry other petitions relative to a modification of the bounty land act; viz: of officers, soldiers, seamen, marines, &c., of the war of 1812, from Philadelphia, of citizens of Morgan county, Virginia, of the Pennsylvania Volunteers in the war of 1812, of citizens of Union county, Pennsylvania, of citizens of Berks county, Pennsylvania, of citizens of Oswego county, New York, and of Northampton county, Pennsylvania.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Matthew Peppy, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of sundry petitions of citizens of the States of Pennsylvania, Maine, Connecticut, New York, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, Delaware, and Ohio, in favor of a grant of public lands to actual settlers; and the petitions of sundry citizens of the States of Massachusetts, Wisconsin, New York, Illinois, and New Hampshire, in behalf of the Western Farm and Village Association; and that the said petitions be laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of citizens of Oregon, praying the purchase and survey of a portion of the country east of the Cascade Range; of citizens of Illinois, praying for a grant of land in aid of a railroad from Chicago to Lake Superior; of citizens of Indiana and Illinois, praying for a grant of land in aid of a railroad from Lafayette, Indiana, to intersect the eastern branch of the Illinois Central Railroad; of citizens of St. Louis, Missouri, relative to the public domain south of the River des Peres, and adjacent to the Jefferson Barracks; of citizens of Ohio, in favor of a grant of land in aid of the construction of a certain plank or macadamized road in Morgan county in said State; of Edward Moran, the resolutions of the Mayor and Aldermen of Savannah, Georgia, in favor of a grant of land for the benefit of the insane; the petition of citizens of Hamilton county, Ohio, relative to the organization of companies of military colonists; and the petition of William Williams, of Johnson county, Indiana; and that the said petitions and resolutions be laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of citizens of Washington county, Ohio, in favor of a grant of land to the Independent School Association of the Commonwealth of Wesley; the petition of citizens of Wisconsin, relative to an extension of the right of preemption on the Menomonee tract; and the petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, in favor of a grant of land in aid of the Pittsburgh and Erie Railroad Company; and that the said petitions be laid on the table.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, of James Elliot, of Indiana, of citizens of Vermont, of the New York city Industrial Congress, and of citizens of North Carolina, in favor of a grant of land to actual settlers, and that the same be laid on the table.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the usual number of the report of the Commissioners of the General Land Office be printed for the use of the said office, and that a like number of the report of the Surveyor General of Oregon be also printed for the use of the General Land Office.

Mr. H. said: That resolution is reported at the indication of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. The Commissioner states that it is important that we should pass the resolution ordering these reports. The usual number, I believe, is one thousand copies for the Commissioner, and one thousand for the use of the General Land Office.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The rules require that extra numbers of any document shall go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALL. The resolution does not call for an extra number, but for the usual number.

Mr. JONES. It is for an extra number. The usual number is one copy for each member of the House and Senate, and for the use of the two Houses. All beyond that are extra numbers, and a motion to print them must go the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. That being the state of the case, the resolution will be referred, under the rule, to the Committee on Printing.

TAX ON LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill, No. 266, giving the assent of Congress to the State of Missouri to impose a tax or taxes upon all lands hereafter sold by the United States from and after the date of such sale; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HALL. I ask that the bill be read through.

It was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no objection to the provisions of that bill. I think they are right. But, if I mistake not, there is a bill on the Speaker's table, from the Senate, for the same purpose, and not differing materially from this. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri the propriety of asking the consent of the House to take up the Senate bill, and pass that instead of the one now introduced from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALL. It is, I believe, precisely the same. And I would prefer to pass the Senate bill, if I can get the consent of the House to take it up.

Mr. JONES. It will be economizing time if the House will allow it to be taken up.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to inquire if economy is justice? I want to know whether this bill proposes to allow the lands already sold by the United States to be taxed? If it does, I am opposed to it.

Mr. HALL. I will tell the gentleman what I understand to be the effect of the bill. The language is, that "the consent of Congress is hereby given to tax lands hereafter sold." I therefore suppose that it does not affect those already sold. I will state further, that this bill only places Missouri upon precisely the same footing with all the other new States of the Union. Every new State except Missouri has the right to tax lands sold by the United States from and after the day of sale, and this bill only provides that she shall occupy the same position as the other new States.

The SPEAKER. The bill of the Senate can be taken up only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNCAN. I object.

Mr. HALL. I will then ask that this bill may be put upon its engrossment.

The bill was then read through, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and having been engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

PRE-EMPTION ON UNSURVEYED LANDS.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, Senate bill No. 331, entitled "An act to grant to certain settlers on the Menomonee purchase north of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, the right of preemption."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the bill and the proposed substitute read?

Mr. HALL. I desire to have it read through, as the passage of the bill is a matter of importance to the State of Wisconsin.

The bill and substitute were accordingly read by the Clerk.

Mr. HALL. The Senate bill provides that a certain class of settlers upon the public lands in the State of Wisconsin, on that particular tract of land known as the Menomonee purchase, before it was surveyed, shall have the right of preemption upon one quarter section of land, upon the terms specified in the bill. The Committee on Public Lands thought it was right that the settlers upon this portion of the lands in Wisconsin should have a preemption right, as provided for in the Senate bill; but the committee thought further, that it was also right that all settlers upon unsurveyed public lands, whether in Wisconsin, or in any other portion of the country, should have the right of preemption. They therefore have proposed, as a substitute to the Senate bill, a bill providing for preemption rights upon all the unsurveyed public lands in the United States. The Committee on Public Lands propose nothing novel in their substitute. All of the preemption laws, I believe, which ever have been adopted by this Government, save and except only the act of 1841, give rights of preemption to settlers upon unsurveyed public lands. This substitute of the Committee on Public Lands only proposes to return to the old wholesome practice of the Government in reference to settlers upon the public domain. The committee, sir, can perceive no reason why the individual who settles upon the unsurveyed public lands, and there expends his time, his labor, and money, and makes valuable improvements, should not be protected from the speculator, as well as the man who settles a few months later, after the lines shall have been run.

These people on the Menomonee purchase say, and I suppose say truly, that they have spent their all in making improvements, of a very valuable character, upon these lands. All the privilege they ask is, that they may be entitled to enter these lands at the price of $1.25 per acre. It seems to me that this principle is so manifestly just, so manifestly right, that it cannot require any further explanation from me. The gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. EASTMAN,] however, is more familiar with the facts, and can impress the justness of the bill more strongly upon the House than anything I can say.

Mr. EASTMAN. I do not wish to make a speech upon the bill, but to state briefly the facts in relation to it, which I think will be sufficient to convince every gentleman upon this floor, of the justness of its provisions.

By the treaty between the Government of the United States and the Menomonee tribe of Indians, by which the lands known as the Menomonee purchase were ceded to the United States, these Indians were to remove and vacate these lands at a certain day. The President of the United States, at the solicitation of the Indians, extended that time of removal until the first day of June, 1852. Between the time that they were to have removed, by the terms of the treaty, and the time they are to remove now, under the permission of the President of the United States, settlers have gone upon that land in good faith, improved it, made their farms, erected their dwellings, and, in fact, small towns have grown up on the rivers, until a portion of that tract is almost as densely populated as any part of the State.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has decided in the case of these settlers, that because the President of the United States extended the time of the removal of these Indians, that these lands were not subject to preemption, and therefore the settlers upon these lands acquired no right of preemption by virtue of their settlement. This decision renders legislation upon the subject necessary to secure the rights of these settlers, and this bill has been introduced into the Senate, and passed for their relief. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom it was referred in this House, have thought proper to make this bill general in its operation. The time for the removal of these Indians expires on the first day of June, 1852, and hence the immediate necessity for the passage of this bill. I will not make a speech, as I said before, but I simply state these facts, and hope the bill will meet the favorable consideration of the members of this House.

Mr. BELL. I wish to inquire of the gentleman who reported this bill, whether, if the bill as reported should pass into a law, it would interfere with the existing rights of preemption to lands which have been surveyed?

Mr. HALL. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio, I will state that the existing laws protect settlers upon surveyed public lands. This bill does not propose to interfere with the existing laws, further than to extend the right of preemption to persons who have settled upon unsurveyed public lands. And, of course, if this bill passes, the rights of settlers upon surveyed public lands would be still amply protected.

Mr. BELL. The present law, as I understand it, would not authorize a man to go upon a school section, for instance, and, by virtue of that settlement, claim the right of taking up some other tract. I wish to know whether this bill, now reported, would give him that right?

Mr. HALL. The provision of this bill in regard to that is this: that if a person who settles upon unsurveyed public lands should be found to have settled upon sections sixteen or thirty-six, reserved for school purposes, he will have a float securing him the right to select a quarter section of unoccupied land, out of any other section in the land district, by paying $1.25 per acre for it.

Mr. BELL. That is all the change proposed, is it?

Mr. HALL. That is all.

Mr. STUART. This subject of preemption rights is well understood by the House; and, in order that we may get along with the business of the House, I move the previous question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for a moment? I wish to make a few remarks.

Mr. STUART. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish only to say a single word. It appears to me that this is an important bill which this committee have reported, if I understand the chairman of that committee in his explanation of it. It is no less than a bill to throw into market all the territory of the United States. The whole of it.

Mr. HALL. No, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me state what I understand it to be, and then you can make your corrections. It gives preemption rights to settlers, not only upon surveyed lands, but upon all the unsurveyed lands in the United States.

Mr. HALL, (interrupting.) To which the Indian title has been extinguished.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To which the Indian title has been extinguished! And that is immense. The chairman says that the Committee on Public Lands can see no reason why this preemption right should not extend as well to the settlers on unsurveyed lands, as to those who have settled on surveyed lands. Now, I do not know the extent of the lands to which the Indian title has been extinguished, but I presume it is not less than a hundred million of acres. This bill would, therefore, throw into market, in addition to the lands now in market, one hundred millions of acres. I do not expect to show that to this House now; but I say this, that the most unfortunate policy ever pursued by this Government, in relation to the public lands, has been the bringing of them into market faster than the demand for settlement required. What is the consequence?—and the consequence is the reason why this proposition should not become a law. The consequence is, that you settle your country in spots and streaks all over. You spread your population to an immense extent, hundreds and hundreds of miles; and, in order to get your produce to market, you have to build roads and avenues of internal improvement—in other words, you have to add to the actual expense that of getting your produce to market, and to submit to all the inconveniences and injuries which result from a sparse and scattered population.

But another reason. In the name of common sense, how can gentlemen come forward here, with these propositions for grants to railroads—which lands they are compelled, by their charters, to sell within twenty years, and which if they do not sell them within that period, they forfeit—and then ask for the passage of such a bill as this? Who are you to sell these railroad lands to if you pass this bill? Do you not by your homestead bill give away to actual settlers the lands in the States already surveyed? And now you actually give away the whole domain, yet unsurveyed, by the operation of this preemption bill. And I ask how are you to fulfill the conditions of your grants to railroads—to sell the land within twenty years? You cannot do it. You must have settlers before you can sell them. In other words, you are taking away by this bill, and by your homestead bill, the very market which you must look to for the sale of your lands, in order to fulfill the conditions of your railroad grants.

I should be glad to vote for some of these railroad bills, but the friends of these bills, by this very measure, are destroying any prospect of passing them. I ask this House if there is a single railroad bill which has been reported here, which does not make the grant, upon the condition that the lands shall be sold within twenty years? I ask gentlemen again, to whom will they sell the railroad lands to? You have a certain limited market for your lands. You have a certain amount of population to supply. But if you throw open the whole public domain to actual settlers, upon the sole condition of occupancy, where are you to find a market for the lands granted by your railroad bills?

Mr. HALL. Allow me to correct the gentleman with regard to these railroad bills. Those bills require the roads to be completed within twenty years, but they do not fix the time within which the land shall be sold.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the course of a five minutes' speech—for I will detain the House no longer—it cannot be expected that I will consider the whole bearings of this question. I will say, however, to the chairman and members of the Committee on Public Lands, that never before was there brought forward, in any legislative body of the earth, measures so entirely inconsistent with each other as these land measures. It has been proposed at this session by the railroad bills to grant 40,000,000 acres of land for the construction of railroads, to be sold within ten years after the passage of the grants, and at the same time the market for these lands is destroyed by other bills, so as to render it impossible for the companies to fulfill the conditions of the grants, by the donations to actual settlers—the giving away of the whole of the public domain to induce people to emigrate West, not to settle upon the railroad land but upon other land. Now, by this measure you propose to throw into market some 100,000,000 acres more than there are at present. You propose to open the whole public domain to which the Indian title has been extinguished, and to give it away. Is it not a gift? A preemption right! When is the settler to be compelled to pay for it? He must settle upon it, but he may remain there a hundred years before it is surveyed. He can remain on it until it is brought into market before paying $1 25 per acre for it. Who can tell when the Government will bring it into market? Is it not known that there is more land in market now than can be sold for a great many years to come. This is inconsistent with the other land bills of this House, and their inconsistency is what I condemn them for. Gentlemen, in their anxiety in every sort of way to give away the public land, have destroyed their own measures, so as to render it impossible for any man to vote for them without stultifying himself.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I hope, sir, the vote will be taken to-day upon this bill. I will detain the House but for a single moment. In relation to the immediate object of this bill, so far as it is intended to protect the settlers in the State of Wisconsin, I beg leave to say, that if it is not passed before the 1st day of June, it will be of no benefit to the very class for which it is intended. Under the direction of the Government, the time for removing the Menomonees was extended until the 1st day of June, 1852. The settlers, not knowing that the President had extended the time, went on those lands and made improvements; and if this law is not passed before the first day of June, 1852, it need not be passed at all, so far as any benefit it is intended to confer on this class of settlers is concerned. One word of reply to the gentleman who has just taken his seat. Now, I would say that, if there were any class of the settlers on the public domain more meritorious than another, it is that class who go in advance of the settlements of the country—who are the early pioneers of the country, and who claim these public lands before they are surveyed, or before the United States has extended over them its territorial jurisdiction. What is the effect of this, sir? Why, that when they go and settle upon these public lands; when they have made valuable improvements; after they have induced others to follow them, and after the cultivation and the improvement of the public lands have been the result of their enterprise, the Government is called upon to have these lands surveyed, and to bring them into market. The result of that is, that the lands are sold, and the money goes into the Treasury of the United States, for the purpose of making improvements, and being expended in the very region of country which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has the honor to represent. When they go upon these public lands, they receive no protection from the Government; but after the lands are surveyed and brought into the market, the improvements and the labor they have bestowed upon these lands are protected to them by law; and I can say to that gentleman, that I have never known of any preemption law, except one, which has been referred to by the gentleman who reported this bill—the law of 1841—which does not extend the right of preemption to unsurveyed lands; that settlers upon unsurveyed lands are the very class we should protect, and the very class of persons we should induce to go in advance of the settlements of the country, for the purpose of enabling the Government to sell and dispose of the public domain—not as a gift, sir, but for a valuable consideration in dollars and cents. As I do not think anything will be gained by extending this discussion, I call for the previous question.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman withdraw his call for the previous question for one moment?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will, on condition that the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose it would be in order to move that the bill and amendment be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, so that we may all be enabled to perfectly understand the matter?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. FOWLER. It is very evident, Mr. Speaker, that this is an important bill. I am not sure but that, when I come to understand its provisions, I may vote for it. If it is right I will do so, but I am unwilling to act until I know more about the character of the bill, and its probable effect. Now, I will move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to order it to be printed, if the gentleman from Illinois, to whom I feel myself bound, will allow that motion to be submitted, for the purpose of having it brought fairly before the body.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I yielded the gentleman the floor for the purpose of explanation, and on the condition that afterwards he would renew the call for the previous question, and not for the purpose of submitting another independent motion.

Mr. FOWLER. I will not violate the implied pledge. I will not make the motion I have suggested. If the gentleman insists, he has the right of renewing the call. If the bill is right, the friends of it need not fear that it will not pass, after being properly considered. If it is wrong, they should not desire its passage. Will they not allow us to examine it? Will they not allow it to be printed, and laid upon our tables?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him a moment. I stated before, the necessity for immediate action upon this bill—that if it was not passed before the first day of June, 1852, it would confer no benefit upon the very class of settlers it was intended to benefit—the settlers in Wisconsin. For that reason I desire that it shall be acted on at the present time.

Mr. CARTER. I wish simply to ask the gentleman from Illinois one question. I wish to inquire if it is so important these settlers shall be protected, why is the bill not confined to them, instead of undertaking to revolutionize the whole land system by a general bill, such as is proposed by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. EASTMAN. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot give way for these discussions. If the necessity of which the gentleman from Illinois speaks exists, I would inquire of him whether it be greater than the necessity that right action should be taken upon this subject? If the previous question is to be called upon this bill before we can have an opportunity to have it printed and to read it, I hope it will not be sustained. I am not disposed further to occupy the time of the House.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the bill and amendment be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOWLER. I renew the call for the previous question, in accordance with the agreement I made with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Massachusetts had resumed his seat when the gentleman from New York was recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I yielded the floor on the condition that my call for the previous question would be renewed.

Mr. FOWLER. I felt bound to make that motion. It was merely an oversight that I did not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that, but the gentleman did not make the motion. He had resumed his seat when the gentleman from New York was recognized. The Chair must say that the gentleman from Massachusetts cannot take the floor from the gentleman of New York without his consent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the bill and amendment be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and that they be printed, and upon that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is a way of depriving me of the call for the previous question which I do not understand. I will know to whom I yield the floor again.

Mr. HALL. I will ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his call for the previous question. I will renew it. I desire to submit a few words in reply to the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I withdraw it on the condition that the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish, in the first place, to inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. SUTHERLAND] that my own State has no interest whatever in the passage of this bill into a law. The State of Missouri has been settled under the operation of a law almost precisely similar in its terms to the substitute now under consideration. Its citizens were permitted to settle on the unsurveyed lands, and to hold preemption rights thereon. And all the object I have in view in the passage of the present measure is, that those who may hereafter emigrate to the West shall be entitled to the same right and privilege as my own constituents. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SUTHERLAND] seems to think that this bill, were it passed, would throw open an immense tract of land to settlers, which otherwise would not be subject to settlement for a great many years to come. I will state, in reply to the gentleman, that if this bill passes it will then open to settlement no land but that to which the Indian title has been extinguished; and that the practice of the Government has always been, and I presume it will continue to be, to survey the public lands almost as soon as the Indian title has been extinguished; so that if this bill be not passed in a very few months, as much land will come under the operation of the preemption laws as will be subject to preemption if the bill were now passed. The only possible effect that it will have, as I stated in my first remarks, will be to protect the pioneers—those who first plunged into the forests, settled, and improved the land. That is all, sir.

It will not increase the amount of land subject to preemption one single acre.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How do these settlers go there, unless they go where they get the preemption right? Do they not go as trespassers and occupy lands upon which they have no right to settle?

Mr. HALL. I will inform the gentleman. They go as our people went to Oregon, before you passed the Oregon land law. They go as people went to California, and just exactly as people went to every new State in this Union. They go for the purpose of improving their condition without the authority of law. They go to render important services to the country as well as to ben-ent themselves, and they render services which this Government has always been bound and happy to recognize. That is the way they go.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the use of surveying lands?

Mr. HALL. I will tell the gentleman what is the use of surveying the lands? It is in order to fix exactly what amount each man will have without controversy and without litigation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Do they have it by settlement?

Mr. HALL. Yes, by settlement and purchase.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I wish the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to give me some information, as he is well informed upon this subject of public lands. I wish to ask the gentleman if a settler should have a dwelling upon one quarter section of land, and his plantation upon another, and some one should go and settle between them, whether he would be entitled to both quarter sections?

Mr. HALL. I will answer the gentleman. In the first place, it confers upon the settler, upon unsurveyed public lands, precisely the same rights, and no other, which the act of 1841 confers upon the settler upon surveyed public lands. The provision of the act of 1841 is, that no man shall have more than one quarter section of land. As to the case put by the gentleman, if a settler shall have his dwelling upon one quarter section, and his fields upon another, he will be compelled to take the quarter section upon which his dwelling is.

[A message was here received from the Senate by the hands of their Secretary, ASBURY DICKINS, Esq.]

Mr. HALL resumed. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SUTHERLAND] says that the true policy of this Government is to settle lands in a solid column, and not to have the sparse settlements which have heretofore prevailed in the settlement of the West. I do not know what sort of law, and what sort of arrangements may be necessary in order to accomplish the object which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has in view. I do know, however, that under the arrangements we have heretofore had—notwithstanding the argument of the gentleman from New York has been always urged against a liberal system towards the West—for his argument is nothing less, and it was urged when the first preemption law was pressed upon the consideration of the House—the settlement of the West has gone forward; and we know that, notwithstanding the evils which he says are incident to this state of things, the West has prospered more than any other country on the face of the earth. I am not, therefore, willing to abandon this system, and adopt another, in order to accommodate the views of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SUTHERLAND.] It is too late to adopt his doctrine now.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, and it is this. There are now pending before the Senate three or four propositions by which, if they are confirmed, we will acquire a very large territory from the Indians in Minnesota. I wish to ask the gentleman if these treaties are confirmed, if this bill does not open the whole of these lands to settlement before they are surveyed?

Mr. HALL. It does. I will state, however, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I presume the object of acquiring those lands and extinguishing the Indian title, is to open them to settlement; and as soon as the Indian title is extinguished, we will have them surveyed; and as soon as they are surveyed they are subject to the right of preemption. The only effect of this bill will be to protect those who settle upon the lands before they are surveyed—who are just as meritorious as those who settle upon them subsequent to their survey. Gentlemen inquire if lands in California will be subject to the operation of this bill? I answer, that the lands in California, which are not mineral lands, will be subject to the preemption under this bill, and this bill confers the right of preemption upon the terms conferred by the act of 1841. That expressly excludes from its operation mineral lands; and all lands in California, therefore, in which the gold mines are situated, and containing any other mineral, are not embraced in the provisions of the substitute proposed by the Committee on Public Lands. One word in reply to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BELL,] why it is, if our object be to protect settlers in Wisconsin, that other persons are included. I will tell the gentleman why. The Senate bill proposed to include nobody but the settlers upon lands in Wisconsin. The Committee on Public Lands thought that if it was right to protect settlers upon the unsurveyed public lands in Wisconsin, it was right to protect settlers upon the unsurveyed lands in Minnesota, Oregon, California, and Iowa. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BELL] does not like our amendment, let him vote it down, and vote for the bill of the Senate, and he will greatly protect the settlers in Wisconsin.

Mr. STUART. As the gentleman intends to move the previous question, I wish him to give me an opportunity of offering an amendment to this bill, that its provisions shall not extend to the State of California. Our whole system in regard to this State is undetermined. I have been looking to the act with regard to the effect of the preemption laws upon the mineral lands. The language is that the right shall not apply to any lands where mines are known to exist. I doubt not, there are many places in California where mines in fact exist, but where that fact is unknown. It is not a fair distribution of the property of that State, to allow it to be taken by preemptive right, until the whole policy in regard to it is settled. What I wish to propose in regard to this bill, is simply to add a short section, declaring that the provisions of this act shall not apply to any land in the State of California.

Mr. HALL. I have no objection to that amendment being offered, but I think it is entirely wrong. If I can yield the floor for the purpose of having it offered, I will give the gentleman an opportunity of doing so.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] that the morning hour has expired, and I hope he will insist upon the previous question, for the business of the past week, which was territorial business, ought to be now taken up and disposed of.

Mr. EVANS. Has the morning hour expired? The SPEAKER. It has not by nearly three minutes.

Mr. HALL. Before the morning hour shall expire, I move the previous question.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] will withdraw it.

Mr. HALL. I will withdraw it.

Mr. EVANS. I do not desire to occupy the time of this House. There have been already surveyed in the United States, and now subject to entry, countless millions of acres of land, as fertile land as can be found on the face of the globe—lands which are not settled, and will not probably be settled for a great many years. This being the case, why is it that this bill, and bills of a similar character, are pressed here? It is intended to disorganize the whole landed system of the country. The object of this measure is to overturn from the foundation all those settled principles in regard to public lands which have always governed us. The design is to grant to certain States of the Union, without regard to the rights of the remainder of these States, everything that lies in their borders. That design is fast approaching to its consummation, and its execution.

Mr. HALL. I will only state to the gentleman that I should be most happy to see the public lands ceded to the States in which they are situated, not upon terms unjust, but upon terms which are just to the old States.

Mr. EVANS. The terms of justice proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] strike no mind but his own. They are not such as will impress themselves upon any court of equity in this country. They are those which presume, and have always presumed, that everything has been denied to the land lying west of the Alleghany ridge.

Mr. ASHE. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. ASHE. I desire to call up the report of the Committee on Elections, made some weeks since. It is a privileged question, and therefore I ask that it be disposed of now.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills, which received the signature of the Speaker, viz:

An act to legalize certain entries of public lands made in the State of Florida;

An act for the relief of Sylvanus Blodgett;

An act for the relief of Robert Milligan;

An act for the relief of William Greer; and

An act for the relief of John W. Robinson.

Mr. EVANS resumed the floor.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I believe it is in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move that the House go to the business upon the Speaker's table. That is a motion for which a gentleman can be arrested in his remarks.

Mr. EVANS. He cannot arrest me for any other purpose.

The SPEAKER. Whilst the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina is one of privilege, still, under an express rule of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] cannot be driven from the floor by any such proposition. He can, under the rule, however, be arrested at the expiration of the morning hour for the purpose of submitting a motion that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. ASHE. That is the motion which I make.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I submit a question, whether, under the order made yesterday by which reports were to be called for one hour, a continuance longer than that time is not, necessarily, excluded by the very terms of the resolution itself, and whether that business is not arrested at the expiration of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be competent for the House to continue to receive reports from committees the whole day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not aware of that. I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE,] and to suggest to him the propriety of taking this election case up to-morrow or next day, and go to something else to-day.

Mr. ASHE. In answer to my friend from Tennessee I will remark, that I feel a very great indisposition to press this matter on the House when the House is not willing to take it up; but it has been now pending four or five months, and a report has been made in the House some three weeks. I consider it but an act of justice to the House that it should be considered. I must insist upon it as a privileged motion.

Mr. STUART. I believe it is now in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. STUART. I am aware of that; but is it not in order at the same time to submit this motion? I submit that while the floor cannot be taken from the gentleman from Maryland for any purpose except to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, yet that when that motion is submitted, and before the question is taken upon it, it is in order to move to suspend the rules, and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That has been the practice of the House by general consent, but the Chair doubts whether, strictly speaking, it would be in order until the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table has been disposed of.

Mr. EVANS. If the floor is left to me to-morrow, I am perfectly willing to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, or anything else.

The SPEAKER. The sense of the House as to the business it will prefer, can be as easily ascertained upon the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE.]

The question was then put upon the motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 126, noes not counted.

Mr. STUART. I now submit the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ASHE. I rise to a question of privilege. I have been informed, and I believe that a question touching the qualification and return of a member of this House is a question of privilege. I have made a report touching the qualifications of a member of this House, and as it is, therefore, a question of privilege, I hold that that question has a preference.

The SPEAKER. As a question of privilege,

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MAY 28, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 93.

the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ASHE] has a right to submit a motion to proceed to the consideration of that subject. It is clear, however, that the House has a right to proceed to other business, or to postpone it under the rules of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move to postpone the consideration of that question until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The House has not yet agreed to take it up.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move to postpone the consideration of the motion to take up until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That is rather a novel proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS. You can postpone any proposition that can be entertained.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I apprehend, sir, if it is a question of privilege, no motion is necessary to proceed to its consideration. The question comes up as a question of privilege, and is not necessary to be taken up by motion. I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Illinois, that it is certainly a question of privilege, affecting the right of one of the members of this body; but it is also competent for the House to postpone its consideration or commit it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is there a motion pending to postpone it?

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to postpone the motion to take it up.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. The Speaker has decided, I believe, that it is in order to postpone this question of the contested election.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. BAYLY. I move that it be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] has submitted a motion to postpone the consideration of the election case until to-morrow.

Mr. ASHE. I rise to a point of order. I have the floor upon a question of privilege, and while I am in possession of it it is not in order to submit a motion to postpone the case until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect the practice of the House upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois; but as it is very clear that the House has a right to postpone the consideration of this question of privilege, the Chair is of opinion that the right extends only to the motion to take up that subject; it is competent for the House to determine to do it or not. That is the opinion of the Chair, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not make the point of order that it is not in order to move to postpone it. That is in order. I do not raise that question at all, but the question that I raise is—

The SPEAKER. That it comes up without a motion—the Chair overrules that point. That is the view which the Chair addressed itself to, that although a question of privilege, nevertheless it is proper that the House should determine, by vote, when they will consider it. The gentleman from North Carolina moved to proceed to the consideration of the contested election case from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only want to understand the decision of the Chair, with a view to control my own action. Do I understand the Chair to decide that this is not a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes no such decision.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The effect of the Chair's decision, if I understand it correctly, is this: that while it is a question of privilege it does not come up, unless the House brings it up. Cannot the House bring up anything else? Is it then a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a question of privilege in this: that a motion to proceed to the consideration of this subject may be made at any other time, while all other business must come in under the rules, as prescribed in the book. That is the opinion of the Chair, and he thinks it is correct.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to suggest to the Chair, and to the gentleman from North Carolina, that this question of privilege has once been presented to this House, and a report has been made, and it is now before the House, and on the Speaker's table. It is not now a question of privilege, but it is a privileged question to move to bring it up. The gentleman from North Carolina is not entitled, therefore, to the floor to make an hour's speech, until the House agree to entertain the subject.

The SPEAKER. That is precisely the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ASHE. Do I understand the Chair to decide that it is in order to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Georgia?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is in order to entertain the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina, which is to proceed to the consideration of the contested election case from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded tellers upon the motion; which were ordered, and Messrs. ASHE and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the negative—ayes 53, noes 91.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire the unanimous consent of the House, to withdraw from the files of this House the papers of George Wright for the purpose of sending them to the Senate, where a bill has been reported upon his petition. The papers are connected with that bill.

It was so ordered.

Mr. STUART. I renew my motion to suspend the rules, and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order before the committee is the consideration of House bill No. 44, making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions, on which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, addressed the House an hour, in an argument against the position assumed in debate this session by Northern gentlemen, that the fugitive slave law, like any other law of Congress, was open to repeal; and also in controversy of the ground assumed by others that the compromise measures, being the law of the land, resolutions to reaffirm them were idle, if not mischievous. He utterly denied the right of repeal in one case, and maintained the propriety of reaffirming by resolution the finality of all these measures. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. CARTTER obtained the floor, and made some remarks in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY], in which he argued to show the futility of reaffirming by resolution the law of the land, with the view of giving to it any more force and permanency than the law itself can have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has arrived when, by the limitation of the House, debate closes upon this bill. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and the committee proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 45, making appropriations for naval pensions for the year ending 30th June, 1853.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I ask the gentlemen from Alabama to allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] to conclude his speech.

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot. The order of the House requires that the chairman should pursue the course he has.

Mr. CLEVELAND. By unanimous consent he can finish his remarks.

Mr. POLK. Unanimous consent is granted unless the gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do object. The gentleman can conclude his remarks on another bill.

The question was then taken, and House bill No. 44 was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee then proceeded to consider House bill No. 45, making appropriation for the naval pensions for the year ending the 30th June, 1853.

Mr. CARTTER concluded his remarks in regard to the compromise measures. [Mr. C.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, here obtained the floor, but yielded it to—

Mr. CABELL, of Florida, who moved that the committee rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the committee will indulge me, I will say that the bill under discussion is a bill making appropriations for the payment of pensions, and contains only an appropriation of $4,000, which I think no member of this committee will controvert.

Mr. CABELL. I rise to a question of order. I moved that this committee rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to make an appeal to the committee. I was simply going to ask the committee to lay aside the pension bill to be reported to the House, and let the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] have the floor upon the Military Academy bill, or the Indian appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent it can be done.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is not a debatable question, whether the committee rise or not.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not debating it. I ask that this bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass, and that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] be entitled to the floor upon the next appropriation bill.

No objection was made, and the bill was laid aside.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. CABELL, of Florida; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported, that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 44, being a bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year ending the 30th day of June 1853; and House bill No. 45, being a bill making appropriation for naval pensions for the year ending the 30th day of June, 1853, and had directed him to report the same to the House with a recommendation that they do pass. Also, that the committee had had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

The SPEAKER. The question will be upon the engrossment of bills No. 44 and 45, just reported from the committee.

There being no objection, the bills were severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, they were severally read a third time and passed.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent of the House, introduced resolutions of the General Assembly of Maryland, in regard to the fortifications on the Patapsco river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PRICE. I move that this House take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to that motion.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to take a recess. It is objected to.

Mr. PRICE. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. JONES. I object. The gentleman cannot change the regular time of meeting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether it is competent to submit such a motion, if objection is made. The Chair understands that the practice has been that such a motion is not in order, without the general consent of the House. The language of this rule is as follows:

"A motion to adjourn, and a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, shall always be in order."

A proposition to fix the hour of adjournment is not in order, without unanimous consent.

Mr. PRICE. Will it be in order to suspend the rules, to enable me to submit the motion?

The SPEAKER. Motions to suspend the rules are not in order except on Mondays.

On motion by Mr. Seymour, of New York, the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 26, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, relative to a charge rejected in the account of the Hon. David Tod, late Minister to Brazil, for money advanced to William E. Anderson, who was sent to the United States as a witness.

Mr. WADE. I do not know whether it be in order, but that communication, as I understand it, ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, to give light upon a breach of the law regulating the slave trade, in one aspect of it; in another it relates to the settlement of the accounts of Mr. Tod, our late Minister to Brazil. A prosecution had been instituted against two men for a violation of that law; and he was requested by the Executive to procure a witness and send him home, and advance the money to pay for his expenses. He did so, but when he came to adjust his accounts it was ascertained that there was no law providing for the payment of the money advanced to the witness under these circumstances. So, in that aspect of it, it should be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Foreign Relations can take both subjects into consideration.

Mr. WADE. On that information, not doubting that the Committee on Foreign Relations will provide for the payment of the money thus advanced by our late Minister to Brazil, I move that the communication be referred to that Committee, and printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of John Bullock, praying that a clerk may be employed in the post office in the city of New York, and in the post offices in other large cities, to write letters for persons who cannot write, at a moderate rate of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of citizens of Steuben county, New York, praying that the bill giving further remedies to patentees, may become a law; which was ordered to be laid upon the table.

Also, the petition of John Wickham, praying that his pension may be made to commence from the date of his disability; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, sixteen petitions of citizens of New York, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, granting to every citizen of the United States who is the head of a family, one hundred and sixty acres of land, may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER presented several petitions of citizens of New Jersey, praying that the introduction of foreign convicts, felons, and paupers into the United States, may be prohibited by law; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of W. W. Cleveland and others, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, granting to every citizen of the United States who is the head of a family one hundred and sixty acres of land, may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of citizens of Angelica, Allegany county, New York, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, granting to every citizen of the United States who is the head of a family one hundred and sixty acres of land, may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of C. Shuler, Jr., P. Soule, and others, citizens of Dover, Cuyahoga county, Ohio; a petition of Lucius Wood and others, citizens of Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio; a petition of Lawson Wiles and others, citizens of Putnam, Muskingum county, Ohio; and a petition of Aaron Hinchman and others, citizens of Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, granting to every citizen of the United States who is the head of a family one hundred and sixty acres of land, may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PRATT submitted a resolution of the Legislature of Maryland, in relation to the placing of a light on Fort Sollers, in the Patapsco river; which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK presented the petition of Juan Fernandez, praying indemnification for cattle destroyed by the Indians in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

Mr. SUMNER. I hold in my hand, and desire to present, a memorial from the representatives of the Society of Friends in New England, formally adopted at a public meeting, and authenticated by their clerk, in which they ask for the repeal of the fugitive slave law. After setting forth their sentiments on the general subject of slavery, the memorialists proceed as follows:

"We, therefore, respectfully, but earnestly and sincerely, entreat you to repeal the law of the last Congress respecting fugitive slaves; first and principally, because of its injustice towards a long sorely-oppressed and deeply-injured people; and, secondly, in order that we, together with other conscientious sufferers, may be exempted from the penalties which it imposes on all, who in faithfulness to their Divine Master, and in discharge of their obligations to their distressed fellow-men, feel bound to regulate their conduct, even under the heaviest penalties which man can inflict for so doing, by the Divine injunction, 'All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them'; and by the other commandment, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself.'"

Mr. President, this memorial is commended by the character of the religious association from which it proceeds—men who mingle rarely in public affairs, but with austere virtue seek to carry the Christian rule into life.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will have to interpose. The Senator is not privileged to enter into a discussion of the subject now. The contents of the memorial, simply, are to be stated, and then it becomes a question whether it is to be received, if any objection is made to its reception. Silence gives consent. After it is received he can make a motion with regard to its reference, and then make any remarks he thinks proper.

Mr. SUMNER. I have but a very few words to add, and then I propose to move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT. The memorial has first to be received before any motion as to its reference can be entertained. The Senator presenting a memorial states distinctly its objects and contents; then it is sent to the Chair, if a reference of it is desired. But it is not in order to enter into a discussion of the merits of the memorial until it has been received.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not propose to enter into any such discussion. I have already read one part of the memorial, and it was my design merely to refer to the character of the memorialists—a usage which I have observed on this floor constantly—to state the course I should pursue, and then conclude with a motion for a reference.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator, if such is the pleasure of the Senate, if he does not go into an elaborate discussion.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no such purpose.

Mr. DAWSON. Let him be heard.

Several SENATORS. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNER. I observed that this memorial was commended by the character of the religious association from which it proceeds. It is commended also, by its earnest and persuasive tone, and by the prayer which it presents. Offering it now, sir, I desire simply to say, that I shall deem it my duty, on some proper occasion hereafter, to express myself at length on the matter to which it relates. Thus far, during this session, I have forbore. With the exception of an able speech from my colleague, [Mr. DAVIS,] the discussion of this all-absorbing question has been mainly left with Senators from another quarter of the country, by whose mutual differences it has been complicated, and between whom I have not cared to interfere. But, there is a time for all things. Justice, also, requires that both sides should be heard; and I trust not to expect too much, when at some fit moment, I bespeak the clear and candid attention of the Senate, while I undertake to set forth, frankly and fully, and with entire respect for this body, convictions, deeply cherished in my own State, though disregarded here—to which I am bound by every sentiment of the heart, by every fiber of my being, by all my devotion to country, by my love of God and man. But, upon these I do not now enter. Suffice it, for the present, to say, that when I shall undertake that service, I believe I shall utter nothing which, in any just sense, can be called sectional, unless the Constitution is sectional, and unless the sentiments of the fathers were sectional. It is my happiness to believe, and my hope to be able to show, that, according to the true spirit of the Constitution, and according to the sentiments of the fathers, FREEDOM, and not slavery, is NATIONAL; while SLAVERY, and not freedom, is SECTIONAL. In duty to the petitioners, and with the hope of promoting their prayer, I move the reference of their petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANGUM. I do not rise with a view to make a question of the reception of the memorial. I know it is the settled practice of this body to make that question on petitions upon this subject, and lay the motion to receive it on the table; but that has been departed from; and, I think, in all instances, as far as regards this very Christian society—the people usually called Quakers—who are a most exemplary and most excellent people, when petitions have been received from them. So I think Congress should do; and I am under the impression that there has been no exception to that rule. They are a law-abiding people; they are conscientious upon these questions, and ought to be treated with the fullest degree of respect. I hope there will be no objection to the reception. After it is received, I shall follow it with a motion to lay the memorial upon the table.

Mr. BADGER. It is received.

The PRESIDENT. It is already received, if there be no objection.

Mr. MANGUM. I move, then, to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I want to correct him in the statement of a fact.

Mr. MANGUM. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. HALE. The Senator says that no exception has been taken to the reception of petitions upon this subject.

Mr. MANGUM. From the Society of Friends.

Mr. HALE. Oh, I did not understand that. Then, the rule of the Senate will be, that Friends are entitled to petition, and nobody else.

Mr. CLEMENS. That is it.

Mr. DAWSON. The motion to lay the petition on the table is withdrawn, and I desire to say a few words. If it be the desire of gentlemen to reopen this discussion, especially with a solemn manner, and a heart filled with Christian feeling, which seems to be overflowing the Senator from Massachusetts; if he desires to make a discussion of this subject, now is the time. Let there be no evasion, no escape from the present crisis, no motion to avoid what you intend to do, prior to the nominations which are to take place. Come out manfully, boldly, and present the question to us. I dislike this manner of proceeding—this throwing dust and clouds over what you intend to do. Let there be none of this deception, either religious or political. Let there be manliness; let there be earnestness. I, for one, am prepared to meet this question: and I am one of those who never intend to seek any mode whatever, by which it can be evaded. If gentlemen desire to throw firebrands into this country, let them do it; and, if they are more Christian in their feelings, and their hearts more pure than mine, I want them to pour them out. I trust, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires an occasion to discuss this question, that we will give him the opportunity. Let the petition be presented; let him set down the day for the discussion, and not seek to avoid it by saying, now I do not desire to discuss it. Now, sir, "is the accepted time." Let it be met, and let it be made a test question here, and see how the different sections of this country stand upon this question. Let there be no double-dealing in politics or religion; no hypocrisy of the heart, or hypocrisy in political action.

I trust my friend from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] will let the friends of the repeal of the fugitive slave law give it their own direction; for I am one of those who desire that the North shall have the exclusive right to declare their sentiments upon this question, and not that a lean majority of the Northern portion of this country, with the entire South, should give public opinion upon this question of political action. Let those who intend to take the responsibility in what are called the non-slaveholding States, declare the position upon which they intend to stand. If they intend to rock this country to its foundation—if they intend to agitate, let it be now, sir; let it be now, and let no four years which are to come under any Administration, be the course of agitation. Let the country know the men, the measures, and the man, who is to represent this influence, and around which they intend to rally. I repeat, sir, that in this indirect mode, on the eve of a presidential election, these feelings ought not to be thrown before the country with a sanctimonious air, that is to say to the whole country, We are so generous in our feelings, we do not want to violate the Constitution; but yet, you are going contrary to the Constitution. I desire to know what these gentlemen are going to do, and for one, if I can pursue the course which will bring them up to the test question, I will do it; and if any Senator is prepared to make a motion, by which the question shall be met, I say, now is the accepted time. This is the day; this is the hour.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will allow me, I would suggest to him to move, by way of testing this question, to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. DAWSON. No, sir; I do not desire that any test on this floor should be precluded by a motion for the expression of his opinions. I want gentlemen to come out boldly and manfully. I want this question handled, not merely with soft political gloves for party purposes. I want manliness; I want firmness; and if gentlemen desire sectional questions and sectional agitations, I am now prepared for them. I have done all that man can do to reconcile and to harmonize; but it seems that there is a determination secretly and covertly to pass over the present hour, but yet keep these questions before the country by insinuation, with a view to raise them up after a certain period. I am against it.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I am not exactly in the same bellicose humor with my friend from Georgia this morning; and, believing that as we have some matters of dollars and cents to attend to upon the deficiency bill, and that a furious onslaught on the subject of the fugitive slave law will not put us into a very good and excellent disposition to discharge that practical business with credit to ourselves and the country, I renew the motion to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. As I find that reference has been made to the Judiciary Committee, I wish to say a word or two.

Mr. BADGER. The motion is, to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood that it was a part of the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, to refer this memorial to the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not wish to lay it on the table. I agree with the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay the memorial on the table. That motion is not debatable.

Mr. ADAMS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. DAWSON. I know the rule, and I do not desire to violate it; but I wish to say, that if this is considered as a test question, my vote will be one way; but, if the Senate desire that this subject shall be closed merely for the present, my vote shall be another way.

Mr. CHASE. I rise to a point of order. Is debate in order on this motion?

The PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BADGER. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. I believe that, if this petition be laid on the table, it can be taken up at any time?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly, if a majority of the Senate so decide.

The question being now taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 40, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Clemens, Cooper, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Felch, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Toney, Underwood, Upham, and Weller—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Borland, Chase, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Hale, Hamlin, Seward, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—10.

So the memorial was laid upon the table.

BILL PASSED.

The engrossed bill granting lands to the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, in aid of the construction of certain railroads therein, was read a third time, and passed.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1852."

The PRESIDENT. The amendments made to the bill were ordered to be printed. They have been printed, and I understand have been laid upon the tables of Senators.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest that we take the question on the amendments in the gross, with such exceptions as Senators desire to have a separate vote upon. There are some of these amendments on which I desire that the vote be taken separately. I wish a separate vote on the amendment making an appropriation for the Collins line of steamers. Also, the amendment in relation to the custom-house at Bangor, Maine, and that in relation to the establishment of a coal depot at Key West, Florida.

Mr. HALE. I desire to except the proviso providing that the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac be allowed a compensation of $3,000 per annum.

Mr. DAVIS, on behalf of Mr. CLARKE, excepted to the following amendment:

"For deficiency in the appropriation for defraying the expenses of preparing the Opinions of the Attorneys General, $1,220."

Mr. CLEMENS. It is impossible to tell what portion of the amendments are excepted, and what are adopted. I desire to vote upon every amendment separately. I want to offer amendments to some of them on certain conditions. If several of them are retained I cannot tell which it is proposed to vote on separately, and which is not proposed to vote on separately.

The PRESIDENT. If objection is taken to the course we are pursuing, each amendment must be taken up separately.

Mr. MANGUM. All the amendments are printed and lie on our tables. If the Clerk will read them, we can tell which we wish to have excepted.

Mr. CLEMENS. I think we should vote on them as they come up in their order.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the amendments made in committee. The first is: Section 1, page 2, after line 21, insert the following:

"For completing the floating dry-dock at San Francisco, California, authorized by act of 3d March, 1851, $360,000."

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CLARKE] left with me an amendment to be offered to this clause. I am not certain whether he intended that I should offer it as an amendment to the amendment, now under consideration, or whether he intended that I should offer it as a substitute to the amendment recently offered by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER.]

Mr. HUNTER. No amendment was offered by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER.]

Mr. BADGER. I withdrew my amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think I will offer it at any rate. It is a very good proposition in itself. I will read it for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that we had better go through the amendments adopted in committee first? Then, it will be in order to move new matter.

The PRESIDENT. That depends upon circumstances. If it is proposed to amend, by altering the amendment in the slightest degree, and by inserting new matter, it must be done now.

Mr. BADGER. There is no question, sir, about that; but I know the meaning of the amendment. It is to add a proviso to the existing amendment, and will be in order after we go through the amendments adopted in committee.

The PRESIDENT. Such an amendment will then be in order.

Mr. BRODHEAD. In that case I will not offer it now.

The question was then taken on the first amendment reported by the committee, quoted above, and it was concurred in.

The item granting "compensation to temporary clerks in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, employed in making out certificates of service from the muster-rolls of 1812, and the several Indian wars, $11,800: [Provided, that no clerk shall receive more than at the rate of $1,000 per annum under this act,]" had been still further amended in committee, by striking out all the words within brackets, and substituting the following:

"Which sum shall be distributed among the clerks, according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no salary from this fund shall exceed $1,200."

This amendment was concurred in.

In the appropriation for compensation to extra clerks employed in the office of the Auditor of the Post Office, $4,000, the word temporarily had been inserted after the word employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate concurred in the next amendment to the same item, by inserting after the words $4,000, the following:

"For pasting in books prepared for the purpose, canceled certificates of the registry and enrollment of vessels returned by the several collectors of the customs, $500."

The next amendment was to add to the appropriation of $80,000 for running and marking the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, according to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to sanction a departure from the point on the Rio Grande, north of the town called Paso, designated in the said treaty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was concurred in; to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "twelve" in the appropriation for subdividing townships in California into sections, so as to read as follows:

"For subdividing townships in California into sections, at a rate not exceeding $12 per mile, $36,000."

The next amendment, which was concurred in, added the following items:

"For compensation of the surveyor general of Arkansas, per act of August 8, 1848, $2,000.
 "For clerks in the office of the surveyor general of Arkansas, per act of August 8, 1848, $6,300."

The next amendment, which was concurred in, was to strike out the words, "for surveys in the mineral region of Michigan, at a rate not exceeding $6 per mile, $20,650," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For surveys in the mineral region of Michigan, at a rate not exceeding $6 per mile, $24,750."

The PRESIDENT. The next amendment is to insert the following:

"For completing the improvements of New Jersey avenue, north of the Capitol, $9,000.

"For planning and finishing the roads and walks through that portion of the public land surrounding the Smithsonian Institution, $7,000.

"For deficiency in the appropriation for defraying the expenses of preparing the Opinions of the Attorneys General, $1,220.

"For payment to Augustus Humbert, of balance of his salary as United States assayer of gold in California, under the act of 30th September, 1850, $1,250."

Mr. HUNTER. There is one part of that amendment which has been excepted. It is the clause giving $1,200 additional compensation for preparing the Opinions of the Attorneys General.

The PRESIDENT. We are going over them separately.

Mr. DAVIS. If what has been read is considered as one amendment, I shall move a division of the question. I am willing that the question should be taken on all the other clauses of the amendment, except that clause referring to the appropriation for defraying the expenses of preparing the Opinions of the Attorneys General. That portion of the amendment I wish to have excepted.

The PRESIDENT. Then the question will be on amending the amendment by striking that out.

Mr. DAVIS. I regret that I am not as well prepared to state this question to the Senate as I ought to be, being unexpectedly called on to do so in the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island; but, knowing that it was his intention and his purpose to object to that provision, I thought it to be my duty to bring it to the attention of the Senate. This gentleman, Mr. Hall, of whom I know nothing, was employed to collect the Opinions of the Attorneys General; that service he has performed, and has received, as compensation, a sum—which can be named by the chairman of the Committee on Finance—amounting to something like $2,000. It is now proposed to give him $1,220 in addition to that sum. I hold in my hands the two volumes compiled by that gentleman. They are in the possession of every gentleman in the Senate. They contain nothing except the naked Opinions of the Attorneys General, commencing with the earliest period of the history of this Government, and coming down to the present time. There is not, as every one knows, an index in this book; it is a book substantially useless in its character, because, like a lock without a key, there are no means of getting at the information contained in it. If Mr. Hall has, as I understand, already received $2,000, I would be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Finance would show the Senate some good reason why this additional sum should be given.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe that this was an improvident amendment, reported by the committee in consequence of the receipt of a letter from the Attorney General's Office, and without examining the book. As it contains no index, and as the sum proposed to be appropriated is too large, I shall vote with the Senator from Massachusetts for the rejection of the amendment.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope that I may be indulged with the attention of the Senate, while giving a word of explanation on this subject.

Mr. BADGER. Will the Senator permit me to ask one question? I would like to know from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] whether the letter, on account of which this appropriation was reported, stated that a contract for a specific sum had been made with this person?

Mr. HUNTER. There was no contract for a specified sum. Here are the letters; if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] desires it, they can be read, but one of the letters is rather long.

Mr. BADGER. No. I do not wish to hear them read. I merely wished to ascertain that fact.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the Senator from Virginia have the goodness to send me those letters?

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order; that is, whether this appropriation is in order in this bill?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALE. But I wish to know whether this, being a private claim, is in order in the deficiency bill?

Mr. DAVIS. It was reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT. It is too late to raise that question now. The amendment was adopted in committee.

Mr. HALE. Its adoption by the committee does not authorize its insertion here.

The PRESIDENT. Having been adopted by the committee, it must be acted on now.

Mr. SEWARD. A law passed Congress, directing the President of the United States to collect the Opinions of the Attorneys General, which were lying loose, and in all imaginable confusion, in the Attorney General's Office. The President appointed Benjamin F. Hall, esquire, a counsellor at law, who was a friend of his own, and who was competent to perform that service. He was an author, and a lawyer of standing, and of high respectability in both capacities, especially as a legal writer, in the State of New York. There was no sum designated for his compensation. He came here and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and last year, when the appropriation bill passed, he presented his account for settlement. The work being then unfinished, the Attorney General recommended the sum of $2,000, not for his compensation, but as a sum which would certainly be less than the amount, and the residue was reserved until the work should be completed. Mr. Hall went on upon the receipt of that $2,000, having hired a clerk, as it became necessary to copy many, if not all of these Opinions. The result has been, that these volumes of Opinions are presented to us. At this session of Congress he presented his claim to the Attorney General in a letter, in order that it might be brought into this deficiency bill. He presented the following account of professional services:

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
To Benjamin F. Hall, Dr.
1851. September 7. To professional services rendered to the United States since September 6, 1850, by direction of the President, in compiling the Opinions of the Attorneys General, three hundred and sixty-five days, at the rate of eight dollars per day.....	$2,920
To expenditures necessarily incurred for clerk during that period.....	300
Total.....	$3,220
Cr. By amount of appropriation towards that object of March 3d, 1851.....	2,000
Balance due.....	$1,220

This account, as Senators will see, includes $300 for clerk hire. The Committee on Finance very properly required some evidence on the subject, from the Department to which it belonged, and they were furnished with the following letter from the Solicitor of the Treasury:

SOLICITOR'S OFFICE,
 WASHINGTON, April 5, 1852.
 Sir: I am requested by a friend of Mr. Hall, whose bill for services in the compilation of the Opinions of the Attorneys General is before your committee, to write to you in regard to it.

The manner in which Mr. Hall performed his duties came under my observation, and it gives me pleasure to say that he devoted himself with great assiduity to the task before him. It requires no little skill and labor to place the "Opinions" in a shape suited to their importance. Mr. Hall has performed the work well, and merits not only a fair pecuniary reward, but the thanks of the law officers of the Government, and of all who have occasion to refer to the work.

Mr. Hall is a lawyer, and I have no doubt could have earned, in the year which he devoted to the compilation, more than he has charged. It seems to me that his bill is quite reasonable.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 J. A. CLARK.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER,
 Chairman Finance Committee, Senate United States.

Mr. Hall is well known to me, and I know that his profession as a lawyer would bring him in an amount much larger than that which he has charged. The Attorney General referred the matter to his clerk, Mr. Reid, who was familiar with the subject; and here is the opinion of Mr. Reid, the deputy in the office of the Attorney General:

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1852.
 Sir: I have examined the account of Mr. Hall, which you handed to me yesterday, and certify that he was engaged for the time mentioned in it in compiling the Opinions of the Attorneys General, and superintending their publication; and that, from the great care and labor bestowed on the work, the remuneration claimed is, in my opinion, very reasonable and proper.

The work must be regarded as a very valuable aid to all the officers of the Executive Department of the Government in the discharge of their duties. I would particularly call your attention to the synopsis he has prefixed to each Opinion. It first indicates the general principle decided; secondly, the mode of carrying it into execution; and lastly, the application of the principle to the particular case. Take, for example, the opinion as to what was necessary to be done to carry into effect the stipulation in the treaty of 1842 with Great Britain, relating to the extradition of fugitives from justice, at page 1603. The synopsis first states the testimony necessary to be produced to authorize a surrender; next, the mode of procedure; and lastly, the decision in the case presented. To prepare such a synopsis required not only care and attention, but also thought, and a thorough understanding of the points decided in the Opinion. I have looked through the book, and can say with truth, that these synopses have been well done. Of course, no one but a professional man, accustomed to digest in his mind the details of cases, could have executed this portion of the work, or was competent to see it through the press. I therefore consider Mr. Hall's charge as just and moderate.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
 JOHN T. REID.

Hon. J. J. CRITTENDEN,
 Attorney General, United States.

These papers, Mr. President, were submitted to the Committee on Finance; and that committee adopted the amendment allowing $300 for clerk hire, and a balance of $920 to Mr. Hall in full for his services. It was seen, then, that the services of Mr. Hall were not merely those of a scribe or secretary, but the services of a lawyer; and those services have been performed with the skill, the ability, and the learning of a lawyer. They have been well performed. The law officers interested, in the subject certify to that.

There remains, then, only the single point raised by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Davis,] which was made perhaps under a mistake; and when I explain that mistake, I think he will withdraw his objection. At any rate, I hope so. It appears that to these volumes no index has been prepared. Those who know Benjamin F. Hall as well as I do, would know, without being told, that there must be some good reason for such an apparent neglect. After this amendment had been adopted by the committee and reported to the Senate, and adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] who is now absent, called my attention to this subject, and asked me how it happened that I could support this claim; and indicated a disposition to oppose it, when it came before the Senate, on account of this want of an index. I thereupon wrote to Mr. Hall, who was in attendance here for a considerable time, but who is now engaged in professional and public duties elsewhere—he is the Mayor of the city of Auburn—for an explanation, giving him notice that some objections were likely to be made to his account. Mr. Hall wrote to me a full and elaborate letter, and, without having any indications from me, as I was unable to give him any, as to the nature of these objections, he answered all the possible objections which he could conceive. He showed that, as to the length of time which was charged, those services were rendered. He then proceeds to show that, in regard to the want of an index, the law or resolution under which the service was performed devolved it upon the Clerk of the House of Representatives to publish this book; that he, Mr. Hall, last year, as I well knew, applied for leave to print this book himself, or that he might superintend the printing of it; but no arrangement of that kind being made, this part of the service was performed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and these Opinions were printed by him without the knowledge of Mr. Hall, and before he had time to arrive here and prepare an index. Every one knows that no index can be made until the text is printed. When he came here, he found that the work was presented to the public in that crude shape, for which there was no manner of fault resting with Mr. Hall—the responsibility resting with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

This letter was full and satisfactory upon that point. I waited upon the Senator from Rhode Island myself with that letter, and placed it in his hands, and he read the letter and returned it to me, if I remember rightly, the next day; and though it is hazardous to speak of private conversation with a Senator upon a point upon which a controversy might arise, I am free to say that I understood from that Senator that he was satisfied, and would not raise any objection in the Senate. On that ground I wrote to Mr. Hall—as I heard no objections, and knew of none from any other source, that the matter was at rest, so that it was not necessary for him to come here. I anticipated no objection, and consequently his letter was left at home. I shall be obliged to ask that the Senate will allow this matter to be laid over in order that I may present that letter, which will state the facts more explicitly than I can give them from memory; for I may have done injustice to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which, of course, is undesigned. I think, if the Senator from Massachusetts has had some recent conversation with the Senator from Rhode Island, he would be satisfied with the understanding I had with him upon this subject. That is the impression which I had, and I submit that it is not the fault of Mr. Hall that the index was not made, and that he ought not therefore to lose his compensation. The work was printed from his manuscripts.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to the postponement of this subject, so that the Senator can send for his papers.

The PRESIDENT. It cannot be postponed.

Mr. DAVIS. I supposed it could be postponed by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. HUNTER. Is the question on the amendment?

The PRESIDENT. It is on an amendment to the amendment. There is a motion made to strike out that part of the amendment which makes an appropriation for compiling the Opinions of the Attorneys General.

Mr. DAVIS. I merely wish to say, in justification of myself, that I made the objection under what I believe to be, and as I thought I knew to be, the wishes of the Senator from Rhode Island. But in that I might be mistaken, because, after speaking to him, he may have changed his opinion. But such I understood to be his views, having entered into this subject and made an investigation of it. It will be, after all, for the Senate to decide—this gentleman having received $3,000—whether the mere compilation of these books would employ an astute lawyer, a gentleman of character and reputation, for the term of one year and more. These volumes are nothing but a transcript of the original Opinions of the Attorneys General, found, I suppose, either in print, or on the files in the office of the Attorney General. The whole labor of this gentleman consists in merely making the condensed tables at the head of each of the Opinions, stating very briefly the contents of the Opinions. Thus the books are made up, and there is all the work, all the labor, all the intelligence, and all the learning which is required to make up such a compilation.

Mr. COOPER. I desire to ask a question, and perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts can answer me. Was there not a compilation previously made, in 1840 or 1842; and does not this compilation comprise a part of that? It is my impression that it does.

Mr. DAVIS. I am unable to say, but I have seen many of these Opinions in print.

Mr. FELCH. If the Senator will allow me, I will answer that question. There have been two or three compilations on different subjects. In connection with the pension laws there was an abstract of the Opinions of the Attorneys General relating to the pension laws. There were also published two volumes upon the land laws; and one, the last of the two, embraces the Opinions of the Attorneys General relating to the public lands, up to the date of this publication. Upon some one or two other subjects, there have been compilations, and they are arranged under a proper head and together, and have an index added, so that it is much more convenient to make a reference to them than to the books now published, which have no index, and which are without order.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no intelligence which authorizes me to say that there was a distinct publication of the Opinions of the Attorneys General up to a certain period of time, as intimated by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COOPER:] but the question to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is this: This book is nothing but a mere collection of these Opinions; there is no mental labor, no learning required; all the ability that is required is merely sufficient to state, as in the manner here stated, the substance of each Opinion. And then the book is left without an index.

If I can understand the circumstances connected with this proceeding, the Attorney General has paid this gentleman $2,000, but he was unwilling to accept that in full satisfaction of his claim; and the Attorney General, under any authority that he possessed, declined to pay more, and the matter remained for the consideration of Congress. I do not understand that the Attorney General feels desirous that this sum should be paid. Nor am I authorized to say that he expresses any opinion directly to the contrary; but, from all the circumstances, I should judge that he considered that an ample equivalent has been paid for the service. I desire, also, that an ample equivalent should be paid; but I cannot understand how it is that the compilation of these two volumes, being partly made up from extant printed Opinions, and partly from manuscript, should be worth more than $2,000.

I do not wish to detain the Senate any longer by the consideration of this topic. They may dispose of it as they please.

Mr. COOPER. I hold in my hand a volume containing the Opinions of the Attorneys General, published under a resolution of the House of Representatives, in 1841. I see, on looking at the book, for which payment is now claimed, that it begins with the Opinion of Mr. Randolph—it begins with the same Opinion which stands first in the old compilation. The latter comes down to 1837, and embraces the opinions of Mr. Butler, who was Attorney General during the administration of Martin Van Buren. So that it would appear that there has been nothing to do in the compilation of this new book, beyond preparing the syllabuses which appear in it.

Mr. HALE. I hope that a vote will be taken. This man will get his money. If he does not get it here, an estimate will be filed away in some Department, and the money will be paid. Let us have a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT. The question is decided.

Mr. SEWARD. I was on the floor before the vote was announced. I had no opportunity to state my request, and I think that the question was not understood.

The PRESIDENT. As the Senator says he was on the floor, the question will be taken again.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask for a division.

The question was again taken, and there were—ayes 30, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out the next clause. It is nothing in the world but a private claim. It is: "For payment to Augustus Humbert, of balance of his salary, as United States assayer of gold in California, under the act of September, 1850, $1,250."

Mr. HUNTER. This amendment was put in upon estimates from the Treasury Department. It was said to be important, in order to keep the assay office in operation. I do not know that it can come under the denomination of a private claim.

Mr. HALE. Very well; I withdraw my motion. I always yield to the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The next amendment was to strike out the words "one thousand," and insert "twelve hundred," in the item providing compensation of extra clerks, employed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions. The object of the amendment is to provide that no clerk shall receive more than at the rate of $1,200 per annum, under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The next amendment is to insert the following:

For expenses of establishing the superintendency of Indian Affairs in California, authorized by the act of 3d March, 1852, viz:

For salary of superintendent, $1,318 65.

For salary of clerk, $324 17.

For rent of office for superintendent, $1,000.

For stationery, fuel, lights, &c., for office of superintendent, $275.

For messenger, expenses, &c., $400.

For labor, miscellaneous items, and contingent expenses of the superintendency, $275.

For presents and provisions for Indians visiting superintendent on official business, $1,000.

For traveling expenses of the superintendent and the necessary attendants, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The next amendment is to insert the following:

For furniture for superintendent's office, $1,000.

For iron safe for superintendent's office, $1,000.

For United States flags, for distribution among the tribes, $50.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the first clause which relates to the furniture for the superintendent's office. I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment, as it now stands.

The question was taken on the motion to strike out the clause, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. HALE. Before the vote is taken on the adoption of that amendment, I wish to ask if it is common to furnish Indian superintendents with furniture, and for what other classes of officers we should provide furniture, because I think if this system is to go on, we ought to have our own rooms furnished. I think, sir, it is contrary to all propriety. There is a principle growing up in regard to this matter which I think ought to be checked. I have shown that it has been growing as exemplified in the case of superintendents of navy-yards. I believe I have shown that to the satisfaction of everybody, except the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BADGER. And the rest of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. No, sir, everybody but the Senator from North Carolina. The practice has grown up of furnishing the officers of navy-yards with furniture; and here is a new class of officers coming and asking to be furnished with furniture. I think we ought to stop where we are.

Mr. ATCHISON. I believe that in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the furniture consists of a desk, chairs, and other articles necessary for the use of the office. It is not to furnish a house or a bed-room of the superintendent of Indian Affairs; it is not to supply him with utensils necessary for cooking, but it is to supply the furniture which is necessary for his office. Now the question is, whether the United States will furnish desks, chairs and other furniture necessary for the office, or whether the superintendent shall furnish it out of his own pocket? If the latter, then I insist that every head of a bureau, every Secretary, and every clerk in any Department shall furnish his room out of his own salary. I believe that it has been the uniform custom to furnish the offices there with furniture, and I am informed by my friend from Iowa, [Mr. JONES:] that the surveyors general have their offices furnished for them also.

Mr. JONES. And the land offices are furnished.

Mr. ATCHISON. Now, whether $1,000 would be sufficient for this purpose, I am not able to say; but if the superintendent of Indian Affairs has a single particle of honesty in his composition, he will only use enough of this appropriation to furnish his office. The Senator is mistaken, if he supposes it is to be applied for the individual purposes of the officer. It is the furniture of the Government, and not that of the officer.

Mr. HALE. The next clause to this one which I move to strike out is to furnish to the superintendent an iron safe, which is to cost $1,000; and this amendment, according to the statement of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ARCAISON:] is to furnish a desk and a few chairs, and such like utensils. This would make it a pretty expensive desk and chairs. I suppose, sir, that this is to furnish his whole house with sofas, and chairs, and tables, and carpets, and everything of that sort. And $1,000, sir, will furnish it pretty well. If that is all that is wanted—mere office furniture, as the Senator from Missouri suggests—I think $75 would be amply sufficient. He could get just as good a desk as he could possibly need for $50; and he can buy as good a chair as is necessary for him for $50 a dozen, and he certainly would not want more than half a dozen of them. That number would be amply sufficient.

But this is to furnish his whole establishment from cellar to attic. No matter whether he is honest or not, he will spend the whole of the $1,000; and in the next deficiency bill, ten to one but there will be a demand of $1,500 or $1,600 for a new supply of furniture. Now, sir, it seems to me that the reasons assigned why we should pass this appropriation are the very reasons why we should stop; because every additional office you furnish will be added as a reason for furnishing more. But I have no idea of stopping this. It will go on, and next year it will be $2,000; and the next year more; and then we shall have another class of offices to furnish, and this bill be brought up as a precedent, and there will be no end to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand from the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. SEBASTIAN,] who is familiar with this subject, that it is not usual to make an appropriation for furnishing these offices, but it is usual to pay for the furniture out of the contingent fund. I also gather that $300 will furnish that office in California. I therefore move to strike out "$1,000," and insert "$300."

The PRESIDENT. That question will be first taken.

Mr. ATCHISON. The Senator from Virginia admits the necessity of some appropriation to furnish the office of superintendent of Indian Affairs in California. I am also of opinion that something less than $1,000 will be sufficient, and that perhaps $300 will be enough. In that view of the subject I concur; but to striking out the whole, and obliging the superintendent to furnish his office out of his own pocket, I am entirely opposed.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Is it now in order to move to strike out the whole?

The PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. HALE. As the Senate have shown a disposition to take the right course by striking out a part, I move to strike out the whole.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to assign one reason for not striking it all out, which is the reason that I did not vote for reducing it. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] has intimated that he will shortly bring forward a proposition to furnish the apartments of Senators in this city; and as the rejection of this amendment would form a precedent against the proposition of that Senator, and as I should be very sorry to see any obstacle thrown in his way, I hope the amendment will be retained.

The question was taken on the motion to strike out the amendment as amended, and it was decided in the negative.

The question then recurred on the amendment as amended, and it was agreed to.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was to add the following proviso:

"Provided, That after the thirtieth day of June, 1852, all payments of interest on said awards shall cease; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay said claimants the amount of principal awarded in each case respectively, and that the amount necessary for this purpose be, and the same is hereby, appropriated: Provided further, That the final payment and satisfaction of said awards shall be first ratified and approved as a final release of all claims of such parties, under the fourteenth article of said treaty, by the proper national authority of the Choctaws, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior?"

to this clause:

"For interest on the amounts awarded Choctaw claimants, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, of 27th of September, 1830, for lands on which they resided, but which it is impossible to give them, and in lieu of the scrip that has been awarded under the act of August, 1842, not deliverable, east, by the third section of said law, per act of third March, 1845, for the half year ending the 30th of June, 1852, $21,800."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was to strike out the following clause:

"For compensation to three special agents and four interpreters for the Indian tribes of Texas, and for the purchase of presents, and to negotiate with said Indians, under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for their removal from that State to some designated unoccupied territory of the United States, $25,000;"

And to insert in lieu thereof—

For the purchase of presents, and to negotiate under instructions from the Secretary of the Interior with the Indians in Texas who have intruded themselves into that State from the Territories of the United States, for their removal from that State, $25,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, was to amend this clause:

"For continuing the collection and for publishing the statistics and other information authorized by the act of third of March, 1847, and subsequent acts, $17,000," by adding to it this proviso:

"Provided, That the work shall be completed in five volumes, and that at least one volume shall be published in each year until the whole series of five volumes shall be finished."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment agreed to, as in Committee of the Whole, was to correct a clerical error by substituting "Indiana" for "Indians" in the following clause:

"For expenses of removal and subsistence of Pottawatomies of Indians, $22,500."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment adopted, as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert the following clause:

"For the reappropriation of $10,000 for the redemption of outstanding loan-office and final-settlement certificates, this being a portion of the sum of $37,589 59 heretofore appropriated for that purpose, and carried to the surplus fund on the 31st day of December, 1843: Provided, That hereafter all claims on account of such loan-office and final-settlement certificates, unless presented at the Treasury of the United States within two years from the passage of this act, shall be considered as barred, and not thereafter payable."

The PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

Mr. HALE. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance who reported this amendment, what is the reason for the proviso contained in the latter part of it? I suppose there are very few of these certificates outstanding. I understand that the amount of them to come in will not be more than $5,000 or $6,000. What is the use, then, on the face of this bill, of repudiating those which may come in after two years? If they come in afterwards, they will undoubtedly be paid, notwithstanding the proviso. Then what is the use of it?

Mr. HUNTER. It seemed to the committee to be proper that there should be some restriction in point of time as to these old claims. They are very old; and for the purpose of forcing them to be presented in a reasonable time, it was thought best to insert a restriction of two years. The committee thought that to be a reasonable time.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, was to amend the clause providing for payment for revising the laws of Minnesota Territory by adding this proviso:

"Provided, That hereafter no expenses incurred by a Territorial Legislature shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, unless previously sanctioned by law."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment agreed to, as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert—

"For contingent expenses of the Senate, $137,775."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment adopted, as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert—

"To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay for the copies of the report of Doctor David Dale Owen, United States geologist, on the geology of Iowa and Wisconsin, and Minnesota Territory, heretofore ordered to be executed for the use of the Senate, under the special direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $31,218 75: Provided, That no more than fifty cents a copy shall be paid for the binding of the book."

"To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay for three thousand five hundred copies of the report of Doctor David Dale Owen, on the geology of Iowa and Wisconsin, and Minnesota Territory, ordered by a resolution of the House of Representatives, to be executed under the special direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $16,187 50: Provided, That no more than fifty cents a copy shall be paid for the binding of the book."

"For contingent expenses of the library of Congress, $800."

The PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur in this amendment?

Mr. BRADBURY. I move to strike out $31,218 75, and insert $20,000. This amendment to the amendment I believe is rendered proper in consequence of the diminution of expense which was made, when the bill was in Committee of the Whole, in regard to binding the volumes. Twenty thousand dollars will be about a sufficient sum to purchase the number of volumes required, since the original bill contemplated the payment of two dollars a volume for binding, and the amendment which was adopted limited the price to fifty cents. The amount appropriated is to pay for printing and binding. Inasmuch as one dollar and fifty cents is taken from the cost of binding each volume by the amendment already adopted, it is necessary to diminish the appropriation by that amount.

Mr. HUNTER. It is true, that the reduction in the price of binding will reduce the estimate made by the Department, but I do not know the precise sum to which it will reduce it; and, therefore, I thought it was safer to leave the original amount. The Secretary will only expend what his estimate would require, reduced, as it has been, by the Senate. I do not know the exact amount. Does the Senator from Maine know?

Mr. BRADBURY. I made an estimate when the bill was under consideration a few days ago, and I think it was about $20,000. I am not certain of the precise amount. If it should exceed the amount, or fall a little short, provision can be made hereafter. It requires the taking off of $1 50 from each volume. We have a statement of the number of volumes. Certainly, $21,000 or $22,000 will cover the whole amount. I know $22,000 will; and, therefore, I vary the amendment to make it that amount.

Mr. BADGER. I want to remind the Senator from Maine that he seems to think it a very easy thing to pass through both Houses of Congress a bill to supply a deficiency. How long have we been in trying to pass this bill? As was said by the Senator from Virginia, if we leave the amount at $31,000, no more will be expended than the contract calls for.

Mr. HAMLIN. When this matter was up, in Committee of the Whole, I made a statement that it had been communicated to me that the binding was to cost $2 a volume. Such was the information communicated to me; but I am bound to state that another communication has been since made to me, from which I suppose the binding was to cost only sixty-two and a half cents. That would leave only twelve and a half cents to be taken off on each volume—a very small sum, and one which, I think, will render the amendment of my colleague unnecessary. If the facts were as I supposed the other day, I would concur most cheerfully in that amendment; but as it is, I think it is unnecessary.

Mr. BRADBURY. I took the statement of my colleague as the basis on which I made my estimate. If that statement was incorrect, I certainly do not wish to press the amendment, and, therefore, I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to submit an amendment to the amendment. When this subject was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, I suggested that I thought fifty cents a copy for binding such a book as this would not procure binding of the description and quality appropriate to the nature of the work. I move now, in order to test the sense of the Senate, to strike out "fifty cents," in the proviso, and insert "seventy-five cents."

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope that the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted; because I believe that if the book is bound in accordance with the present contract, at sixty-two and a half cents, it will be a good, thorough, sufficient, and substantial binding.

Mr. BADGER. Then I will vary the amendment to the amendment, and make it "sixty-two and a half cents."

Mr. HAMLIN. I beg also to state that I have on my desk an amendment which I propose to offer to the Senate, if it shall become necessary. I do not propose to offer it now. This book was ordered to be printed under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Under that direction, I am told, he has made a contract for the printing and binding. The latter part, I contend, was not within his power. The Senate having made a contract with another person to do all the binding of the Senate, the Commissioner, by virtue of the instructions to print the work, had no authority on earth to bind it; therefore the Senate, in good faith, are bound to maintain the contract which they have made with their binder. The person who is to bind the work under the Commissioner is in Philadelphia. I learn that he will be here this day; and it is hoped, and I believe I may say it is expected, that an amicable arrangement will be made between the two parties, so that there will be no conflict of the contracts. If such a state of facts shall exist, I have no doubt that the book will be well bound for the sum stated. If it is not brought about, I shall offer an amendment directing the binding to be done by the binder of the Senate, who is anxious to do it, and it will be done most faithfully by him for half a dollar a volume

Mr. BADGER. Upon that explanation, I withdraw my proposed amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment agreed to, as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert:

"For the payment of James W. Hale, of the city of New York, in full for discharging the duties of dispatch agent from September, 1849, to June, 1850, inclusive, the sum of $600."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert after the provision for the payment of geological surveys, the following:

"Provided, That there shall be no further geological survey prosecuted in Oregon, unless authorized by law."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment agreed to, as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert:

"To enable the Secretary of State to pay William E. Anderson, for the loss of time and expense incurred by him in coming from Rio Janeiro to New York, under the direction of the American Minister at the Brazilian court, to testify against certain persons alleged to have been engaged in the slave trade, $250."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, was to amend the clause appropriating $1,800 for compiling, printing, and binding the Biennial Register for 1851, by striking out $1,800 and inserting $2,253.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert the following:

"And also a sum not exceeding $10,734 65, is hereby appropriated to pay Adam Boyd Hamilton, according to contract, for printing 20,000 and binding 18,610 copies, of 396 pages each, of the Register's report of the commerce and navigation of the United States, for 1851."

"The sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid to and expended under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, in procuring such copies or other evidences of the laws, decrees, or ordinances of the Spanish or Mexican Governments relating to or affecting land claims in California or New Mexico, and also such copies or memorials of said claims as may be obtained from the records of the Mexican Government, with all such other documentary and official evidence as the said Attorney General may deem necessary and proper, and may direct to be procured. And for the purpose of procuring the information aforesaid, the said Attorney General is hereby authorized to employ or appoint an agent, who is to act under the direction of, and to receive such compensation as the said Attorney General may allow and order: Provided, however, That the whole expense of agency, of procuring books and documents, of transportation, and of translation, and of everything connected with the work, except the printing, shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated."

Mr. WELLER. I move to strike out the words "Attorney General," wherever they occur in the amendment, and substitute for it "President."

Mr. BADGER. I hope that motion will not prevail. This subject, I believe, was pretty well considered and discussed on a similar motion made by my friend from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson,] when the Senate resolved to retain the provision in its present shape. I see no reason now why we should change that determination.

Mr. DAWSON. The vote, it will be recollected, was only a difference of one; altogether, as I thought at the time, for want of a thorough understanding of the subject. The object is to place this appointment in the hands of the President instead of the Attorney General. That is the only object. I trust that the proposition as made by the Senator from California will be adopted. In accordance with my views, I attempted the same thing when we were in Committee of the Whole. I am not now desirous of discussing the question.

Mr. BORLAND. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina fully, and hope the amendment to the amendment will not prevail. That Senator remarked that it was fully considered and discussed some time ago in Committee of the Whole, and the Senate determined to retain the amendment as it now stands in the bill. I do not think it at all necessary to go over the grounds in support of the amendment in its present form. When urged, I thought they were conclusive and satisfactory, and I hope they will be considered so now.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, there being on a division—yeas 22, nays 11.

The question recurred on concurring in the amendment as amended.

Mr. RUSK. I move to strike out of the amendment all in relation to the appointment of the agent to be sent to Mexico. I do not see that there is any use for him. He could not be used as legal authority in a court of justice; and these things had much better be left to the investigation of the parties themselves who are interested in the subject of the land titles. We appointed a commissioner some time ago for a similar purpose, and nothing has been done; and I apprehend that, under this provision, nothing will be done, or if anything should be done, it will be the collection of a mass of information which will be of no authority.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, my friend from Texas I think entirely misunderstands the purpose, and underrates the importance of this amendment. The Supreme Court have found themselves in such difficulty that they cannot get on with the consideration and adjudication of claims depending upon the Mexican and Spanish laws in force in those countries, because those laws are not to be obtained. The object is not to collect private documents; it is to collect the public laws from the public archives, Spanish and Mexican, which are necessary, in order that the courts in the Territories and States, and afterwards the Supreme Court, may be enabled to understand the law by which the cases are to be adjusted. When this collection is made, it will have just as much authority as any other collection of that kind. I happen to know that this is a subject in which the judges of the court feel a deep interest, as absolutely indispensable to enable them to discharge their duties properly. That is the state of the case.

Mr. RUSK. Then this appropriation is altogether wrong, because we need no agent. All that we need is a translator of these laws; for they are here in the State Department. All the Mexican laws upon the subject of land titles in California—in fact, all the Mexican laws—are here in the State Department. All that we need on the subject is a translator, authorized to translate and publish them. I know it is very difficult to get information—especially reliable information—by any agent sent to Mexico. It is a matter almost impossible to do so; and I apprehend this would be a needless expenditure of money. The amount is not great, and if I thought any good would come of it, I would not care about it; but my opinion is, that persons will depend upon the report we may receive for information, and when it comes, no information will be obtained; or, if any is obtained, it will be of such a character that, rather than throw any light on the subject, it will mislead.

Mr. PRATT. If I apprehend precisely the amendment on which we are about to vote, it is of more importance than it is supposed generally to be by the Senate. It directs the appointment of an officer to collect any documentary evidence which may exist in Mexico relating to land claims in California. Now, if we give authority to an officer of this Government to make that collection, it is an important inquiry whether we do not make what is collected by him, per se, evidence in all cases of land claims existing in California. I would inquire of my friend from California whether, where there are conflicting claims under Mexican grants, or any conflicting claims in which Mexican grants or Mexican documentary evidence may be introduced, he is willing, by adopting this amendment, to put it in the power of an officer of this Government to make a book, which he is to publish, under this authority, evidence in all such cases? I think, in that point of view, it is a question of deep importance, whether we shall be willing to intrust to any officer appointed by this Government, the power to select from existing Mexican documents, such as shall be evidence in reference to all land claims in California.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I do not see that the mere fact of the appointment of an agent to go to the city of Mexico for the purpose of obtaining copies of decrees and laws which may exist there, would of itself necessarily make the report of the agent legal testimony in the adjudication of the cases. But, sir, there may be some objection to it. I do not desire that the evidence which is procured in the city of Mexico, shall be considered as evidence before the land commissioners any further than it purports on its face to be. I do not believe that there is any vast amount of information to be acquired by this agent who may be dispatched to the city of Mexico, but I think it is worth while for this Government, if you can get an intelligent and honest officer, to report that there is nothing there; because I am sure that there will be a large amount of law manufactured in Mexico to suit the cases that may be pending before the commissioners. It is worth $10,000 to find out that fact alone—that there is nothing there. Then you will have precluded these men from subsequently manufacturing testimony, and manufacturing law, in the city of Mexico, in order to suit the particular cases which they may present before the land commissioners. For that reason I think it is highly politic that this officer should be appointed; that some person should go there and ascertain the fact whether there be any testimony there which is calculated to affect the land titles that are pending before the commissioners.

Mr. BERRIEN. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Texas, as I understand it, is to strike out the whole amendment.

Mr. RUSK. That portion only relating to the appointment of an agent to collect Mexican laws and evidence in relation to Mexican titles.

Mr. BERRIEN. I mean to say it is to strike out the whole of that portion of the amendment which relates to the collection of Mexican laws and documents. Mr. President, that portion of the amendment has two objects, one of which I should be disposed to support, and the other to oppose. So far as it proposes to collect the Mexican laws which may be applicable to the condition of California, it appears to me to be very proper that this Government should collect these laws, and put them into a volume accessible to all, and in such a form as to be easy of reference. For that we have a precedent in the case of Florida. When Florida was acquired, it became necessary, in settling the land titles in that Territory, to obtain easy access to the Spanish laws; and, under a resolution of the House of Representatives, Colonel White, of Florida, was appointed to make that compilation. It was received and approved by Congress, and has been in common use in the courts of the United States, when questions arise in relation to the land titles in Florida. So far, then, as this provision relates to the Mexican laws which may be applicable to land titles in California, it is, I think, very appropriate. And the book which would be published from such collection would be received as authority in the courts of the United States.

But the portion of the amendment on which I am speaking goes further. It provides for the collection of memorials relating to land claims in California, and for any documentary evidence that may be found upon that subject. In that extent, I am opposed to the appointment of any such agent. These are private documents, relating, I believe, to private interests, and I would not put upon any agent of the Government the responsibility of collecting together any documents which he might think of sufficient importance to be embodied in such a collection, and to exclude others which he might think not sufficiently important. Very serious injury might be produced to the rights of private individuals, by either the want of correct judgment, or the want of the correct exercise of that judgment by the agent who should be selected for this purpose. I would suggest, therefore, to the Senator from Texas, so to modify his motion as to strike out the latter portion of the amendment—that relating to memorials and documents—leaving the first part, which relates to the laws and ordinances of Mexico to be collected by the agent.

Mr. RUSK. There was so much noise in the Chamber, that I am satisfied the Senator from Georgia did not hear me when I was up before. The compilation of the Spanish laws, of which he speaks, comes up to about the time that the revolution took place in Mexico. So far, then, as the obtaining of the Spanish law is concerned, no good can result from the appointment of this agent: So far as I understand him, then, he objects only to the collection of private memorials which shall operate as testimony. So far as the collection of Mexican laws or titles in California is concerned, they are already in the State Department. All that is necessary on the subject is, to appoint some Spanish scholar to collect the laws, and translate and publish them for the use of the Supreme Court. They are all in the State Department; and therefore no good can be accomplished by the appointment of this agent; but I can see much injury, much mischief, that might result from it.

There are large and valuable tracts of land in controversy in California. So soon as this agent is appointed here, an effort will be made, as a matter of course, by adverse claimants, to throw into his way matter which might bear on one side or the other. Every effort will be made by agents for or against particular claims, to throw into his way such information, and such only as might answer their purposes. So that when the laws and information arrive here, the collection will be of an unsatisfactory character; and so far from being of any benefit, may mislead and do serious injustice to private claimants. Under such circumstances, there is no necessity for the modification of my amendment. It is an important matter. If the amendment itself be adopted, I believe that serious consequences to individuals will grow out of it, and I ask the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands have reported a bill providing for surveying the lands in California; and in that bill provision has been made for surveying the private claims—trying to distinguish them from the land which the Government owns. Other provisions are contemplated, by which the lands owned by individuals shall be discriminated and distinguished from the lands which are vacant and unappropriated. Every gentleman will, therefore, perceive at once that it becomes a matter of considerable consequence to ascertain what claims in California really belong to private individuals, and what claims do not; what claims are good, and what claims are bad.

Mr. RUSK. Will the Senator allow me to explain to him, that that information cannot be obtained at Mexico at all. The manner in which the titles in Mexican countries are issued, is, that the party goes forward and petitions the authority of the place where he wishes the land. They take and send a copy of that petition to the Government. If it is granted, it is returned, sanctioned by the Government, and becomes a part of the archives of the place where the individual petitions, and remains there as a part of his title. The title is afterwards made out. He obtains it, containing a copy of the first petition, a copy of the order of the Ayuntamiento upon it, a copy of the order of the Government, and a copy of the law. He obtains a copy; but the original is filed in the office where the land is granted; and all of that information is in California. None of it is to be found in Mexico at all.

Mr. WELLER. My friend from Texas is laboring under a misapprehension. California was one of the Mexican departments, and these grants were made directly by the Governor of the Department of California, with the concurrence of the Departmental Assembly. In order to make such a grant valid, it was only necessary that the petitioner should file an application with the Governor; and the Governor could thereupon issue the grant; but it was necessary that the Departmental Assembly should confirm that grant, in order to give a party a good title. Now, with that the Supreme Government had nothing to do at all, and yet there were grants made by the Supreme Government of Mexico in the department of California. The evidence of these grants is to be found, of course, at the seat of the Supreme Government at the city of Mexico, so that it is unlike the grants of which the Senator from Texas has spoken. There are many grants in California—most extensive ones, which are held directly from the Governor of the department with the concurrence of the Departmental Assembly. There are mineral lands in that State—quicksilver lands for instance—and they are grants that are derived directly from the Supreme Government, and the only evidence of the existence of these grants is to be found in the city of Mexico.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no doubt that the Senator from Texas is much more familiar with this subject than I am, because his residence, and his connection with the Mexican Government have made him familiar with all these matters. But I recollect perfectly well, that about the time we were ratifying the Mexican treaty, the grants to missions, and the grants made by the Supreme Government at Mexico to persons in California, who were to settle colonies in California, were questions which were very much mooted here; and I apprehend, from the remarks made by the Senator from California, that the evidence in reference to all these things is to be found at Mexico.

Now, to advert to the difficulties in which we shall be placed, I call the attention of the Senate to the initiative legislation—to the reports of the committees upon the subject. You will perceive at once that when our officers in California begin to act upon the subject of distinguishing public lands from private claims, all the individual interests which can be brought to operate upon them, will exhibit the claims which are claimed to be individual property. You have private interests, private motives, to operate upon any one who has an individual claim, to exhibit that claim for the purpose of having it approved and sanctioned by the surveyors, and receivers, and registers, and those who may be designated to act upon the claims—to allow or to reject them. Who is to represent the Government in all this? That is the question that I want to bring to the consideration of the Senate. You will have individual interests, as I have already remarked, stimulating every individual claimant to bring forward all the documents in support of his claim. Now, sir, who is to represent the Government in the large interests which will be involved in California? It therefore seems to me that if there be any evidence to be found at the seat of Government of Mexico which will throw light upon this subject, it is well worth while to make an effort to obtain it. If we can get none, of course no harm can be done—no injury will be done to anybody; but you may possibly obtain evidence which will enable a commissioner sent out there to place information in the hands of the officers of the Government that will subserve valuable interests in behalf of the Government. It is with that view that I think it will not be amiss to look into private memorials of claims which may be found in Mexico. It may be suggested that it may not constitute evidence. If it should not—if it requires additional proof to make it evidence upon the ground that foreign laws are facts to be proved in judicial proceedings like any other facts—still you obtain a knowledge that certain facts can be ascertained, and you know where you can look for evidence to substantiate those facts. There will be something gained in that point of view. I think there is a good deal in the idea suggested by the Senator from California, that if you get nothing more than to find that there are no facts, it may have a tendency to preclude the fabrication of facts upon which feeble claims may be predicated hereafter. It therefore seems to me, that connecting together all these suggestions, this expenditure of $10,000 may result in something valuable; and, if it does not, very little harm will be done.

Mr. HUNTER. This amendment was reported from the Committee on Finance upon the recommendation of Judge Catron of the Supreme Court, and Mr. Attorney General Crittenden. I ask that the letters of Judge Catron and the Acting Secretary of the Interior may be read.

They were read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, April 7, 1852.

SIR: On yesterday I was shown a document signed by the two Senators and one of the Representatives from the State of California, asking your opinion as to what amount of money would be necessary to send an agent to Mexico, for the purpose of collecting the laws applicable to land claims, now in course of investigation by the Board of Commissioners in California, and likely to be presented (in part) to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I agree with Attorney General Crittenden's statement, indorsed on the paper referred to, that the compilation of the laws proposed is not only necessary, but indispensable, in my opinion, to a proper understanding of the laws, according to which the claims originated. The eleventh section of the act of March 3d, 1851, imposes the duty, in terms, on the district and supreme courts to adjudge the claims according to the "laws, usages, and customs" of the Government from which each respective claim is derived. This duty Congress demands, and it must be performed. But it is impossible to do so unless the laws are known to the judges, according to which they are commanded to decide. These laws were foreign to our country previous to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. Since that treaty, they are as much municipal laws as those of Louisiana; and the courts of justice are equally bound to administer them, without proof of their existence and import. I therefore hope the courts will, at the soonest day, be furnished with a collection of those laws, and a true translation of them. As to the amount of expense, it is a mere trifle compared with the enormous amount in dispute.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

JOHN CATRON.

To the Hon. A. H. STUART,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, April 7, 1852.

SIR: I have the honor to request that an appropriation of $10,000 may be made, by the deficiency bill, now pending before the Senate, to enable the Department to send an agent to the city of Mexico, to collect, translate, and compile the various laws of the Mexican Congress, and the ordinances of the Supreme Executive of that Republic, having reference to donations and grants of public lands, &c. The Board of Commissioners, appointed under the act of 3d of March, 1851, to ascertain and settle land titles in California, is now in session at San Francisco, and it will probably soon become necessary in the discharge of their functions, under that act, for the courts of the United States to adjudge and determine the validity of those titles according to the laws, usages, and customs of the Government from which they were derived. Prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, these laws and customs were foreign to the country, and are now but little known or understood; and the necessity, therefore, of placing in the hands of the officers of the Government and of the Judiciary, the laws, usages, and customs by which their action is to be governed, is alike obvious and indispensable.

I am, sir, with much respect, your obedient servant,
J. J. CRITTENDEN, Acting Secretary.
Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
Senate of the United States.

Mr. RUSK. I dislike to be troublesome, but I see that by the adoption of this amendment we are going to make matter which I believe will be of serious injury to claimants in California. As far as the laws, which seem to be principally asked for by the Secretary of the Interior, are concerned, they are all in the State Department. All that is necessary on that subject is, to procure a Spanish scholar to collect the laws relating to the grants of land, and translate and publish them; and then you will have all the information. You can then make them evidence in your courts, and before the commissioners. Then you will have all the information, so far as the laws are concerned. But the letter, I see, goes to the "usages" and "customs," and contemplates the obtaining of matter which is to be used as evidence in relation to grants, &c. Now, I have some experience in this matter. After the revolution in Texas took place, and after the battle of San Jacinto, the former Governor and Secretary of State of Coahuila and Texas manufactured titles—ante-dated and manufactured them—to the amount of thousands of leagues. Suppose you appoint this commissioner and send him to Mexico. It is known that he is going there. They will allow him or not, as they choose, (and, by the way, they will be very jealous as to allowing him,) to ransack their archives. They will manufacture to order grants and petitions, and all these sorts of orders, and you will have no guarantee upon earth that they are correct, and thousands and thousands of acres, and perhaps the rights of individuals to land to the value of thousands of dollars will be jeopardized by this ex parte testimony, taken when they are not there. I know there are difficulties about it. If an individual claims a grant of land in California, there may be some difficulty in obtaining evidence of it in the archives of Mexico; if there is an adverse claim there will be great difficulty about it. But you send this agent, who knows nothing of this matter, and he collects what perhaps is manufactured upon the occasion in Mexico; and that is taken to determine the rights of the individuals in relation to their claims. And, when you get them, are they evidence? Not at all. The law requires the best evidence of which the nature of the case will admit; and this matter, taken ex parte, in this way, without either party having a right to examine into and determine its validity, will become no evidence at all, unless you pass an act of Congress to make it so. Under such circumstances, I see mischief in it; no good can result from it, and therefore I oppose it.

Mr. BADGER. I am really unaware of the difficulty which my friend from Texas sees in this matter. I think his reasoning is remarkably inconsecutive. He says that these people will forge papers by thousands. Now, the sooner we stop the door upon that practice, the better. If we send out an agent, the Senator says that these people will manufacture false claims. Well, they will have until the agent goes there, and the returns are made, to manufacture false claims. Now, if we appoint no agent, does my friend suppose there will not be the same room to manufacture false claims from this time forward? What good is done by it? As the honorable Senator from California says, it will be worth $10,000 to have an agent to go there, and report that no memorials or claims respecting lands in California can be found in the public archives there. This fact, so ascertained, will furnish strong presumptive evidence of the fraud of subsequent papers which might be introduced.

Then again, the Senator from Texas attributes, I think, entirely undue force to this proceeding. You are to get memorials of claims existing in the public archives there. Now, when you get them, what are they? They are but the memorials of claims. They ascertain the fact that there were such memorials there. They give to the claims no more effect or validity than if produced by private individuals. If the memorial is necessary, under the Spanish and Mexican laws, to determine the nature and extent of the grant founded upon it, why then, as a part of the grant, it ought to be evidence for the purpose of determining that. The only effect of the amendment is to procure the papers if they are there. It gives them no different or other effect than they would have if produced by private individuals; and, as the Senator from California says, it will have an influence in checking, at all events speedily, that process, which the Senator from Texas fears, of manufacturing false memorials and false claims.

Mr. SOULE. Mr. President, I am decidedly in favor of striking out the clause now under debate. It would confer upon an individual, whoever he may be, a power I am not ready to surrender to any individual. It would constitute him a priori a judge of what constitutes the laws of Mexico. Nor would he be limited to search for laws denominated by that name explicitly; but he would be the judge of other evidences of the law prevailing in Mexico. I hardly know of any individual in this country who, being at all conscious of the importance of the duties which such a provision would impose upon him, would dare to assume it. If he did, I would hardly be brought to place the least confidence in the judgment which he might pass upon a subject of so vast importance.

The laws of Mexico are written laws, to be found in books where they have been carefully printed, and are accessible to the Government, and accessible to every individual. Let these laws be printed by us, and let our tribunals, through a translation of these laws, be enabled to see what they mean, and what their bearing is, and not suffer any individual to be constituted the judge of what is the law in Mexico. I place the most absolute confidence in the judgment and discretion of the Attorney General; but, however far that confidence may go, it does not go far enough to incline me to let him be the judge of these great, complex, and intricate questions. The tribunals of the country will have to do, in the present case, what they have had to do in respect to Louisiana—what they have had to do with respect to Florida. They then had the books—they had translations from those books—but nothing through which the authority of a private individual could, under any circumstances, supersede the majesty of the law itself. I shall vote for striking out, decidedly.

Mr. GEYER. Before the question is taken, I would propose an amendment to strike out the following words:

"And also such copies, or memorials of said claims, as may be obtained from the records of the Mexican Government, and all such other documentary official evidence as the said Attorney General may deem necessary and proper, and may direct to be procured."

My object is to strike out all that part of the amendment which relates to copies of memorials of claims.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I should like to have the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass over this amendment for the present. I am not satisfied myself with the phraseology of the clause. I do not know that I shall be prepared, upon an examination of it, to vote for it as it now stands. I never have had an opportunity of examining the provisions of this clause till to-day; and I ask that it may be passed over by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. RUSK. I will consent to that, if the honorable Senator desires it; but whatever may be necessary to be done upon this subject can be put into some of the other appropriation bills. It will be better to place it in some other bill, and then I shall go with the Senator in procuring any information that may be necessary.

Mr. WELLER. We shall consume one day more, at least, in passing upon the other amendments; and if, after we get through the other amendments, I am satisfied I can procure such a section as will be satisfactory, I will offer it.

Agreeably to the request of Mr. WELLER, the latter portion of the amendment, relating to the appointment of an agent to collect Mexican and Spanish laws with regard to land titles, was passed over informally.

The first portion of the amendment providing for payment for printing and binding the report on commerce and navigation, was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert:

"For additional compensation for increasing the transportation of the United States mail between New York and Liverpool, in the Collins line of steamers, to twenty-six trips per annum, at such times as shall be directed by the Postmaster General, and in conformity to his last annual report to Congress, and his letter of the 15th of November last to the Secretary of the Navy, commencing said increased service on the 1st of January, 1852, at the rate of $33,000 per trip, in lieu of the present allowance, the sum of $235,500: Provided, That it shall be in the power of Congress, at any time after the 31st day of December, 1851, to terminate the arrangement for any additional allowance herein provided for, upon giving six months' notice."

The PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in that amendment.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

And provided, further, That the proprietors of said line of steamers shall consent to such a modification of the existing contract that the Postmaster General may advertise for, and accept proposals, for carrying the mails in suitable steamships, of not less than two thousand tons burden, between the United States and Great Britain, from and after the said 31st day of December, 1851, when said contract shall cease to be obligatory; and the Postmaster General, in case said modification shall be agreed to, shall advertise for such proposals, which shall be submitted to Congress at the next session.

My object in offering the amendment is, as I stated to the Senate the other day, to place this contract upon the same footing with the ordinary contracts for the transportation of the mails. The Senate have already, at this session, passed a bill authorizing the Postmaster General to advertise for conveying the mails between Vera Cruz and New Orleans, in a suitable steamship of a burden fixed by the terms of the law.

We are advised by the advocates of the original amendment that this contract is onerous upon the contractor—so onerous, indeed, that they will be obliged to abandon it from sheer inability unless their compensation be increased. They come to Congress for an increase of compensation. It is proposed, on the other hand, that the quantity of the service shall be increased also. In addition to that, I propose that the contract itself shall terminate at the period when Congress, by the terms of the amendment as it now stands, may withdraw the additional compensation.

My object is not to put an end to the transportation of the mails in steamships between this country and foreign countries. Far from it, sir. I recognize fully the duty of this Government to provide for the transportation of the mails between our own and other countries. I go further: I believe that it is the true policy of this country to confine this service to American hands. I would, therefore, be very far from favoring any scheme which would lead to the abandonment of ocean steam mail transportation by the Government.

On the other hand, it seems to me, that this system of contracts with particular individuals for long periods, has nothing in it to recommend it to legislative favor. It might be justified as an experiment; at the outset of ocean mail transportation, when no contract could be made except upon these terms. But since the experiment has been tried and has proved successful, surely we ought to avail ourselves of the earliest possible opportunity of bringing these contracts into our general mail system. This amendment simply effects that object. As the matter now stands, according to the friends of the Collins line, its proprietors are about to abandon their existing contract. They say, however, that they can go on, and that they will go on, if we grant them this additional compensation. We are urged to grant it, by appeals to national pride and public policy; appeals, I am free to confess, which have great influence upon me. But while I am thus disposed, I am unwilling to depart, any further than is absolutely necessary, from our general system, which is applicable not merely to our foreign transportation, but to our domestic postal system.

I would have the system uniform in its application to all transportation.

If this amendment be adopted, I am prepared to grant additional compensation for the limited period contemplated, and allow these gentlemen, with their steamships already constructed and benefited by this appropriation, to come into competition with future bidders for the foreign mail contract. On the other hand, let the Government be left at liberty to avail itself of any new route that may be proposed—the Northeastern and Galway route for example—which shortens the distance several hundred miles, and effects a great saving of time. Let the Government avail itself of all the routes, and all the competition between them. Leave the contracts open, precisely as all other contracts are left open—bring your ocean mail steam system within your general postal arrangements—place it upon a footing which cannot be complained of by the country as one of favoritism and jobbing, and then I think it will be sustained, and sustained liberally and cordially.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, after having addressed the Senate with so much latitude, in favor of the original amendment at an early day, I had intended to forbear altogether from further participation in the debate. I rise now, not for the purpose of arguing at length the merits of the proposition submitted by my honorable friend from Ohio, but barely to present the objections which I entertain to the amendment which he has offered. The proprietors of these steamers want aid. They have shown that the sum which the original amendment provides, is the least which will answer their purposes. The honorable Senator from Ohio says we shall have his vote for that aid, upon a condition to which he requires us to accede; and that is, that the contract may be terminated at the expiration of two years. What, then, would be the condition of the enterprise, and of the persons engaged in it, at that time? The contract is broken up! The vast outlay and expense in procuring and furnishing these steamers has been borne by the proprietors! The property falls into the hands of the proprietors. They have these steamers upon their hands, and the Government is at liberty to make contracts with others who may underbid them. The effect of that would be to throw upon their hands property for which they have no legitimate use. The steamers were built under a contract with the United States, for the purposes, not of the proprietors, but of the United States, and of an entirely different class and character from what the merchants would have built for their own use. The ships were required to be built so as to carry the mails; they were required practically to be built so that they would carry the mails with greater expedition than any other steamers; and, moreover, they were required to be built best adapted to warlike purposes.

Now, these merchants do not want, for their own purposes, steamers adapted to warlike purposes, and, if they are thrown upon their hands they will not want them for the purpose of carrying the mails. The proposition of the Senator from Ohio, therefore, amounts to this: That the United States, after having engaged these citizens to build steamers chiefly for the use of the Government, by way of experiment, and, after having made the experiment, and demonstrated its practicability, shall terminate the contract at the end of two years, and, for the sake of a better bargain, throw the burden of the loss upon the proprietors.

I should have no objection to the amendment of the honorable Senator from Ohio at all, if the Senate would add to it a provision that the Government should take the steamers on the terms of the contract, at the expiration of that time. But, I feel sure that the moment we should offer that further amendment, the honorable Senator would retreat from his proposition. That being the case, we are obliged to decline to accede to it. The boon which the honorable Senator offers is too costly altogether. It is like the gratitude of Rome—the recipients would sink beneath its weight.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a single moment. This amendment was offered by me in good faith, for the purpose of putting the proposition in a shape in which some of those who are opposed generally to this steamship contract system, could vote for it; and it was framed in precise accordance with a bill which has already passed the Senate at this session, providing for a steam mail ship communication between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. I could not have anticipated an objection, such as has been made by the honorable Senator from New York, because we have been informed repeatedly in the course of the debate upon this subject, that if this increased compensation is not allowed, the proprietors of these steamships will abandon, and must necessarily abandon their contract. What then follows? They cannot ask the Government to take these steamships off their hands, because they have broken their contract with the Government, under the pressure, it is said, of an urgent necessity which they could not control. I do not dispute the existence of that necessity, but if that necessity does exist—if they are prepared now to abandon their contract—if they have thereby released the Government from its obligation to take these steamships at their original cost, then the absence of such a provision in this amendment cannot be a legitimate ground of complaint, because they come to us in the very same predicament in which the amendment would place them. I do not propose, however, to prolong the debate; but as I conceive the amendment to be one of some importance, I will ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I should regard the passage of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as a defeat of the whole measure. Its adoption would render it excessively doubtful whether I would vote for the proposition myself. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio provides—

“That the proprietors of said line of steamers shall consent to such a modification of the existing contract, that the Postmaster General may advertise for and accept proposals for carrying the mails in suitable steamships, of not less than two thousand tons burden, between the United States and Great Britain, from and after the said 31st day of December, 1854, when said contract shall cease to be obligatory.”

This takes away the quality of these ships, which constitutes one of the main grounds on which I have voted for them. According to this proposition, you have no security for the strength of the ships, and therefore they will be suitable only for the purpose of carrying the mails. They would not be suitable for war purposes, and could not be used by the Government in case of emergency. One of the strongest arguments in favor of this system, which induced me to support it at all, is, that if we have a sufficient number of these ships employed in carrying the mail, we shall save much more in other ways; by that means, than we lay out upon these ships.

They will save us great expense by preventing the necessity of adding to the Navy proper; because we must necessarily keep pace with other countries who are improving their naval forces, either by adding to the Navy proper, or having ships under such arrangements that, in case of an emergency, we can use them for purposes of national defense. Then if we abandon the war qualities of these ships, a necessity exists at once, if we are to keep pace with other countries, to add to our steam navy proper. That will bring along with it a great train of expenditures. It must necessarily add to the number of officers, and to the number of seamen, who will have but little if any employment, so long as peace remains, and I trust that will be a great while; and the better we are prepared for war, the less will be its probable occurrence.

There will be another difficulty in regard to the amendment to the amendment. It provides also, “that the Postmaster General, in case said modification shall be agreed to, shall advertise for ‘such proposals, which shall be submitted to Congress at the next session.’” Now, according to this, the contract is to terminate in a little over two years. What is to be the effect of that? It will, in my judgment, be simply to strengthen and encourage the rival Cunard line. The Cunarders will at once see that you will get into another squabble about making another contract, and they will be ready then to take the monopoly of carrying your mails. What follows from that? The right to charge what postage they please—the right to charge what freight they may choose, and the right to charge just what they may please for passengers. The adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, therefore, will lead to an abandonment of this contract. It will be a temporary continuance of it, and a temporary continuance alone. My support of the original amendment goes upon the ground that we are to carry our own mails, and that we are to have the control of the ships.

I see already—and it is brought about by the present arrangement—that propositions are being made in England to the American Minister to consult in regard to the reduction of ocean postage. I am just reminded by the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SOULE,] that the British charge now $1 25 for a letter going to Porto Rico, because every letter going in that way has to go by their steamers. The whole history of that Government shows that as soon as we abandon the carrying of the mail between this country and England, we will throw the monopoly into their hands; and they will then put on a tariff of postage that will bring in a large revenue to that Government. Now, I am not willing to give England that advantage, and so great an expense as will follow to the citizens of my own country.

Correspondence is important to commerce. The prompt dispatch of letters has an important bearing upon the price of the articles you have to sell, and the price of the articles you have to consume. The additional compensation which is asked by the original amendment, will amount to less than two cents a head upon the people of the United States. Now, are you going to abandon this line for the purpose of saving this amount of money, when you will lose twenty times as much by giving the monopoly of carrying information between the raisers of your produce and the purchasers of it in England, and in Europe, into the hands of a foreign Government with all the advantages which will follow to other nations and other disadvantages which must necessarily result to us?

In my investigations upon this subject, a circumstance has fallen under my observation, and I beg leave to mention it to the Senate. I will premise it by saying that you have invited foreigners here by your liberal laws in relation to naturalization, and by your liberal provision in regard to the public lands. You have made them citizens. They have correspondence with their relations whom they have left behind them. I have ascertained from two or three individuals, that the laborers, and especially the Irish females who labor hard for very small wages, save about one half their earnings, purchase small bills of exchange, transmit them to the country from which they came to relieve poverty and want in aged parents, who have not the means of coming to this country. When you abandon this line, you surrender into the hands of the British Government the power to tax at high rates, this correspondence of your own citizens—these messengers of affection between the daughter and the mother. I for one am not willing, under any pretense whatever, to surrender such a power into the hands of a foreign Government for the purpose of taxing these individuals, whose conduct in this particular is so highly creditable to human nature.

Sir, we have money in the Treasury. The Treasury is overflowing. That money you cannot keep there. It will be expended. Your revenues are rapidly increasing; every year the money will be expended either upon useful objects—and this I regard as one of the most useful—or it will be squandered to favorites who may do the most work in a presidential election. The money will go out of the Treasury of the United States in one of these two ways. Here I say, that by the expenditure of a small amount you will benefit commerce—benefit the planting and purchasing part of the community—benefit your citizens generally, and do yourselves the credit of rivaling a Power which has hitherto claimed the mastery of the seas, by this line which has already succeeded in distancing your opponents. Under such circumstances, I shall vote against any proposition whatever, calculated to embarrass the original amendment; and I hope and trust that we shall take the question on it soon, without much further discussion. I would like to say more, but I believe every Senator's mind must be fully made up, and I do not think any changes will be made by talking, of which there has been too much already.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to say, in reference to the amendment for the Collins line of steamers, that I consider myself governed by what I have ascertained to be the wish and desire of the mercantile interest of the State which I have the honor in part to represent here, rather than what my judgment demanded; but having ascertained what is the wish of the interest in my State which is to be benefited, or otherwise by it, I desire to carry out in good faith what is their desire.

Now, sir, I think I can show in a few words that there is hardly a Senator upon this floor—not even the Senator from Ohio, I think—who can vote for the amendment to the amendment, if it is properly understood. The Senate is aware that the Government of Great Britain is paying to its line of steamers a large amount of money. This amendment proposes that after the end of the year 1854, the Postmaster General shall advertise for proposals to carry the American mail, not confining it to American steamers, but leaving the competition open to the British line of steamers. Every Senator knows that if this were so, the British Government, paying some $600,000 or $700,000 to their line of steamers for carrying their mail, could carry the American mail without additional cost. The inevitable result, therefore, is, if you adopt the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, to throw the carriage of the American mail to the British line of steamers; for it can underbid the American steamers which are confined to carrying the American mail, provided that the British Government continue to pay their line the amount they now pay. That is beyond a doubt. It must be evident to the mind of every one who will look to it. I therefore, in attempting to carry out what I believe to be the wish of the great mercantile interest of Maryland, shall vote against this amendment to the amendment, because I am sure it will have for its direct tendency and inevitable result, that the British steamers, and those alone, will be employed in carrying the mail between New York and Liverpool.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, it was not my desire to admit in competition for carrying this mail any other than American steamers, and I presume, if it was not found out by the Senator from Maryland, no person would suppose that any other but an American steamer could enter into this competition. I will say, further, that no such idea was ever suggested with reference to the steamships which are to ply between Vera Cruz and New Orleans. The provision there was simply for steamships; and, if the objection applies in this case, it applies quite as forcibly to that. For the purpose, however, of obviating the objection, I will insert, with the consent of the Senate, between the word “suitable” and the word “steamships,” the word “American.”

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM in the chair.) That alteration can only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. PRATT. I object to it. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and I want to vote upon that amendment upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CHASE. I am not disposed to quarrel with the decision of the Chair, but I would simply suggest that a few days since, the President of the Senate, then occupying the chair, held that under the rule, an amendment of this sort could be made by a majority of the Senate, without unanimous consent. That decision was made upon a suggestion of my friend from North Carolina, who may recollect it.

Mr. BADGER. That is the case; but I was about suggesting to my friend from Maryland to withdraw his objection. It does not advance the matter at all; because the Senator from Ohio, if this proposition should be voted down, could immediately offer an amendment with the word objected to in it.

Mr. PRATT. My only objection is, that the Senator asserts in the commencement of his speech, that I was the only one in the Senate who had discovered this, and therefore intimated that his amendment does not correctly bear the construction which I have put upon it. If the Senator believes what he has argued to the Senate, then he is prepared to vote for the amendment as it stands. I want to see if he is willing to record his vote in favor of the amendment as it stands. He says it does not bear the construction which I have placed upon it. Now, I want to see if, upon the yeas and nays, he will vote for his own amendment.

Mr. BADGER. I admit now that the Senator from Maryland is right.

Mr. CHASE. I submit always to the correction of gentlemen who are distinguished by their legal knowledge, and uniform courtesy, as is the Senator from Maryland. I will therefore avail myself of his suggestion, and move to insert the word "American" before the word "steamships."

Mr. RUSK. Is not that out of order? Is not the proposition pending, an amendment to an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment cannot now be made. There is already an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. CHASE. I think that I can modify it without unanimous consent, if the Senator from Maryland should persist in his objection. And now I will go on with the few remarks which I have to make, in reply to the honorable Senator from Texas.

So far as his objection relates to the adaptability of these steamers to war purposes, I will say that that was discussed in reference to the Vera Cruz and New Orleans line; and the Senate then determined, by a very considerable majority, that this adaptation was not necessary to a steamer employed in the transportation of the mails. I recollect very well that, upon that occasion, it was argued with much ability and eloquence, that it was a matter of extreme necessity that that peculiar feature should be retained in the bill, for the purpose of protecting our commerce against depredations. But the Senate were of a different opinion. They thought that the business of transporting the mails ought to be disconnected from our naval service. In that opinion I certainly concur, and I do not now propose to reargue the grounds of it.

The second objection of the honorable Senator from Texas is, that this amendment proposes the abandonment of the contract. It does propose to abandon the contract, or, rather, to terminate the contract, with the consent of the contractors, after two years. It proposes to do nothing without their consent. If they do consent, they consent voluntarily, and of their free will, and in view of the additional compensation to be granted. Now, suppose they consent; what, then, follows, according to the argument of the Senator? Why, that we abandon all ocean postal arrangements. I see no such consequence. If that were to follow, I have already said that I would be one of the very last to propose anything which would interfere with our communication between the Old World and the New; anything which would interfere with that communication under American control; for I believe that that communication should be maintained; and I believe, also, that it should be maintained under American direction and control.

But the Senator from Texas, it seems to me, a little overshoots the mark when he appeals to us to continue this system of contracts, in order that we may convey cheaply letters from the Irish employees of the hotels and private families. Sir, I desire to convey these letters cheaply. I would convey them, if I could, at far cheaper rates than they now pay. I would lay no tax, which was not absolutely necessary, upon the interchanges of affection. But what does the Senator propose to do? He proposes to make affection tributary to war; he proposes to make benevolence minister to conflict; he proposes to lay a tax upon this very communication for the purpose of cheapening the expense to the Government in regard to its naval marine. His argument, therefore, makes against himself. Let this ocean postage communication be open to contract; do not burden it with a portion of the war expenses of the Government; and, my word for it, we will have transportation at cheaper rates than we can possibly have under the system of contracts, for long periods of time, with special individuals.

Again: the Senator complains that by terminating this contract we introduce a system of favoritism. Why, Mr. President, the very object of this amendment is to get rid of that. What favoritism can be worse than employing particular individuals for long periods of years, giving them a greater rate of compensation than is paid for the same service to the British steamers, and then increase that compensation as largely as the original amount proposes to increase it? That may be endured, if it is for a limited time. The amendment, as it now stands, proposed to limit this additional compensation to two years, or rather not to limit it to two years, but to retain to Congress the power of discontinuing it after the term of two years.

What is that power? Why, we know very well that it is one which cannot and will not be exercised, if you put a pressure outside of the walls of Congress which will be potent enough with this increased compensation, and the prospect of its continuance during a period of seven years to come, to defeat all efforts to discontinue it. I am, therefore, in favor of a plain, open course upon this subject. Terminate the contract at the end of two years, instead of retaining to Congress the right simply to discontinue the increase of compensation. Leave the contract with the Government open to free competition, only provided that your transportation shall be in suitable vessels and of suitable tonnage. Leave it open to free competition, and not only shall we not be visited with any of the disastrous consequences which the Senator predicts, but I am quite confident that we will promote the cause of cheap ocean postage, and therefore minister to those communications for which he has been so eloquent an advocate. I thank him, Mr. President, for every word which he utters in favor of persons so circumstanced; and if I believed it was necessary to abandon this amendment of mine to achieve that object, I should most certainly do so. But I do not believe it; I believe the object will be defeated by the very plan which he recommends.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I want the ear of the Senator from Ohio for a moment; for I should be exceedingly sorry to find myself in the predicament in which he puts the supporters of the original amendment. I think that I will show him, in about three minutes—and I do not want to occupy more time—that it is exactly the reverse of the case as he puts it. He says that, by supporting this amendment, we tax civilization and domestic affection, and make them subsidiary to war, because, by this payment to these vessels, we get more expensive ships than we otherwise might have. Now, sir, just look at it. We must have—we are bound to have—a steam marine. According to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, a steam frigate costs $196,000 a year to lie still, making visits of state about the harbors of the Mediterranean, entertaining savage princes, and so forth. It costs us $196,000 a year to keep a steam frigate thus employed; while, with the additional ship that is to be put upon this line, the average expense for keeping up each of these ships will only amount to a little more than $170,000 a year; and they will be more efficient for the purposes of war—better ships than were ever built for the Navy. We will then have these ships at $170,000 a year, each doing this service. You will make these vessels-of-war subsidiary to the purposes of civilization, and the interchange of all those communications, which civilized and refined society must keep up on both sides of the Atlantic. We make these vessels subsidiary to that, instead of making them subsidiary to war, and we do it at a cheaper rate than we could keep up vessels-of-war doing nothing. There are to be five of these vessels. The original amendment proposes to pay them $558,000 a year, which makes about $170,000 a piece. To keep up a steam frigate costs $196,000 a year. One of these vessels carries the mails semi-monthly across the ocean, and discharges this high demand of civilization, and of affection, and everything which belongs to an advanced state of society and civilized life; and instead of costing more for doing that, it actually costs less.

In addition to that, as has already been suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, there is a constant return of postages coming in. Now, I say that this is making grim-visaged and iron-visaged war harness himself and work for the use and ministry of peace. This, sir, is one single step toward that age that has been so long foretold in prophecy, when the sword shall do the work of the pruning-hook, and the instruments of war shall be turned into the instruments of husbandry. Adopt this amendment and pass this bill, and then these great leviathans of the deep will do something else than minister to national vanity and national pride. They will become auxiliaries in the great work of civilizing, christianizing, refining, and advancing society. It is for this reason that I go for it. I confess I felt exceedingly mortified when I heard the sagacious and kind-hearted Senator from Ohio take such a perverse and perverted view of this matter as to say that this scheme, so full of beneficence, so full of the advancement of the great interests of society, was, on the other hand, taxing affection to make it minister to war. Sir, he has looked at it through a wrong medium, unless I totally misunderstand the purposes and objects we have in view.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, it is rather late to undertake to make a speech upon this subject, but if the Senate are disposed to sit the question out, I shall be compelled now to make the few remarks which I propose to offer upon this amendment.

Mr. WELLER. If the Senator from Arkansas will give way, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn. I understand that the Senator will necessarily consume some two or three hours at least in giving his views upon this subject, and the Senate certainly do not desire to sit that long to-day. For that reason, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 18, noes 19.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, I would greatly have preferred, on my own account, and on that of the Senate, not to have fatigued the Senate by asking them to listen this afternoon to what I have to say. It is now nearly four o'clock; but to gratify a majority, I will have to render myself, perhaps, and a very large minority of the Senate, very uncomfortable for the residue of the day.

Mr. CASS. I wish the honorable Senator would give way. It is a matter of comity due to a Senator under these circumstances, to adjourn.

Mr. BADGER. I should have no sort of objection, but I think that the honorable Senator from Arkansas has already had a reasonable opportunity of being heard upon the subject.

Mr. CASS. The Senator from Arkansas does not desire to be heard to-day, and it is a matter of comity, under such circumstances, that the Senate should adjourn. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 26, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved. The SPEAKER. The first business in order is a motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Senate bill No. 331, entitled "An act to grant to certain settlers on the Menomonee purchase, north of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, the right of preemption."

DISABILITY OF JUDGES.

Mr. McLANAHAN. Before proceeding to the execution of the special order, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up a bill of much pressing public necessity, and which ought to be passed speedily—a bill to provide for the holding of the district court in the District of Columbia, in case of the sickness or disability of the chief justice of the circuit court. If the House will allow me to make a moment's explanation, I can satisfy them of the public necessity and utility for pressing this bill.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. McLANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, the first Monday in June is the day fixed by law for holding the district court of the District of Columbia. The chief justice of the circuit court is the judge of the district court, and, of course, possesses original admiralty jurisdiction. It is well known that Chief Justice Cranch has, for a long time past, from protracted sickness and the infirmities of old age, been unable to discharge his official duties. About the first of this month, "A bill to provide for the holding of the district court of the District of Columbia, in cases of the sickness or other disability of the district judge," passed the Senate, and it is my object now, for reasons which I will presently state, to ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up this bill, and put it upon its passage.

There is now, and has been for some time past, a very considerable number of important cases in this court, delayed on account of the feeble health of Judge Cranch. Among some of these cases, there are several of importance in which the Government of the United States is largely interested. During the war with Mexico, captures were made on the Pacific coast by our public vessels. We had not, at that time, any regularly-organized courts to take cognizance of these cases, and the distance was too great to send the prizes home for adjudication. To meet the necessity of the case, courts of admiralty were temporarily organized there, under the direction and authority of the military and naval commanders on that station, with the assent and approval of the Secretary of the Navy. The captors of prizes, under the orders of their superiors, appealed to the jurisdiction of the courts thus constituted; and they, in the exercise of the admiralty powers, with which they conceived they were invested, in some of the cases, condemned the vessels, and decreed sales. The proverbial energy and zeal of Captain John B. Montgomery in protecting the interests of his Government, was exemplified in his capture of the ship Admittance, and her cargo. There appears to have been ample testimony to show that this vessel was a lawful prize. But on an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, it was ruled in this case, that the informally-organized admiralty court at Monterey, had no authority in the premises. At the same time, it was intimated that the district court of this District had original admiralty jurisdiction in such cases, and that the captors might libel the vessel and cargo, and justify by showing good cause of capture; if the justification was made out, and the vessel and cargo condemned as a prize, it would afford a good defense in an action against the officer who made the capture. The owners of the Admittance and her cargo have instituted a suit against Captain Montgomery for damages, and that action is now pending in court. It is therefore evident, that the means of making a successful defense on the part of a public officer of the Government, who was in the faithful discharge of his duty at the time he seized this ship and her cargo, depend upon the prompt action of Congress upon the bill to which I have alluded.

Now, sir, one word in regard to the provisions of the bill itself. It proposes no additional expense to the Government, but simply confers upon one of the associate justices of the circuit court, the authority to hold a district court, and exercise admiralty jurisdiction. The case is one of such pressing public necessity, that it will, I trust, commend itself to the good sense of this House, and meet with no opposition or delay. I move to put the bill upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The Clerk then read the bill through.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House of the passage by that body of an act to authorize the construction of railroads through the public lands, in certain cases;

An act to provide for the issuing of patents, for a certain class of confirmed private land claims in Louisiana; and

A resolution authorizing the closing of the accounts of certain officers of the Army; and requesting the concurrence of the House therein.]

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I wish to inquire of the gentleman who reported this bill, whether there is any provision made for payment for the services of the judge thus called upon to act in case of the sickness or disability of the chief justice?

Mr. McLANAHAN. There is no provision made in the bill for additional payment.

Mr. CLEVELAND. In no form?

Mr. McLANAHAN. Yes, sir; in no form. I will offer the following amendment as a new section to the bill, upon which I call the previous question:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the associate judge holding the district court as aforesaid, shall, and is hereby empowered, to sit in the said circuit court in any case of appeal or of error from his own decision in said district court, in the same manner as if said district court had not been held by him.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his call for the previous question, that I may propound an inquiry to him.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. SEYMOUR. From the reading of the bill I understand it to provide that the judge should sit in appeals from his own court. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary whether that is so; and, if it is, whether it is not a new provision of law?

Mr. McLANAHAN. That is so. It is a new provision of law; but under the exigencies of this case, it is deemed proper that such a provision should exist. The appeal from the district court to the circuit court, although it is an appeal from one of the judges who sits in the district court, would only be a matter of form; because, in the cases now up for trial, in which the Government is interested, there is no doubt about the fact of the ability of the Government to show that the vessels, which were captured during the Mexican war, were prizes. The disability of the chief justice of the circuit court to hold the district court prevents those who were the captors of these vessels from setting up that defense in the suits brought against them, as representatives of the Government, for damages. And it is a mere matter of form, in which the proof will be submitted to ascertain on a question of prize or not, whether these vessels so captured belong to the enemy, and were carrying a cargo for the purpose of supplying the enemy or not. The main object of this bill is for the trial of these causes; and, although the district judge will sit and hear the cause in admiralty, the appeal which may be taken from his decision will come before him, with his other associate judges, in the circuit court of the United States. Chief Justice Cranch may be on the bench, for aught I know; but, under the exigencies of the case, and the circumstances I have just detailed, I think there can be no hesitation about the propriety of passing this bill at this time.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. The answer to my inquiry is entirely satisfactory, as it shows that the course proposed to be adopted by this bill is not an extraordinary one.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then put upon the amendment, and it was adopted.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The question now being, Shall the bill pass?—

Mr. McLANAHAN demanded the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken, and the bill was passed.

FEES OF DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Before the House proceeds to the execution of the order of the day, I would beg leave to say that I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask the unanimous consent of this House to move a resolution discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of House bill No. 146. My object for having the Committee of the Whole discharged from the further consideration of this bill is, that it may be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, as there are important alterations that it is desirable should be made in it. It is a bill regulating the fees of district attorneys, marshals, &c., in the district and circuit courts of the United States.

There being no objection it was so ordered.

CHARLES REYNOLDS.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a joint resolution, of which previous notice has been given. I will state briefly that it is a matter in which not only the interest but the honor of the Government is involved. It is a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to ratify and confirm an exchange of lands between the United States and Charles Reynolds, of the city of Natchez, of the State of Mississippi. If I may be allowed to make one word of explanation—

Mr. HALL. Does this come out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. BROWN. The facts of this case I will state in one word. The Government owned a lot in Natchez, upon which they proposed to erect a marine hospital. Mr. Reynolds owned one which was deemed more eligible, and by an arrangement between him and the Government officers, there was an exchange of lots. The Government has erected a building worth some $60,000 upon the lot which they have obtained from Mr. Reynolds, and to which he has given them a deed; but when he asks a deed for the Government lot, the Secretary of the Treasury discovers that he has no power to make the deed. If it be true that a contract unexecuted upon one side is not executed upon the other, then Mr. Reynolds is still entitled to his lot, and the $60,000 house which the Government has put upon it. Then I say it is a matter of interest to this Government to allow the exchange, which is all that Mr. Reynolds asks. If they refuse that, then, in an action of ejectment, he can recover this lot, with the $60,000 house upon it. I ask, under these circumstances, that the House will allow me to introduce that joint resolution. I ask that the resolution be read.

The joint resolution was then read a first and second time by its title, and having been engrossed according to order, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BROWN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was then taken upon the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

COLLISION OF VESSELS.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. FLORENCE. I merely wish to introduce and refer it to the Committee on Commerce. I hope the gentleman will allow me to do so.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will it be taken out of the morning hour?

Mr. FLORENCE. It will not, as I understood the Speaker when the question was asked on the other side.

Mr. HAMILTON. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. FLORENCE. It is a bill to provide the better for guarding against the collision of steamers and sail-vessels in the night-time. Humanity prompts the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was then introduced and read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RIGHTS OF PRE-EMPTION.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon referring House bill No. 331, entitled "An act to grant to certain settlers on the Menomonee purchase, north of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, the right of preëmption," to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HALL. If the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS], who is entitled to the floor, will permit me, I will make an explanation in regard to this bill. I beg leave to make this suggestion to my friend from Maryland, that the Senate bill proposes merely to protect the rights of the settlers of a small tract of country in the State of Wisconsin. There is a pressing need for the passage of the Senate bill, for if it be not passed before the first day of June next, it will fail to have any effect whatever upon the settlers whom it is intended to benefit. The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands is a general bill, and there is no pressing necessity for its passage. I am, therefore, willing that it shall be rejected, and that the Senate bill be passed.

Mr. EVANS. Under these circumstances I will defer the remarks which I intended to make, in order that the general business of the country may be proceeded with. I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to agree that the amendments which were reported by the Committee on Public Lands shall be rejected.

Mr. HALL. I am willing that they shall be rejected.

Mr. EVANS. And that the Senate bill itself shall be passed?

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. EVANS. I desire to say that there are a number of reports which the gentleman desires to present here, and my sole object is to do what I can towards forwarding the public business. Under those circumstances, I will withhold any further remarks upon the subject, and I move the previous question.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman waive the call for the previous question for one moment? I cannot withdraw the amendment. I would do so if I had the right. I wish, however, that it may be rejected.

Mr. EVANS. I now move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The motion pending is to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DEAN. If this motion prevails, can we pass upon these amendments?

The SPEAKER. No amendment will be in order under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. Then it is impossible to pass the original bill at present, if it goes to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that it follows at all. Under the operation of the previous question, the question will be taken first upon the motion to commit, then upon the amendments of the Committee on Public Lands, and then upon the bill itself.

The question was then taken on the motion to commit, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. HALL. My purpose now is, that the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands be rejected.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was rejected.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and was subsequently read the third time.

Mr. EVANS. I ask the previous question upon the passage of this bill.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put, and being put, the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was just passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRANT FOR RAILROADS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 3, to grant the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. H. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill, which grants the right of way and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the town of Hannibal to the town of St. Joseph, in said State, and from the city of St. Louis to such point on the western borders of said State as may be designated by the authority of said State, was then read through, and the following is the fifth section thereof, viz:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if either of the said railroads shall not be completed within ten years, the said State of Missouri shall be bound to pay to the United States the amount which may be received by said State upon the sale of any part of said lands granted to the use of such road, the title to the purchasers under said State remaining valid; and the title to the residue of said lands, granted to the use of said roads, shall reinvest in the United States, to have and to hold the same in the same manner as if this act had not been passed."

The Committee on Public Lands propose to strike out the above section, and to insert, in lieu thereof, the following, viz:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State, shall be disposed of by said State only in manner following, that is to say: that a quantity of land, not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections, on each road, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of said road, may be sold; and, when the Governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that said twenty miles of said road is completed, then another like quantity hereby granted, may be sold, and so, from time to time, until said road is completed; and if said road be not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

Mr. HALL. I only wish to state to the House that that bill is precisely the same bill which was under discussion in this House in the early part of the session for several weeks. The Senate have passed it. It has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands in this House, and they have reported it back with a single amendment. The amendment proposes to strike out the fifth section of the Senate bill, and insert a different provision. The fifth section of the Senate bill is, that the lands granted by the bill shall be disposed of only as the work progresses, and that, if the work be not finished within ten years, then the sales of the land shall stop, and the money taken and received for the lands shall go into the Treasury of the United States. The Committee on Public Lands provide that these lands shall only be disposed of in this way: that lands along twenty miles of the road may be disposed of first, and no more; and that, when the road is finished through that twenty miles, and the Governor of the State shall certify that fact to the Secretary of the Interior, then the State of Missouri may sell the lands twenty miles further along the road, and so on, until the road is finished; but, if the road is not finished within ten years, then the sale shall stop, and the land remaining unsold shall revert to the United States.

At the commencement of this session I urged as a reason why the House should act upon the bill, either to pass or reject it, the fact, that a reference of it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would place it beyond our reach. That bill, however, was referred, and four months experience must certainly have taught gentlemen here, that the committal of the bill was the defeat of the bill. All that I ask the House, therefore, is, to vote either for or against the bill now; either kill it, or pass it. With a view to bring the House to a direct vote, I move the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Missouri withdraw his demand for the previous question for a single moment? and I will renew it. If, when the gentleman hears my proposition, and does not accede to it, I will not insist on offering it, and will go for the bill.

Mr. HALL. I cannot yield the floor, but I will withdraw for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Illinois to make a remark.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will recollect that there is some difficulty in retaining the floor if it is objected to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will renew the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only mentions it that there may be no mistake between the gentlemen. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. HALL. Upon one condition; and it is, that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. DEAN. I ask if the gentleman from Missouri has not left the floor?

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman from Illinois have the floor if I withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a point of order. Did not the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] move the previous question, and leave the floor and take his seat?

The SPEAKER. He did so; but he had a right to withdraw the demand.

Mr. DEAN. I now move to lay this bill upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is a privileged motion, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] for the purpose of making it. The gentleman's right, however, is clear to make that motion, even if the previous question is pending.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The motion is withdrawn, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] has the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am for this bill. I believe it is the best means by which to dispose of the public lands; that it brings them into the market, and enables you to sell the alternate sections by constructing roads, which otherwise would not be settled at all. You can sell them at $2 50 an acre, whereas you cannot now sell them for $1 25. But the point to which I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] and the House is this: One of the roads to be constructed is from St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, to Hannibal, on the Mississippi river. There is now constructing, and looking towards the connection in the East, and under contract, a road leading through the States of Illinois, Indiana, and a corner of Ohio, which, with a few links added to it, will be constructed to the Atlantic cities. There is now under contract from the city of Quincy towards the Illinois river, a distance of thirty miles—thirty miles there is no road. There is already constructed and in operation a road from the Illinois river to Springfield, and arrangements have been made, I believe, to place under contract, pretty soon, a road connecting with the Indiana road. There are about fifteen miles between the city of Quincy and some point upon this other road, or the terminus of the road, a long line on which there is no public lands. What we desire is, that we of the State of Illinois may have an opportunity to connect our road with this road being constructed by the Government, and make it advantageous to us by the privilege of the right of way through any of the land on the road in that district.

Mr. HALL. I do not object to the amendment if you will offer it at once, and move the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment, and when it is read I shall move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. As an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois two questions in the hearing of this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I only want to ask two questions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to yield the floor to the gentleman from New York temporarily for explanation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; but I have no objection to the gentleman asking me a question while I am upon the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask these two questions, and I wish them answered either by the gentleman from Illinois, or by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. This bill is a Senate bill, reported with an amendment, by the Committee on Public Lands. That amendment is that these lands are to be sold. These lands are granted upon the condition that only the alternate sections of twenty miles are to be sold within a certain period—within one or two years—and then the next twenty miles within a certain period, and so on, until the whole of the lands granted are sold; and if those conditions are not performed, then the lands revert to the Government of the United States.

Mr. LETCHER. No, it is not so. That is not the provision at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask gentlemen if they will tell me whether they expect—whether the Committee on Public Lands expect—or will say that if the lands are not sold according to these contracts they ever will revert to the Government of the United States? I ask them to point out a single instance in the history of the legislation of this country, one single act, where lands have been granted by the Government on condition, and that condition not being performed, that they have ever come back to the Government.

Mr. HALL. I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Illinois with the distinct understanding that he should not yield it to other persons for the purpose of making explanation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now the other question is this—

The SPEAKER. There is too much confusion in the Hall. Gentlemen will be pleased to come to order. Strictly speaking, in the opinion of the Chair, he has a right to require every gentleman upon the floor to retain his seat, except the member entitled to the floor addressing the Chair. If the Chair could for a moment hope that gentlemen upon the floor would sustain him in such a decision, he is very much disposed to enforce that right this morning. [Disorder still continuing.] Gentlemen to the right of the chair are out of order. By an express rule of the House it is out of order to pass between the Chair and the gentleman who is addressing the Chair. The Chair again states that he believes the right is clear in him to require that each and every gentleman shall retain their seats, except the member addressing the Chair. If he could have any assurance that this body would sustain him in that decision, he would be disposed to make it this morning.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!" and "Make it!"]

The SPEAKER. Then, when a gentleman is addressing the Chair, the Chair will feel authorized to ask him to suspend until any other gentleman, who may be on his feet, shall have resumed his seat.

[Cries of "That is right!" "That is right!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to enforce that rule, and certainly will do it if the House will sustain him.

Several MEMBERS. You shall be sustained.

Order was fully restored.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The other question which I desire to ask is one of very great importance, and which every man in this House has to answer, before this bill is passed upon. The only ground upon which anybody urges the constitutionality of these railroad measures is that by them this Government is benefited, inasmuch as the construction of the roads enhances the value of the alternate sections reserved to the Government of the United States. Now, you have just passed the homestead bill, and I desire to ask whether, if you pass this bill, the settler under the homestead bill would not have a right to settle on the alternate sections reserved to the Government? What then becomes of the argument that these bills will benefit the Government? What becomes of the argument—the only argument which has been urged here in support of this bill?

[Here a message was received from the Senate of the United States, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, announcing that the Senate had passed a bill "granting lands to the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein," in which they desired the concurrence of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. In reply to the gentleman, I have only to say that in no instance, as far as I know, have the lands donated to the States of this Union failed to be applied to the purposes for which they were intended by the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What has become of the lands granted to the Illinois Central Railroad?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will tell the gentleman where they are. When the State of Illinois proves faithless to its trust, it will be time enough to make the inquiry. The gentleman will find that she has applied that land to the purposes for which it was intended that it should be applied. No such imputation, therefore, can rest upon her escutcheon. There was a donation to that State of canal lands, by which she was to construct a canal, and she has faithfully and honestly applied them to that purpose. So far as the inquiry of the gentleman is concerned, about the effect of this bill upon the homestead bill, that question is not now under consideration; but I will say to the gentleman, that if he will wait until the sale takes place of those reserved quarter sections in Illinois, which had been offered for $1 25 per acre for thirty years, he will find that this policy will vindicate itself. Not an acre of the land will be left unsold.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Cannot the settler, under the homestead bill settle on those reserved lands?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all; not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why not?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. Because they are not open to settlement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But they will be when they are brought into market; and will they not then be taken by the settlers under the homestead bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. When that time arrives, if the gentleman puts the inquiry to me, I will answer it. [Laughter.] I move the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay the bill and amendments upon the table.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I believe that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] has not been read yet.

The SPEAKER. It has not been read.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Then I ask that it may be read now.

Mr. BISSELL. Under the impression that the amendment of my colleague, desirable as it may be, can only embarrass this bill, I appeal to him to withdraw it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will withdraw it. I will not embarrass the bill.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. STUART. Upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN,] I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put upon Mr. DEAN's motion, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 70; nays 110; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bennett, John H. Boyd, George H. Brown, Buell, Caldwell, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Colcock, Daniel, Dean, Dockery, Ewing, Faulkner, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Grew, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Hibbard, Holladay, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, George G. King, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McQueen, Meacham, Milson, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Peaslee, Perkins, Polk, Robie, Ross, Savage, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Alexander H. Stephens, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Toombs, Tuck, Venable, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Bell, Bibighans, Bissell, Bowie, Bragg, Brenton, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thomas Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Curtis, Geo. T. Davis, John G. Davis, Disney, Doty, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Giddings, Goodrich, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McDonald, McNair, Miller, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morrison, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Phelps, Rantoul, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Russell, Sackett, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—109.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. OUTLAW said: I wish to state, that upon this particular vote, I have paired off with the honorable gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PORTER,] who has been called from the city by the sickness of one of his children.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would inquire of the Chair, if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. AVERETT. Is it in order to move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not, until the demand for the previous question is disposed of.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for tellers on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, and HALL were appointed.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 69, noes 66.

So the previous question received a second.

The question then being, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Mr. POLK asked for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. ASHE. I would now inquire if the morning hour has expired?

Mr. POLK. If it has I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It has not expired, but it will expire in a moment.

[Cries of "Call the roll!"]

Mr. POLK. Has not the morning hour expired now?

The SPEAKER. It has this moment expired.

Mr. POLK. I move to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. ASHE. I move to proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Elections, on the contested-election case from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina does not prevail, I shall move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which I suppose will be in order, so as to allow the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to proceed with his speech.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire if the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE,] who made the report in this contested-election case from the State of Pennsylvania, has not the right—it being a question of privilege—to call it up at any time he pleases? That, I think, has been the practice of the House heretofore. It is then for the House to dispose of it by postponement, or in some other way. I am confident that has been the uniform practice of the House since I have been here. It can be called up at any time as a question of privilege; and when called up it is regularly before the House, without a motion being put to that effect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee would wish to force the consideration of this case upon the House, whether it desires to consider it or not.

Mr. JONES. I wish no such thing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. I only inquired if that had not been the uniform practice of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect distinctly what has been the practice of the House in contested-election cases. He, however, decided yesterday that it was a privileged motion that the gentleman from North Carolina had a right to submit whenever he pleased, and that it would then be for the House to say whether it would proceed to the consideration of that or other business. That was the decision of the Chair, and he is inclined to adhere to that decision as a correct one.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the Chair permit me to make one suggestion? This, as it seems to me, is a privileged question, and not a privileged motion. I am inclined to concur in the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. Then, as the Chair understands the gentleman, when the question is called up the House must proceed to its consideration, whether it chooses or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir. It is regularly before the House.

The SPEAKER. Then the House can go on to consider it, or postpone it, as it chooses.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly.

The SPEAKER. Then, is there any impropriety in the decision the Chair has already made? He decides that the gentleman from North Carolina has the right to make the motion, as a privileged one—that the motion being before the House, the House has the right of judgment in regard to its proper disposition. That is the decision of the Chair. Does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand the Chair to decide, that the motion is a privileged one, which must take precedence of any other motion and must be first put to the House, even if another motion has been made before it.

The SPEAKER. That was the decision of the Chair, and he still thinks it is correct.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Chair is clearly right.

The question now being upon the motion that the House proceed to the consideration of the Pennsylvania contested-election case—

Mr. ASHE demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the result was announced—yeas 92, nays 91.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Committee on Elections is now under consideration.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order. The state of the vote, as announced by the Chair, makes it in the power of the Chair to defeat the motion, by making it a tie. I presume the Chair would not hesitate to vote under these circumstances, and I call upon him to vote one way or the other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in his opinion, is not compelled to vote to make a tie, although he has the right to do so if he chooses.

Mr. HOUSTON. But the vote of the Chair would make it a tie, and defeat the motion.

The SPEAKER. The vote of the Chair would not change the result, because he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HOUSTON. Very well. I only desire that he shall vote one way or the other.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Committee on Elections is before the House, upon which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ASHE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. POLK. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that a mistake was made by the Clerk in counting the votes upon the question just taken. The Clerk states that a mistake was made, and that the vote is a tie vote. It therefore becomes the duty of the Chair to vote. He votes in the negative, and this defeats the motion.

Mr. ASHE. I do not understand that decision of the Chair; I wish he would explain it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will repeat, that upon a recount, he is informed by the Clerk that the vote upon the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ASHE] is a tie. In consideration of the lateness of the hour the Chair votes "No," and therefore defeats the motion.

Mr. ASHE. If that is the decision of the Chair, I submit to it.

Mr. FOWLER. I believe the Chair has not announced the vote since the mistake has been corrected. I most respectfully ask the Chair to announce it as it now stands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair having voted No, the vote now stands—yeas 91, nays 92. It is as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bissell, Bragg, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Busby, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Faulkner, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gilmore, Green, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Geo. W. Jones, J. Glaucey Jones, Kurtz, Lockhart, Mace, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McAnahan, McNair, McQueen, Milson, Molony, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Olds, Orr, Pensacoe, Penn, Perkins, Rantoul, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Russell, Skelton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Townshend, Venable, Wallace, and Wildrick—91.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Willis Allen, Allison, Barere, Bell, Bennet, Bigbush, Bowie, Bowne, Jno. H. Boyd, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. C. Cabell, Caldwell, L. D. Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Cobb, Colecock, Conger, Cottman, Geo. T. Davis, Dean, Dockery, Duncan, Dunham, Evans, Ewing, Ficklin, Floyd, Fowler, Gaylord, Gentry, Giddings, Goodrich, Grey, Grow, Hall, Harper, Hawley, Hebard, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, George C. King, Landry, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, Meacham, Miller, Miner, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Sam'l W. Parker, Penniman, Phelps, Polk, Sackett, Savage, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Alex. H. Stephens, Strother, Sutherland, Taylor, Thurston, Toombs, Chuck, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, and Woodward—91.

So the House refused to go into the consideration of the report of the Committee on Elections.

Mr. POLK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to. So the rules were suspended.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Seymour, of Connecticut, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated as the first business in order House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1853, upon which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, then addressed the committee his allotted hour, in regard to the compromise measures, the necessity of adhering to them, and in regard to the Presidency.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, followed, in reply to the remarks of his colleague, [Mr. GREY,] made a few days ago, relative to his action in the recent Whig Congressional caucus.

[These speeches will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. GROW obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLISON moved that the committee rise.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 43, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

On motion of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, the House then adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

Also, a remonstrance of citizens of New York against the renewal of Cyrus H. McCormick's patent for improvements in reaping machines; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land to aid in the education of deaf, dumb, blind, and insane persons in that State; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. MASON presented a petition of clerks, messengers, and others, in the office of the Commissioner of Customs, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a petition of clerks, messengers, and others, in the office of the First Auditor, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MASON. I have received three memorials from citizens of the town of Wheeling, and that part of Virginia, asking for the passage, by the Senate, of the bill which is popularly called, I believe, the homestead bill, the purpose of which, I understand, is to give away the public lands among a certain class of people. I present the petition, as I conceive it my duty to do, but at the same time declaring, that if the people of the towns in the vicinity of Wheeling entertain the opinions expressed in these petitions, they are held, I am satisfied, by very few citizens in the State; and in presenting them, I wish to declare, that the presentation is not to be considered as adopting in any degree the views of the petitioners.

The memorials were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have received a petition, of a peculiar character, from two of my female constituents, and now beg to present it to the Senate. These ladies reside in the town of Newport, in the State of Kentucky, opposite the city of Cincinnati. One signs herself Sarah Tanner, and the other Lucinda Tanner. They represent that a gentleman named Edward D. Tippet, has applied to them, and stated that he is the inventor of a steam-engine, and that there would be perfect safety in the navigation of vessels propelled by it, because he proposes to generate steam, not in boilers, as at present, but by throwing water on red-hot plates of iron, so as to generate the steam in just sufficient quantities to fill the cylinder at each stroke of the engine.

Some years ago, I had the pleasure of examining this invention at Georgetown. There were several experiments made on it, under the authority of Government; but, as the petitioners state, it was never carried into practical operation. Mr. Tippet has found these ladies, and satisfied them of the entire practicability of putting it successfully into operation; and they have given him $1,500, through the humane feelings which characterize them, for the purpose of enabling the inventor to make the necessary experiments; but they state that $1,500 will not be sufficient, and they think that Congress might give as much more as they have given from their own private purse. That will make $3,000, and that sum, they think, will be sufficient to accomplish the experiments, which will prove to the world that this invention will supersede all other steam-engines. I think that the Committee on Commerce, who have had the bill relative to steam-engines under consideration, is the proper committee to refer it to, and shall, therefore, move that it be so referred. I hope that this Columbus in steam invention, who has found an Isabella in these two ladies, will also succeed in obtaining the patronage of the Government, for the purpose of fully testing the practicability of his theory.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think that reference would more properly be made to the Committee on Naval Affairs; for whatever the Government has to do with steamers is connected with that branch of the service. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that he should move a reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection. I desire merely that the petition should be sent to the proper committee.

Mr. BADGER. I hope it will not be sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs. We have already plenty to do; and unless these engines are intended for war steamers, we do not wish to have anything to do with them.

The motion to refer to the Committee on Commerce was then agreed to.

CORRECTION.

Mr. CLEMENS. I rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of making a correction. It is not very material, but may, perhaps, as well be made. In the report of the speech of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL.] in regard to an appropriation to indemnify sufferers in consequence of depredations by the Creek Indians, this passage occurs:

"These friendly Indians who enlisted in the service of the United States, as stated upon the authority of Colonel Hogan, amounted to about fifteen hundred. The Senator from Alabama says that number was increased to two thousand."

Mr. CLEMENS. There were five hundred under General Howard."

The error is in the name of the general. There was no General Howard there. It was General Woodward.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of the Lieutenants of the Engineer, Topographical Engineer, and Ordnance Corps, asking that promotions may be made more nearly approximating to that of the line of the army, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill allowing the principal assistant in the Engineer Bureau, the same compensation which the principal assistant in the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department now receives; which was read and passed to the same reading.

Mr. SHIELDS also submitted a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Charles Cooper & Co., of Bangor, Maine, asking payment of interest, submitted a report, accompanied by bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the petition of Anthony Sherman, for the renewal of a patent for an improvement in the axles of railroad cars, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, to release from reservation and restore to the mass of public lands, certain lands in the State of Arkansas, reported back the same with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to grant the right of way through the public lands of the United States, for the construction of certain railroads in the State of California, reported back the same without amendment, and moved that it be laid on the table; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following memorials, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to:

The memorial of Charles Fletcher, for a grant of land for a railroad from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Kearny;

The memorial of Duncan W. Murphy and others, for a grant of land for a railroad from Benicia to Shasta City in California; and

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, asking a grant of land to complete a geological survey of the State.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill to establish sub-divisional lines and corners of certain fractional sections in the southern surveying district of the State of Alabama, reported back the same without amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the memorials of William Money, asking payment for certain horses seized in California by order of General Kearny, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEARCE, from the Committee on Finance, reported a bill supplementary to an act approved August 10, 1846, entitled "An act to establish the Smithsonian Institution for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men;" which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate directing an inquiry into the expediency of amending the second section of an act making appropriations for the payment of Revolutionary and other pensions, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to amend an act passed the 20th February, 1847, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of revolutionary and other pensions of the United States for the year ending 30th June, 1848;" which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of the heirs of Joseph Bradley, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

PITTSBURG AND WARREN RAILROAD.

Mr. FELCH. I have been instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to the Pittsburg, Kittanning, and Warren Railroad Company the right of way over the grounds of the United States, at the Alleghany arsenal, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask that that bill may now be put upon its passage. It is merely to grant the right of way to this railroad company over a small portion of land held by the United States in Pennsylvania, at Laurenceville, near Pittsburg. I believe there is not the least objection to it. It grants to the Secretary of War the power of granting this right of way. There will be no injury in any way resulting from it to the public interest, and I trust the bill will be taken up and disposed of now.

The bill was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, was reported without amendment to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE PASSES OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SOULE. I have the authority and the unanimous consent of the Committee on Commerce, on whose consideration I pressed the subject at its last meeting, to report to the Senate, and to recommend to its favorable consideration, a bill to enable the Government to deepen the passes of the Mississippi river.

The bill was read a first time.

Mr. SOULE. I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up this bill. It is not likely to meet with any opposition, as far as I can judge from the kind and very liberal dispositions I have met with, at the hands of those members with whom I have had occasion to converse on its merits, and on the importance of its immediate passage. The measure which it purports to enact is one, indeed, that appeals strongly to the special favor of this body. It is a measure in which every individual who owns an acre of land, or cultivates a bushel of wheat, in the great valley of the Mississippi, has a direct and most vital interest. The outlets through which the main produce of the Southwest finds its way to foreign markets is now actually shut up by the accumulated deposits which the waters of the mighty river have piled up at its mouth; and the object of this bill is to place at the disposition of the Secretary of War an amount sufficient to enable him to remove the obstruction, and to proceed without delay to the opening of a channel that will afford free and easy ingress into and egress out of the Mississippi, to vessels of the usual size and tonnage, of those which are best suited to the immense trade carried on upon its main waters and its tributaries. I am informed that there are at present no less than eight or ten ships loaded with rich cargoes, and whose freight consists of no less than twenty thousand bales of cotton, stranded on the bar and stuck fast in the mud, there awaiting, almost hopelessly, that some favorable wind modifying, as is sometimes the case, the condition of the water on the bar, and giving the channel a greater depth, may enable them to get out of the truly desperate and ruinous situation in which they find themselves. They have already been there, some of them at least, for weeks; and the injury which such a state of things is calculated to inflict on the commerce and on the agricultural interest of that section of our country, as well as on ship-masters and owners, is such that it demands the immediate interposition of this Government, and the appliance of all the means at its disposition, in order that some relief may be afforded and a scheme devised through which the same disasters may be avoided, and the people of the Southwest saved from the ruin which their recurrence would entail upon them. I need not say more, for I do hope and trust that I have not overtaxed the disposition of the Senate to see that every section of this Republic be righted and done justice to, when I have presumed thus abruptly to throw myself upon their indulgence, and to ask them to suspend and delay for a moment the discussion of the matters before them, in order that the bill may at once be acted upon and disposed of.

The bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the Secretary of War be directed to take the necessary steps for causing a ship channel, of sufficient depth to accommodate the wants of commerce, and allow vessels of twenty feet draught to pass through it, to be opened across the most convenient pass leading into the Mississippi river out of the Gulf of Mexico, and that the sum of $75,000 be appropriated for the purpose: Provided, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to report at an early day at the next session of Congress the expenses incurred, together with an estimate of the annual cost of keeping said channel open.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

BILLS REPORTED FROM THE HOUSE.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives, were severally read a first and second time. The bills were referred to the Committee on Finance, and the joint resolution to the Committee on Public Lands:

An act making an appropriation for the payment of Navy pensions for the year ending 30th June, 1853;

An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending the 30th June, 1853; and

A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to ratify and confirm an exchange of lands between the United States and Charles Reynolds, of the city of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi.

TAXATION OF LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. GEYER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up a bill from the House of Representatives, giving the assent of Congress to the State of Missouri to impose a tax or taxes upon all lands hereafter sold by the United States therein, from and after the day of such sale. This bill is in precisely the same terms as one which passed the Senate a few days ago, with the exception of the word "giving" instead of "declaring," in the title. The necessity for this, I had occasion to state the other day, grew out of the phraseology of an act passed in January, 1847.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to, and it was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being made, the bill was reported to the Senate, and was read a third-time and passed.

DISTRICT COURTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BRADBURY. I move to take up the bill which has been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment. It is a bill to provide for the holding of the district court for the District of Columbia, in case of the sickness or other disability of the district judge.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment is the following additional section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the associate judge holding the district court as aforesaid, shall, and is hereby empowered, to sit in the said circuit court in any case of appeal or of error from his own decision in said district court, in the same manner as if said district court had not been held by him.

Mr. BRADBURY. This amendment is supposed to be necessary in consequence of a clause in the judiciary act of 1789, which provides that no district judge shall give a vote in any case of appeal or error from his own decision. This is merely a temporary arrangement, and I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. MANGUM. I beg leave to offer a resolution, which I desire the Senate to act upon now. I think it will not occupy more than a few minutes. The resolution is to grant a seat on the floor of the Senate to the associates of the Smithsonian Institution, elected by the regents, thereby extending the privilege granted by the forty-eighth rule to some of our distinguished scientific men, such as Dr. Hare, Washington Irving, Professor Silliman, and others. I hope it may be adopted.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That the following be added to the forty-eighth rule, which provides for the admission of persons on the floor of the Senate:

And the associates of the Smithsonian Institution, elected by the regents.

The PRESIDENT. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it now.

Mr. HALE. I object.

The resolution was accordingly laid over.

ANTHRACITE AND BITUMINOUS COAL.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating the report of the Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, on the comparative value of anthracite and bituminous coal; together with a letter of the Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, dated May, 1852, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and printed.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1852," the question pending being upon the motion of Mr. CHASE to amend the amendment, adopted as in Committee of the Whole, providing for additional compensation to the Collins line of steamers, by adding to it the following proviso:

And provided further, That the proprietors of said line of steamers shall consent to such a modification of the existing contract that the Postmaster General may advertise for, and accept proposals, for carrying the mails in suitable steamships, of not less than two thousand tons burden, between the United States and Great Britain, from and after the said 31st day of December, 1854, when said contract shall cease to be obligatory; and the Postmaster General, in case said modification shall be agreed to, shall advertise for such proposals, which shall be submitted to Congress at the next session.

Mr. BORLAND, who had the floor, rose to address the Senate, but gave way at the request of Mr. SEWARD.

Mr. SEWARD. When I addressed the Senate in favor of the amendment to grant aid to the Collins line of steamers on a former occasion, I spoke of Mr. Hobbs, who exhibited a lock at the World's Fair, in London, in terms of praise which were justly deserved by that invention. I was understood, I learn, to have attributed to that gentleman the invention of the lock. If I said so, it was an error into which I fell in the haste of speaking. I was aware that Mr. Hobbs visited London, and exhibited that lock as the agent of the inventor, and the praise of that invention—the parantopic lock—which excels all others of its class, I take occasion to say belongs to Mr. Newall, who is a native and citizen of New York.

I thank the honorable Senator from Arkansas for his courtesy in allowing me to do this act of justice now, and here where the error is supposed to have occurred.

Mr. BORLAND then addressed the Senate for about three hours, on the subject of the pending amendment. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until tomorrow, so that we may go into Executive session.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 15, noes 23.

Mr. PRATT. I hope we shall have the question on the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest that it would be better to take the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and then let the other question lie over until to-morrow, when there will be a full Senate. ["No!" "No!"]

The question was then taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment to the amendment, and resulted—yeas 18, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Borland, Brodhead, Brooke, Butler, Chase, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Hunter, King, Mallory, Mason, Sebastian, Sumner, Underwood, Wade, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Bright, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Downs, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, James, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Souté, Spruance, Toucey, and Upham—26.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BELL. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to the amendment. It is to strike out the proviso, which is in these words:

"Provided, That it shall be in the power of Congress, at any time after the 31st day of December, 1854, to terminate the arrangement for any additional allowance herein provided for, upon giving six months' notice."

And insert in lieu of it the following:

Provided, That after the 30th day of June, 1854, the rate of compensation to said line of steamers shall not exceed $19,250 per trip, unless Congress in the mean time shall otherwise provide.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 21, noes 23.

Mr. SEWARD asked for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. DAWSON. I trust the amendment presented by the Senator from Tennessee will be adopted.

Mr. WELLER. We all understand it.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator from Georgia understands it, I am sure we do.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to place myself correctly before the country.

Mr. PRATT. Let us have the vote.

Mr. BELL. Allow me to state the object of this amendment. I did not intend to trespass upon the time of the Senate; but I did intend, if I had had time, to give a short explanation of the design I have in view in offering it.

One great change which it proposes is, that it shall not require the interference of Congress in stopping this appropriation or allowance after the 30th of June, 1854; but that it shall cease by this provision of law. Congress will have power to interpose at that time, and continue the allowance if necessary. In that respect my amendment differs from the former proviso.

In the second place, it reduces the time six months for which this bill makes the allowance; which time, I and several other gentlemen think, is long enough to give this line this increased allowance of $33,000 per trip. We think that in that time they will have received sufficient to cover the loss which they have sustained in being the pioneers in establishing an American trans-Atlantic line of steamers, having to run it at first, no doubt, at great loss—perhaps, as they say, of as much as $16,000 or $17,000 per trip.

Another advantage of this amendment is, that it will furnish the Government with further data at the end of this period, so that they will be able to determine whether or not any further allowance is required. We shall then be able also to see and determine how far this experiment does interfere with private enterprise, as has been seriously urged here by several Senators. We are now in the midst of this experiment, and we do not see precisely how much it may interfere with the enterprises of our citizens engaged as private proprietors of lines of this description, or of trans-Atlantic navigation generally. I confess that that is a point on which I distrust myself. We have not seen it yet; but in two or three years more of this experiment we may see it more fully, and we can then decide more satisfactorily. For these reasons, which have operated upon my own mind, and also in conformity with the wishes of other gentlemen, I have offered this proviso.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator from Tennessee will shape his amendment so as to make the continuance of the allowance to the end of 1854, I will go with him. But as he proposes to amend it, if I understand it, it will only have to run eighteen months.

Mr. DAWSON. It will be two years.

Mr. PRATT. Well, I hope it will be so modified as to extend to the end of the year 1854.

Mr. RUSK. I should have no difficulty in agreeing to the amendment, because I believe that at the expiration of the proposed limitation, the proceeds of running this line of steamers will be sufficiently remunerative; and that the proprietors will not desire to have the increase of compensation extended to them beyond that time; but here is the difficulty; the contract extends now only six months beyond the time specified in the proposed amendment; and the whole matter will then be subject to the control of Congress, and we can certainly trust to the Congress which may sit at that time to take the proper and necessary action; but if the amendment should pass, it will induce the proprietors of the Cunard steamers to think that we do not intend to keep this line up on an equality with them, and they will take measures to continue their opposition for the purpose of driving the Collins steamers off. I can assure the Senate, and history will confirm the assertion, that the expenditure of a few hundred dollars to secure this object, and thus monopolize the whole carrying trade would amount to nothing in the estimation of the British Admiralty. The consequence will be that you will strengthen the Cunard line, and they will continue to run in opposition. But, if we sustain the Collins line, then we shall see that the English will pursue just the same course as they did in the Gulf of Mexico. There, they had thirteen or fourteen steamers previous to the establishment of the American line of steamers; and when they found that they could not compete with these last, they withdrew their steamers and put them on other routes. I believe the same result will follow in this case, and that the whole of the mails will be carried by American steamers. I think they will withdraw them, for another reason; and that is, that the English have hitherto had the reputation of being the best ship-builders in the world; the consequence has been that a large amount of profit has accrued to their mechanics, because every Government desirous of purchasing steam-vessels went to them for that purpose; and they are not likely to continue running a line along side of another, which is an open advertisement to the world that the Americans surpass them in ship-building. Therefore, if Senators are willing to trust the Congress of 1854, and I for one do not feel any hesitation in doing so, this provision is altogether unnecessary. I conceive that no benefits will result from the adoption of the amendment, but, on the contrary, that it may produce serious injury.

Mr. DAWSON. I am as anxious as any Senator on this floor to maintain the controversy as to speed upon the ocean; but I confess that I have not been able to ascertain to my satisfaction the present condition of this steamboat company. I am not able to communicate the facts on this subject to others, for I do not sufficiently understand them myself. But being unwilling to do any act which might involve the character of the country in disgrace, or which might injure the company, I am willing to go as far as any man ought to go. Hence I and others who are in favor of sustaining this line have met on common ground. And what is it? It is to do precisely what the decided friends of this measure desire, with a limitation, merely placing it in the power of Congress to sustain the honor of the country in the controversy at a subsequent period. We have agreed in placing the limit at the end of the fiscal year 1854, which is the 30th of June, 1854. Why? Because the appropriations are made annually, and the long session of Congress, 1854, will have this matter in precisely the same control which we have now, and if it is necessary, they can make all the legislation suited to the condition of the country.

As the Senator from Texas [Mr. Rusk] has stated, it is presumable that the Collins line will be able to sustain itself by that time. If it be not able to sustain itself then, the question will come up, Will this Government sustain it through all time? If it cannot sustain itself at the end of eight years, must we, as a matter of course, sustain it eight years longer? Not so. We shall have done our duty, both to the country and in extending protection to the company, by granting such aid as will continue it from this date to the end of the fiscal year in 1854. When that is provided for, I am willing to submit the question, Has there ever been more liberality shown to any company than we have extended to this? Let Congress remember that the original contract was not of the seeking of the Congress of the United States. The propositions were presented to us, and the terms of the contract, and we accepted them. Now, when it appears that the contract is likely to be ruinous to the company, we, in our magnanimity and liberality, afford them a shield and sufficient protection, when we make this increased compensation, and give them a notice, two years in advance, of the extent of our liberality. Is it not liberal, and fair, and honorable, and just, and will anybody who is in favor of this measure of limitation, say that the proposition is not liberal and honorable? I am as liberal as any Senator ought to be in this matter; I am anxious to sustain this line; and to do it on a principle by which I can vindicate my course in my own judgment, and whenever the question is presented to me. Why, then, do you desire to force those who are already with you on this subject, into a greater extension of the time than the circumstances of the case require? I do not desire to detain the Senate. I am anxious for the adoption of this amendment, and I want to do it on a principle which will be satisfactory to me. I believe the adoption of this amendment will enable me to vote for the amendment adopted in committee, as well as other friends of this measure. I think it should be adopted, unless the friends of this measure desire to force us into the adoption of their own views.

Mr. HALE. I want simply to say, that if Senators will look into the proviso at the end of the section on the tenth page, they will see that this thing is entirely in the power of Congress now. It is:

"Provided, That it shall be in the power of Congress, at any time after the 31st day of December 1854, to terminate the arrangement for any additional allowance herein provided for, after giving six months' notice."

This amendment of the Senator from Tennessee seems to be based upon the assumption that the next Congress will not be as wise as this one. Sir, it is probable that some of the judicious members of the present Congress will not be here. [Laughter.] But we ought to have generous confidence sufficient to believe that the people know enough to send men who know as much as we do; and if we leave the next Congress entirely untrammelled, we shall have done all that we can be reasonably expected to do, and will have done much better than we should do by tying up the hands of our successors. It is with this generous confidence I have already expressed that the people will do their best to send as good men to Congress as those who are to go out, that I am willing to leave it in their hands—that it should be entirely in their power to do as they see fit.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise for the purpose of renewing the motion to adjourn, and I do so with a fair appeal to gentlemen who have offered this amendment. I see clearly that the full import of that amendment is not understood by all. The Senator from Tennessee may understand it, and so may other gentleman; but how far it may affect this bill I do not know. I see already that it has induced debate, and is likely to induce still further debate.

I will make another remark before I sit down, and that is, that the Senator from Tennessee cannot by this amendment control the future action of Congress on this subject. I understood the Senator to say that he voted for this amendment with the view of indemnifying this company for the losses they had sustained; but that he does not now legislate with a view to afford them any future guarantees. If we undertake to legislate upon this subject with the view of indemnifying them for the past, at the time that the Senator proposes to terminate this contract, an appeal will be made to the liberality and magnanimity of Congress; and if we have any money to dispose of, and if this matter is magnified into a matter of sufficient importance to demand a share of the public money beyond all other objects, there is no doubt that it will obtain it. I think that gentlemen seem to be rather impatient to get through with this subject. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question was taken by a division, and there were—ayes 19, noes 19.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Several SENATORS. The question on the amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. RUSK. I am sure the Senator from Georgia does not want to embarrass this question, and thereby give the Cunard line an advantage, which will keep them constantly running against this Collins line. Two years is a very short time to test this matter. Suppose the Senator from Tennessee should make his amendment the same, in point of time, which is contained in the proviso which he proposes to strike out, and let it run to the end of the year 1854.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not see how it is to embarrass the company, or how it is to give any advantage to the Cunard line, when we extend protection to the Collins line to the last of June, 1854, during the long session of Congress. Certainly it is within the power of Congress to legislate then, as circumstances may require.

Mr. RUSK. I will say nothing more.

Mr. DAWSON. The limit to the contract, imposed by the first amendment, is from and after the first day of January, 1855, or the last day of December, 1854, on giving six months' notice. Congress has to give that notice. Notice must be given after that period, and that would extend the contract into another year, nearly to 1856.

Several SENATORS. That is incorrect.

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly I am right.

Mr. BADGER. No, you are not.

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly, I am right. According to the amendment adopted in committee, notice is to be given after the last day of December, 1854. The notice is not to be given prior to that time.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly, it may.

Mr. DAWSON. Not at all. We have adopted the amendment with the understanding that Congress shall have the power to reduce it down, and legislate in such manner as the position of affairs at that day may require.

Mr. PRATT. I would suggest that the amendment be modified by inserting 31st of December, 1854, instead of 30th of June.

Mr. DAWSON. I have no objection, if the mover of the amendment, the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] will consent to the modification.

Mr. PRATT. Insert 31st December instead of 30th June, and I for one will vote for it.

Mr. BELL. I supposed, that by a proper construction of the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole, six months' notice was to be given after the end of the year 1854.

Mr. BADGER. Oh, no; oh, no.

Mr. BELL. I certainly had that impression; and the great objection that I had was the difference between Congress now enacting that the increased compensation shall cease, and leaving it open for a future Congress to say whether they will interfere and put a stop to it. The occasion might be different; there might be appeals made which would not be likely to be made, to suffer this increased compensation to go on, if there was no express authority by which they were authorized to continue it. For myself—and I believe the Senator from Georgia concurs with me—I have no objection to putting the time at the end of December, 1854, and letting the increased compensation cease then by law; for I have made estimates, and it will be in effect, allowing about $700,000 or $800,000 more than this line would have received under the old contract. And according to the examination I have made of this subject, I think that line has sustained losses in consequence of want of experience, and of having to introduce original machinery into this country, for which I should be glad to make them some compensation, of having to run their boats at an immense expense—perhaps an unnecessary expense—I do not know; of having been subject to breakages of engines and shafts, the vessels being of a new class; of having to purchase dock-yards for their own use, and having to incur various other expenditures. I have no doubt that this increased allowance, until the end of the year 1854, would not more than indemnify them for the losses sustained, or what they might have saved, with their present experience. As the Senator from Georgia says he is willing to agree to the modification of my amendment, I will change it so as to extend the time to the 31st of December, 1854, instead of the 30th of June, 1854.

The PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays having been ordered, it is not under the control of the Senator from Tennessee without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish the question taken on the amendment as it now stands. I do not know that I ought to interfere at all in a debate like this; but I wish to say, that these allowances for repairs—repairs to be made in all time to come, as they have been in all time past—I understand, embrace the allowances for repairs made upon the Atlantic, and they are based upon the idea that we are to have another catastrophe, like that which occurred to the Atlantic, within the two years to come.

Mr. BELL. I do not contemplate any such thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know gentlemen do not contemplate they will happen; but if they should happen, the allowance is large enough to compensate them; and if they do not happen, the difference is so much clear gain, and I want the country to see it. And yet, in the face of facts of that kind, we are proposing to enlarge the allowance for six months longer. There is a great difference between the amendment as it stands and the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee, and a vast difference in favor of his proposition in regard to the interests of the country. If his proposition is adopted, then it will require the positive action of Congress to extend the time: whereas if you let the bill stand as it is, the allowance will terminate at the end of the specified time.

Mr. BELL. I do not propose to change it in that respect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am commending my friend's amendment, and I am showing the difference between it and the bill as it now stands, and that it is all-important that the principle contained in the present amendment should be adopted. I am making these remarks to show the impropriety of extending the time, and to insist upon taking the vote upon the proposition as it now stands.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Kentucky stated, that in the estimate of the losses, the accident which happened to the steamer Atlantic was included. He is entirely mistaken in that. That amount was covered by insurance, and does not appear in the calculation at all.

Mr. TOUCEY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion for a moment. I will renew it.

Mr. TOUCEY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My complaint, from the beginning to the end of this whole matter, has been that we can never get any estimate that we can rely upon. I have stated that these estimates and these presentations of facts do not give us such specific information that we can understand the exact amount of the losses. I had supposed that the loss occasioned by the accident which happened to the Atlantic, was embraced in these general estimates for repairs. I understand that the Atlantic belongs to this line of steamers.

Mr. BADGER. So she does.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator says "so she does." Then that part of my information was correct. But I see here is a general estimate for so much for repairs; of course, my conclusion was that it embraced all the repairs for all the ships of this line; and when the Atlantic broke her shaft, I supposed that shaft was repaired out of the money expended in this manner, just as the repairs on any other vessel would have been effected. Now, I am told that the charge was covered by insurance! The estimates do not state that fact. Mr. President, you will have to lay this matter, from the beginning to the end, before the country.

Mr. BUTLER. If my friend from Kentucky will give way, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, sir; I am in a minority upon this question, and I wish the majority to be held to the responsibility of the action of the Senate on this subject.

Mr. BUTLER. I supposed that the Senator from Kentucky was desirous of discussing the subject at length, and my object in desiring to move an adjournment was that the Senate might evince the usual courtesy in such cases, so that the Senator could proceed with his remarks tomorrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am obliged to the Senator from South Carolina; but I did not want to make a speech. I merely wished to reply to the Senator from New Jersey, that my complaint has been, from the beginning, that these generalities leave us entirely in the dark; that they do not explain things so that the country and members of Congress can understand them. That is what I complain of. It has not been stated, till now, that the loss, in this case, has been covered by insurance.

Mr. TOUCEY. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, I would remark, that I did not give way, when I moved to adjourn, for the purpose of enabling the Senator to make a speech, but to make a mere remark to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When the gentleman gave me the floor, surely I did not understand him that it was with the mere view of allowing me to move an adjournment. The Senator had already made that motion, and I asked him to withdraw it to allow me an opportunity of answering the remark of the Senator from New Jersey. But, sir, as I have already said, I see that I am in the minority, and I will not trouble the Senate with remarks that do not seem to be desired, or agreeable. I will merely state that we have not had the facts all before us as they are coming out now. I now fulfill my promise to the Senator from Connecticut, and renew the motion to adjourn.

A division being called for on the motion, there were—ayes 19, noes 17.

So the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 27, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of Senate bill No. 3, granting the right of way to the State of Missouri and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. Before proceeding to the special order, I earnestly beg the indulgence of the House to allow me to report from the Committee on Commerce a bill authorizing the issuing of a register to a British vessel which was sold, bought in and repaired by the owner. She is now lying at her wharf, and cannot repair to sea for the want of a register.

There being no objection, the bill was introduced and read by its title a first and second time, viz: "A bill to authorize the issuing of a register to the schooner Caroline, of Barnstable."

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Engrossed Bills, reported as correctly enrolled, Senate bill No. 55, entitled "An act to relinquish to the State of Iowa the lands reserved for salt springs therein;" Senate bill No. 333, entitled "An act to grant to certain settlers on the Menomonee purchase, north of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, the right of preëmption;" and they severally received the signature of the Speaker.

On motion by Mr. LANDRY, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the petition of citizens of Texas and New Orleans, ship-masters and ship-owners, asking for the establishment of a light-house on Ship Island shoal, in Louisiana, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. SEYMOUR, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, relative to the tonnage of the vessels of France, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

GRANTS FOR RAILROADS IN MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein. Upon ordering this bill to be engrossed and read a third time, the previous question was demanded and seconded; and the question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Mr. DEAN. Upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Bell, Bibbhausa, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Burrows, Bushy, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cobb, Cottman, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Goodrich, Gorman, Hall, Harper, Hart, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, McDonald, McNair, Miller, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morrison, Olds, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Phelps, Rantoul, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Sacket, Scudder, Scurry, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Townsend, Walsli, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, and Williams—83.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bennett, Bocoek, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Buell, Caldwell, Currier, Caskie, Chastain, Cleveland, Clingman, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Giddings, Grow, Hamilton, Hascall, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jenkins, George G. King, Preston King, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McLanahan, McQueen, Meacham, Millson, Miner, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Peaslee, Perkins, Powell, Robie, Ross, Russell, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Sutherland, Toombs, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Welch, Wells, and Woodward—70.

Mr. VENABLE, when his name was called, said: Mr. Speaker, Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, who is absent, has requested me to pair off with him. He would have voted for the bill, and I should have voted against it; but I have paired off with him at his request. Is it in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order after the main question has been ordered. It is not in order even after the previous question shall have been seconded.

Mr. BOCOCK. Has a motion been made to lay the bill upon the table? If it has, and it be in order to make that motion again, after ordering the main question, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. That motion was made yesterday, and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table. The Chair is aware that it has been the practice of the House to indulge the repetition of that motion. The present occupant of the Chair, however, has decided that unless the bill has undergone some change, or some action has been had upon it between those motions, that it is not in order.

Mr. HIBBARD. Has an amendment been offered?

The SPEAKER. No action upon the part of the House having taken place, except to order the main question to be put, it is not, regularly, in order to move again to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. May I make a suggestion to the Chair, in connection with this point? When the motion was made before to lay upon the table, and I think the record will sustain my recollection—it was upon the call for the previous question. Since that time the previous question has been seconded. Before that time, it was competent for a member to vote against laying it upon the table, with a hope that the previous question would not be seconded, but that the bill would be committed. Now the previous question has been ordered, and the whole face of the case has been changed.

Mr. STUART. What is the difference? Mr. HOUSTON. There is every difference in the world.

Mr. STUART. I do not see it.

The SPEAKER. Under the circumstances the Chair entertains the motion to lay upon the table, submitted by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BOCOCK. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put upon Mr. Bocoek's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 74, nays 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bennett, Bocoek, Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Buell, Caldwell, Caskie, Chastain, Cleveland, Clingman, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Grow, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Hascall, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McQueen, Meacham, Millson, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Peaslee, Perkins, Powell, Price, Robie, Ross, Russell, Schoonmaker, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Benjamin Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Sutherland, Toombs, Wallace, Washburn, Welch, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Barrere, Bell, Bibbhausa, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Burrows, Busby, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cobb, Cottman, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Disney, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Giddings, Gilmore, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Grey, Hall, Hart, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, McDonald, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morrison, Olds, Orr, S. W. Parker, Penniman, Phelps, Rantoul, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Sackett, Scudder, Scurry, Smith, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Townsend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, and Williams—94.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The question recurred upon the amendment proposed by the committee, to strike out the fifth section in the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State, shall be disposed of by said State only in manner following, that is to say: that a quantity of land, not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections, on each road, and including within a continuous length of twenty miles of said road, may be sold; and, when the Governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that said twenty miles of said road is completed, then another like quantity hereby granted, may be sold, and so, from time to time, until said road is completed; and if said road be not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not expired.

Mr. BOCOCK. I ask the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRENTON. The section which was read I understand is the amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands. I should like to have the section read which it is proposed to strike out.

The Clerk then read the fifth section of the bill proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

"SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That if either of the said railroads shall not be completed within ten years, the said State of Missouri shall be bound to pay to the United States the amount which may be received by said State upon the sale of any part of said lands granted to the use of such road, the title to the purchasers under said State remaining valid; and the title to the residue of said lands, granted to the use of said roads, shall reinvest in the United States, to have and to hold the same in the same manner as if this act had not been passed."

Mr. FOWLER. If the Speaker will allow me, I desire to hear the amendment read which is proposed to be substituted for the section proposed to be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The matter proposed to be inserted in lieu of the section just read, was read three minutes since, but if there be no objection made, it will be read again.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE objected.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama. Is it in order to make a suggestion in reference to the section which has just been read?

The SPEAKER. All discussion is excluded by the operation of the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. I was not aware that the previous question had been ordered.

Mr. DEAN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not expired.

A message was received from the Senate, at the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill providing for the holding of the district courts in the District of Columbia, in case of the sickness or other disability of the district judge; and also that they had passed House bill No. 266, giving the assent of Congress to the State of Missouri to impose taxes on all lands which may hereafter be sold by the United States therein, from and after the day of such sale.

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 70, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, John Appleton, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bibbhaus, Bissell, Bowne, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Burrows, Busby, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Curtis, Dockery, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerston, Evans, Ficklin, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Giddings, Gilmore, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Grey, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Hendricks, Henn, Hunter, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Geo. G. King, Kurtz, Martin, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Minor, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Olds, Orr, Pennington, Phelps, Price, Richardson, Robbins, Robinson, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Alexander White, Wildrick, and Williams—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Beale, Bocoock, Bowie, Bragg, Buell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chastain, Cleveland, Clinganau, Colcock, Cottman, Daniel, Geo. T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Doty, Edmondson, Faulkner, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, McDonald, McQueen, Meacham, Miller, Millson, Murphy, Newton, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Rantoul, Robie, Ross, Russell, Sackett, Alexander H. Stephens, Sutherland, Toombs, Wallace, and Woodward—70.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the amendment to be engrossed, and the bill to a third reading.

Mr. DEAN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, but we are acting under the previous question—the order of the House that the main question shall be now put. There is still one remaining question under the operation of the previous question, which the gentleman will see must be executed, and a vote be taken before the House proceed to other business.

Mr. HIBBARD demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. DEAN. Is it not now in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the previous question not having exhausted itself. The House has ordered that the main question be now put, and the Chair informs the gentleman and the House that the previous question will not be exhausted until the next vote is taken, which is upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

The question was then taken upon ordering the amendment to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Barrere, Bell, Bibbhaus, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Burrows, Busby, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerston, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Goodrich, Gorman, Green, Grey, Hall, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Hendricks, Henn, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McDonald, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morrison, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Pennington, Phelps, Rantoul, Richardson, Robinson, Sackett, Seudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Alexander White, and Williams—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bennett, Bocoock, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Buell, Caldwell, Carter, Caskie, Chastain, Cleveland, Clinganau, Colcock, Dawson, Dean, Dockery, Edmondson, Evans, Faulkner, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Grow, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Hascall, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Meacham, Millson, Morehead, Murray, Newton, Peaslee, Perkins, Powell, Price, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Russell, Schoonmaker, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Toombs, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—76.

So the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. HALL. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands, and I call for the previous question.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order, which is, that the morning hour having expired, and the previous question having exhausted itself, it is in order to proceed to other business.

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. HIBBARD. Then I move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back as correctly enrolled, the following bill, which received the signature of the Speaker, to wit: "An act to provide for the holding of the district courts in the District of Columbia in cases of sickness or other disability of the district judge."

The question was then taken upon Mr. HIBBARD's motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to another point of order. I wish to know if the Chair entertains the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to recommit the bill? I conceive that it is out of order to recommit the bill after it has been ordered to a third reading.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did entertain the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. HIBBARD. Is it in order to recommit a bill after ordered to a third reading?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order to recommit a bill after ordering it to a third reading under Rule 120, to which he invites the attention of the gentleman: "After the commitment and report thereof to the House, or at any time before its passage a bill may be recommitment."

Mr. GROW. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. GROW. Then I make that motion.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated, as the business before the committee, the consideration of House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1853, on which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. GROW took the floor, and reviewed the course which has been pursued since the commencement of the session with reference to the fugitive slave law as the only one capable of producing agitation. The people of the North, he said, would observe the guarantees of their forefathers, and the law would be maintained by the majority of its inhabitants, as being consistent with the Constitution, although there might be diversity of sentiment as to its details. There was no reason, however, for maintaining its finality; nor could an act of Congress be antagonistic to the Constitution itself. He contended that that body ought not to be engaged in reneacting the acts of a previous Congress; but should be occupied in passing laws, and permitting members to return to their homes, and if the law referred to had not vitality enough to enforce its enactments, its re-enactment would not have that effect.

[His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. GOODRICH then addressed the committee an hour, upon the subject of the fugitive slave law, maintaining that it might be modified with advantage; that it might be made more in harmony with the spirit and the letter of the Constitution. He then adverted to the action of the Whig Congressional caucus, and commented on the course of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] in connection therewith, and also upon his legislative conduct in regard to the passage of the compromise measures, to show his inconsistency.

[Mr. G.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, next obtained the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the gentleman give way to a motion that the committee rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. CLEVELAND. If the gentleman from Illinois does not wish to speak, there is another gentleman who would be glad to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be obliged to put the question unless the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. GORMAN. I cannot withdraw it, for it is half-past three o'clock.

The question was then put upon Mr. GORMAN's motion, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut,) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1853, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. McMULLIN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for one moment.

Mr. HARRIS. For what purpose?

Mr. McMULLIN. To enable me to introduce a bill of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. McMULLIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given, to fix the compensation of members of Congress at a rate not exceeding $1,500 per annum, and mileage not exceeding ten cents per mile.

[Loud cries of "Object!"]

Mr. McMULLIN. Let the gentleman who objects stand up and show himself.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I object for one.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I object, and move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw that motion for a moment, to allow me to withdraw some papers from the files of the House.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STEPHENS. I cannot withdraw it.

The question was then taken on Mr. STEPHENS's motion, and it was agreed to.

And the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 28, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to dispense with the execution of the special order, requiring private bills to be taken up to the exclusion of all other business, with a view to take up the deficiency bill. I hope that bill will be taken up, and that we shall get through with all the amendments to-day.

Mr. BADGER. I shall not object to suspending the order for taking up the Private Calendar; but if the Senate please to suspend it, I shall then submit an application to be allowed, upon this very propitious occasion, to complete a speech on the finality of the compromise, which I commenced in the beginning of February last. [Laughter.] I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolutions upon that subject.

Mr. HUNTER. When we shall have established the finality of the deficiency bill, I shall have no objection to hearing my friend from North Carolina upon the finality of the compromise.

Mr. WALKER. Being opposed to the motion, and desirous that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of private bills, I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of postponing the execution of the order.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Chase, Cooper, De Saussure, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fish, Geyer, Hale, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, King, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Rusk, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Toucey, Underwood, Wade, and Weller—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Borland, Butler, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Felch, Hamlin, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pratt, Sebastian, Sumner, Upham, and Walker—13.

So the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, announcing that they had passed an act to authorize the issuing of a register to the schooner Caroline, of Barnstable; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, "An act to change the name of the American-built vessel named the Amelia, and to grant a register to it."

PASSES OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The bill entitled "An act to enable the Government to deepen the passes of the Mississippi," was read a third time and passed.

RESIGNATION OF MR. BERRIEN.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has received from an honorable Senator from Georgia, JOHN MCPHERSON BERRIEN, a statement that he has resigned his seat in the Senate of the United States. The Chair will take occasion to say, that, having long served with that honorable Senator, it is with deep regret that he finds himself under the necessity of presenting this communication. That Senator had always shown himself upon this floor to be a gentleman of uniform courtesy. His ability all can appreciate for his services here. His usefulness to the country, the country will appreciate; and his resignation will be deeply regretted.

The letter of resignation was read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 28, 1852.

Sir: Be pleased to accept this as the resignation of my seat in the Senate of the United States. Having already notified the Governor of Georgia of my intention to retire from the Senate, it only remains, in closing my connection with a body with which I have been so long associated, to express to its members my respectful good wishes for their individual prosperity and happiness; and to subscribe myself, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN MCPHERSON BERRIEN.

To the Hon. WILLIAM R. KING,

President pro tem. Senate of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. As the subject is up, perhaps I should announce that a vacancy on the Judiciary Committee is caused by the resignation of the Senator from Georgia. I desire to ask that a member may be appointed to fill the place of that gentleman. In doing so, I take occasion to say, that he has been a most valuable member upon that committee. He was my counsellor; and upon all important questions, particularly those of a constitutional character, I resorted to Judge BERRIEN with more confidence, perhaps, than to any other member associated with me on that committee—meaning no disparagement to the others—but because he had been longer on the committee, and was more familiar with the subjects before it. And I can only announce, while asking that his place may be filled with another, that I very much regret his departure. I move that the vacancy be filled by the President of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent, as the rule prescribes that all committees shall be elected by ballot.

Mr. BADGER. I imagine there can be no objection to that.

Mr. SEWARD. Let it be so.

No objection was made.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1852," the question pending being upon the motion of Mr. BELL to amend the amendment, adopted as in Committee of the Whole, providing for additional compensation to the Collins line of steamers, by striking out of it the proviso:—

"Provided, That it shall be in the power of Congress, at any time after the 31st day of December, 1854, to terminate the arrangement for any additional allowance herein provided for, upon giving six months' notice;"

And inserting in lieu of it the following:

"Provided, That after the 30th day of June, 1854, the rate of compensation to said line of steamers shall not exceed $19,250, per trip, unless Congress in the mean time shall otherwise provide."

Mr. DAWSON. Was there any objection to inserting the "31st December," in place of the "30th June," in the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, to the amendment?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] objected. He wants the question taken on the amendment as it is.

Mr. RUSK. I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate, but if this amendment be adopted, I shall regard it a defeat of the measure altogether. Everybody who has paid any attention to this matter knows that from the day the Collins line of steamers commenced operations, every effort which capital and ingenuity could make, has been made for the purpose of driving them off the line, and appropriating to the British Government the monopoly of the line from Liverpool to New York. This has extended throughout the whole length of time. The Cunard line refused even in the second year, to alternate with the Collins line. They refused every amicable proposition which would give each party a fair opportunity for the passage and the freight to be divided between them. Well, sir, what will be the result of the adoption of this amendment? It will be simply to say, in language as plain as can be used to the Cunard line, "Redouble your exertions; these men have but a year or two to live: Congress will be delayed—if any aid is given afterwards to put them on an equality with you—by a six months' investigation of the subject." It would be inviting them to make every effort to render this an unprofitable business to the Collins line, and, at the end of the year, drive it off, and assume the monopoly for their own line. That would be the effect of the adoption of this amendment to the amendment.

Several SENATORS. Question!

Mr. DAWSON. Senators are very desirous to take the question immediately. So am I. If I were under the same conviction that my friend from Texas is, I should be controlled by the same course; but I cannot see how this would jeopard in the least the interests of this company. I consider the proposition which is now before us as an extremely different one—one well calculated to sustain the pride and honor of the nation, otherwise I would not sustain it. I think the passage of the amendment to the bill very much depends upon the adoption of this particular amendment to it. The amendment to the amendment is one which extends the time until the 30th of June, 1854—two years—and then places it within the power of Congress to legislate upon the subject. Are we distrustful of the future Congress, which may meet, and have this subject under consideration? Do we believe that they would change the action of this Congress? If we do, it is a right that belongs to them, and we ought not, by a compact, to bind them in such a way as to prevent the exercise of that right. I have gone to that extent, believing that there will be developments in relation to this line of steamers by that time which will inform us much better upon the state and condition of the company than we are informed now. I go for a limitation, because I have not ascertained the facts satisfactorily to induce me to aid in making this permanent arrangement. I am willing to extend it for a time. There is no man, I repeat, more anxious to sustain this line than I am; but I am unwilling to tie my hands for years to come. I am willing to be tied for two years, and that is the extent to which I am willing to go.

Mr. CASS. I shall vote for the amendment to the amendment, though I should have preferred to terminate the contract on the 1st of January, 1854, and have left the whole matter then to Congress, which I yet think would be the better course.

Mr. DAWSON. This is still more liberal to the company.

Mr. CASS. I shall vote for this, although I should have preferred the other.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, resulted—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bell, Borland, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Chase, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Hunter, King, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Sebastian, Underwood, Wade, Walker, and Weller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bright, Cooper, Davis, Fish, Hale, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Miller, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Toucey, and Upham—22.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWSON. I now renew the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, substituting the 31st day of December in place of the 30th day of June, so as to make the limitation of time run to the end of the year.

Mr. RUSK. The only difference that that will make will be, that if Congress choose to continue the extra allowance after the 30th of December, 1854, it must be at the end of an interminable debate. If they choose to discontinue it, as the amendment now stands, they have the power to do it immediately afterwards, by giving six months' notice. You make no mail contract anywhere, in which you do not give six months' notice of a discontinuance. It is nothing but a matter of strict justice; and so far as the power of Congress over the subject is concerned, they have the power, as the amendment now stands, to discontinue the additional allowance by giving six months' notice.

Mr. DAWSON. My amendment is to strike out the proviso as it stands in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, and insert the following:

"Provided, That after the 31st day of December, 1854, the rate of compensation to said line of steamers shall not exceed $19,250 per trip, unless Congress in the mean time shall otherwise provide."

It is the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee that has just been voted down, with the exception that the time is extended six months.

Mr. RUSK. I submit whether that is in order? The Senate has just refused to strike out the proviso which it is proposed in the amendment to the amendment to strike out.

The PRESIDENT. Certainly, it is in order. It makes a change in the character of the proviso offered by the Senator from Tennessee, extending the limitation of time from June 30 to December 31, 1854.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bell, Borland, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Hunter, King, Mason, Pratt, Sebastian, Underwood, Wade, Walker, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bright, Cooper, Davis, Fish, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Toucey, and Upham—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORLAND. I have an amendment to offer, in the form of a proviso, to the amendment. It is as follows:

Provided, That the contract for the transportation of the said mail be and is hereby transferred from the Navy to the Post Office Department, and that the appropriations to be made to defray the expenses of said contract be paid directly out of the Treasury, and shall not be charged over to appropriations for the Navy.

I desire simply to say that this is the substance of the same amendment which was offered in Committee of the Whole by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY.] It is intended to give what I consider the true character to this line of steamships, of their connection with the Government, and to put them upon their proper footing. It is to put the character of the service which they render upon its true footing, and to pay for it, as I am prepared to pay for all other mail service directly out of the Treasury, not requiring the Post Office Department to be self-sustaining any more than requiring the War Department or the Naval Department to be self-sustaining. I think it has been very clearly shown by the arguments on both sides of the question, since it has been before the Senate, that this is a mail line, and nothing more; and when it is called a false of the naval establishment, it goes under false colors; and the public are led to believe, from the form in which we make appropriations and the manner in which we have heretofore paid them, that it is a part of the Navy; whereas it is nothing more nor less than a mail line, and should be put upon a footing in that respect with all other mail lines.

Mr. HALE. I believe it is understood by the Senate, and I cannot help thinking, that the Senator from Arkansas is trying the same game on the friends of this measure that Ezekiel Powers tried on the Virginia crows. He is constantly trying to put one rail on the top, and, by repeated encroachments, to make escape impossible; but as the Senate is now forewarned, I hope they will not be caught in the trap.

Mr. BORLAND. The proposition is clear and plain. It was discussed in committee; and I would take occasion to remind the Senator from New Hampshire that, so far from this being anything like part of a game to deceive the Senate, or the country, the committee, in voting on the proposition, was within one of a tie; and the committee was not full, by any means. The vote stood eighteen to nineteen; and now that the Senate is full, I desire to take its sense on the question, in order that it may be tested. It is no new proposition; it has been already fully discussed, and its merits are fully understood; and I think that the discussion has brought out the fact, that this proposition affords the only secure basis on which we can put the amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Borland, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, Cooper, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fish, Hunter, Mason, Stockton, Underwood, Wade, Walker, and Weller—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bradbury, Bright, Cass, Davis, Dawson, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, and Upham—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHASE. It will be remembered that when the amendment offered by myself was under consideration on a previous occasion, it was objected to by the Senator from Maryland, because it did not provide for the transportation of the mails in American steamships; and when, in order to obviate that objection, I proposed to insert the word "American," in the amendment, he objected to it, inasmuch as the yeas and nays had been ordered. I then said that if that amendment was rejected, I would again offer it, modified as proposed, to avoid the objection, which it was said would induce some Senators to vote against it. I therefore offer this amendment now:

And provided further, That the proprietors of said line of steamers shall consent to such a modification of the existing contract that the Postmaster General may advertise for and accept proposals for carrying the mails in suitable American steamships, of not less than two thousand tons burden, between the United States and Great Britain, from and after the said 31st day of December, 1854, when said contract shall cease to be obligatory; and the Postmaster General, in case said modification shall be agreed to, shall advertise for such proposals, which shall be submitted to Congress at the next session.

This amendment avoids the objections made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] to the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. Bell.] It proposes absolutely to terminate the contract at the time specified, and then to leave the ocean transportation of the mails open to competition. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Borland, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Hunter, Mason, Sebastian, Sumner, Underwood, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Whitcomb—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bright, Cass, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Fish, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Toucey, and Upham—28.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM.)

The question now is on concurring in the amendment adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FELCH. I wish to say that I agreed with the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN], who is now absent, to pair off with him in case the question should be taken upon this amendment prior to his return, he being in favor of the amendment and I entirely opposed to it.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 27, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bright, Cass, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Fish, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Sumner, Toucey, and Upham—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bell, Borland, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, Clemens, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Hunter, Mason, Sebastian, Underwood, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Whitcomb—19.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert the following clause:

"For defraying the expenses of the supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; also for jurors and witnesses, in aid of the funds arising from fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred in the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and previous years, and likewise for defraying the expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, and of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States, and for the apprehension and safe-keeping of prisoners, in addition to former appropriations, $90,000: Provided, That no officer of the United States, who is in attendance upon any court of the United States in the discharge of the duties of said office, shall receive any pay or compensation for his attendance as a witness on behalf of the Government at the same time that he receives compensation as such officer."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert the following clause:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the clerks employed in the Census Office on extra duty, at the rate of $100 for full service, according to the office roll, the sum of $10,500."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert the following clause:

"For determining, running, and marking the northern boundary of the State of Iowa, on the parallel of 43° 30' north latitude, in addition to the appropriation heretofore made for the same object, $15,000."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert the following clause:

"For the reconstruction or repairs of the steamer Bibb, used in the survey of the Nantucket Shoals, $18,000."

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is:

"For establishing a depot of coal for naval purposes at Key West, in the State of Florida, $20,000."

Mr. HUNTER. There are three amendments there which do not seem to me properly to belong to a deficiency bill; and the other day I moved to except them, so that the question might be taken on each separately. The amendment which has just been read is one of the three, and the other two immediately follow it, and relate, the first of them, to a site for a custom-house at Bangor, in Maine, and the second to the site of a custom-house at Bath, in the same State. The amendment on which the question is now to be taken, I believe, was offered by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY,] and the only objection which I have to it is, that it does not seem properly to belong to a deficiency bill. It seems to me, that it is an appropriation of that character which should be included in the regular appropriation bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I will state that, for six or eight years, the United States has maintained a coal depot at this island. This has been done at a considerable expense, by hiring, from time to time, lands upon the island upon which to deposit coal. This proposition has the sanction of the Navy Department. It is to establish a permanent site, instead of a temporary one. In this light, I regard it as a deficiency, because for eight years past the expense incurred has been large, in order to procure a place for depositing the coal. The proposition is now to purchase the site, for the purpose of erecting sheds by the Government itself.

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was:

"For the purchase of a site on which to erect a custom-house in Bangor Maine, $15,000."

Mr. HUNTER. I would say, in relation to this amendment, that it comes from the Committee on Commerce, as well as the following, for the custom-house at Bath, and I did not oppose them, because I supposed at the time that they were deficiencies. I find, however, that one of them was not a deficiency, because the original appropriation was for a site and building. There is some doubt about the other. The Senator from Maine will explain the matter. I was anxious that nothing should be placed in this bill except to supply deficiencies, because I know that others will be offered if these are permitted to remain.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am very clear that both of these matters are appropriate to this bill. The Senator from Virginia, as I understand, admits that the first is clearly a deficiency. But it is of little consequence whether he admits it or not, for I think that the statement which I will make, will satisfy him, as I have examined the matter, I believe, a little more closely than he has. An appropriation was made for the erection of a custom-house at Bangor, and the cost was limited to a specified sum. Out of that sum the Department has taken $15,000 to purchase a site. We have now sent to the Committee on Commerce a recommendation to supply the $15,000, which was taken for the purchase of the site.

In relation to the other case, there is a slight difference. An appropriation was made for the erection of a custom-house at Bath, in Maine, or to repair the old one; and for that purpose $25,000 was appropriated. Upon a careful examination of the matter, it has been thought best to tear down the old custom-house and build a new one, and they ask $11,000 to be appropriated for that purpose. I think it is as much a deficiency as the appropriation which was made for the Collins line, or any other matter. I hope the Senate will allow it to remain in the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Maine will read the law which applies to this case.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have stated how the matter stands precisely. In one case the appropriation was limited to the building, and the sum included the $15,000 which has been applied for the purchase of the site. In the other case, the sum was limited to $25,000, including the purchase of the site; but still the Department, after sending an agent there to make the necessary inquiries, has come to the conclusion that the interest of the Government will be promoted by putting that sum into a new custom-house rather than into the repairs of an old one. They therefore recommend this appropriation of $11,000 to supply what will be needed to complete the building.

Mr. HUNTER. If this is put into the deficiency bill, other applications will be made for custom-houses. I think they should come up in the general appropriation bill. It is certainly not a deficiency. The former appropriation was designed to include the purchase of the site as well as the building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM in the chair.) The question will be taken on the amendments separately. The first is in relation to the custom-house at Bangor.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will state one other fact. If the appropriation is now made the money can be usefully expended this summer; if not the work will have to go over to another year.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to express a hope that that amendment will prevail. If the Senate will examine the question, I think they will see the necessity of the appropriation. It seems to me better that the work should be done now.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have a word to say with regard to the custom-house at Bath.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is not now under consideration.

Mr. BRADBURY. I merely wish to say that it is the smallest appropriation, I believe, that has ever been asked for a custom-house anywhere, and I believe this addition will be all that will be required.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is:

"For the purchase of a site on which to erect a custom-house at Bath, Maine, $11,000."

Mr. CLEMENS. I wish to say in relation to that amendment, that I think it is out of place. If, however, the Senate choose to keep it there, I can have no objection; but I give notice that I will offer another amendment of the same sort, providing for a custom-house at Mobile. I do not wish to offer it to this bill, because I do not think that either of them have any business there. I hope the amendment will not be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is:

"For arrears of contingent expenses (occasioned in part by insufficient estimates in preceding years, and by a larger quantity of blank books and stationery, office cases, and other furniture made necessary by the late act reducing the rates of postage, and by the great progressive increase of business) in the Post Office Department, $7,500."

Mr. HALE. I hope, that before the question is taken on that amendment, the Senate will strike out what is in parentheses. I hate this thing of putting arguments into laws.

The words proposed to be stricken out are as follows:

"Occasioned in part by insufficient estimates in preceding years, and by a larger quantity of blank books and stationery, office cases, and other furniture made necessary by the late act reducing the rates of postage, and by the great progressive increase of business."

The amendment as proposed to be amended would then read as follows:

"For arrears of contingent expenses in the Post Office Department, $7,500."

Mr. HALE. I do not object to the appropriation itself. My proposition to amend leaves the appropriation just as it is. It does not affect it at all, but I think there is no necessity for putting arguments into laws.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was then concurred in.

The next amendment was:

"For compensation to temporary clerks employed conditionally to bring up arrears of business in the dead letter office, $1,002 67."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was to insert the following clause:

"For fuel for the General Post Office building, from the 20th of February, 1852, to the end of the season, $750."

The amendment was concurred in.

The following amendments, agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, were severally concurred in—the question being taken upon each separately:

"For the payment of the salaries of the special agents of the Post Office Department, to the end of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852, $11,500."

"For payment to the following tribes of Indians of the undermentioned sums due them, retained by the late sub-Indian agent, William H. Bruce, the same to be reimbursed to the United States when recovered from said sub-agent or his sureties, viz:

"To Menomonees, $9,460 27.
"To Chippewas, Menomonees, Winnebagoes, and New York Indians, $531 58.
"To Six Nations of New York, (Stockbridge), $22 50.
"To Stockbridge, $1,800."

"For expenses of treaty with the Mississippi and St. Peter's Sioux, for the extinguishment of their title to lands in Minnesota Territory, being in addition to the appropriation for the same object, made 30th September, 1850, $4,272 38."

"For expenses of treating with the Indians and Half-breeds, for the extinguishment of the title to their lands on the Red river of the north, in the Territory of Minnesota, being in addition to the appropriation for the same object, made 30th September, 1850, $901 05."

"For this sum as an advance to the Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi, under the third article of the treaty of 2d August, 1847, to be expended in opening furries for their benefit, and extending their farming facilities, $5,000."

"For fulfilling treaties with the Winnebagoes, viz: purchase of tobacco, per second article of treaty of 1st August, 1829, and fifth article of treaty of 15th of September, 1832, $375."

"For fulfilling treaties with Ottawas and Chippewas, viz: purchase of tobacco, per fourth article of treaty of 28th March, 1836, $300."

"For fulfilling treaties with the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi, viz: purchase of tobacco, per fourth article of treaty of the 21st September, 1832, $200."

"For fulfilling treaties with the Menomonees, viz: purchase of tobacco, per second article of treaty of 3d September, 1836, $100."

The next amendment agreed to, as in Committee of the Whole, was to strike out the word "hereafter," and to insert the words "hereafter made," in the following clause of the third section of the bill:

"Nor shall the Executive branch of the Government [hereafter] recognize any contract hereafter made between any tribe, or part of a tribe, and any attorney or agent, for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or under this act."

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments which follow, consist of several new sections to the bill. The first one is:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That no estimate or appropriation of money, in any bill making appropriations, shall authorize the payment of any increased pay, allowance, or compensation in any form whatever, beyond the amount prescribed by law, in any case, unless there shall first be a specific direction for such extra payment, designating the officers to whom such extra payment shall be made: Provided, That the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac be and hereby is allowed a compensation of $3,000 per annum."

Mr. HALE. I would like to have a division of the question on that amendment, first on the section, and then on the proviso.

The question was accordingly taken on the amendment, (excluding the proviso,) and it was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on striking out the proviso.

Mr. HALE. I have a word or two to say on that proviso, and I hope I may have the attention of the Senate for a moment. The proviso is this:

"Provided, That the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac be and hereby is allowed a compensation of $3,000 per annum."

I will be very brief in what I have to say about that. In 1849, in the appropriation bill, there was this clause:

"For nautical books, maps, charts, instruments, and all other expenses of the Hydrographical Office, $58,260: Provided, That a competent officer of the Navy, not below the grade of a lieutenant, be charged with the duty of preparing the Nautical Almanac for publication, and that the Secretary of the Navy, when in his opinion the interest of navigation would be promoted thereby, cause any nautical works that may from time to time be published by the hydrographical office, to be sold at cost, and the proceeds arising therefrom to be placed in the Treasury of the United States."

There was an appropriation made, as follows, for the year ending June 30, 1850:

"For calculating, printing, and publishing the Nautical Almanac, including pay of the Superintendent of the same, $6,000."

In the next appropriation bill of 1850 there was an appropriation for the same purpose of $12,850. And in the next year there was appropriated $19,400. So that we have already appropriated for the preparation of the Nautical Almanac $38,250. And, by the bill which is laid on our table from the House of Representatives, it seems there is asked the further sum of $19,400, making in all $57,650 for preparing the Nautical Almanac.

The resolution which I laid on the table the other day has not yet been answered, but I think I am not incorrect when I say that all this expense has been incurred, not at the National Observatory, but at the observatory of Cambridge College, in Massachusetts. Now, we have a corps of officers at the National Observatory for the very purpose of doing this and similar work. The following is a list of the officers, with their several salaries:

One lieutenant, at.....	$3,000
Eight lieutenants, at $1,500.....	12,000
Seven professors of mathematics, at $1,500.....	10,500
Eight passed midshipmen, at $750.....	6,000

Making the salaries which we pay at the National Observatory.....$31,500

In addition to that, we have appropriated for the purchase and repair of instruments annually for the last three years, $10,000; and for maps and charts, $8,000, making more than $50,000 in all, which we have paid in three years for the support of a scientific corps in the National Observatory. And notwithstanding this, the very moment you want anything practical done by them, a Nautical

Almanac, or anything of the sort, instead of sending up to your seven professors of mathematics, and eight lieutenants, you detail another officer; and instead of using your National Observatory, where you have spent $10,000 a year for books, maps, &c., you send to Massachusetts, and get it done. Now, what is your National Observatory for? What are your seven professors of mathematics for? Cannot they calculate an eclipse, and show the position of the heavenly bodies, and make every calculation which is necessary for a Nautical Almanac? For Heaven's sake, tell me what this expense is for—what is all this vast outlay in the purchase of books, maps, and charts for, if the very first moment you have some practical use for them, you pass them all by, and your eight lieutenants, your seven professors, and your eight passed midshipmen, and send off to Cambridge to get an eclipse calculated, or a Nautical Almanac made? I believe it is all wrong, totally wrong; and when the appropriation for $19,400 comes in the general appropriation bill, I shall move to strike it out—for I cannot see the propriety of incurring all this expense when you have a National Observatory furnished at such an expense, and provided with so many lieutenants, and professors of mathematics, and have already incurred an expense of $10,000 a year, for three years, for books, maps, &c.

Mr. BADGER. I do not mean to enter into this discussion. I find that the Senator from New Hampshire has an absolute and unappealable hostility to any connection of science with the Naval Department in any form; and, as I have had occasion to observe once before, he never fails, in season and out of season, properly or improperly, to assail that Department in all its branches, save one.

Now, as the only question before the Senate is to strike out that provision which places the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac on the same footing, as to compensation, with the Superintendent of the National Observatory, we had better wait until we get the large amount of information which the Senate, at the instance of the Senator from New Hampshire, has called for, and which will take some little time to prepare in the Departments, before we proceed to determine that this appropriation shall be struck out of the bill. When the general appropriation bill comes up, if the gentleman intends to make war on the whole system, he can then do so; and if he can convince the Senate that it is extravagant and useless, of course the Senate will vote it down; but, in the mean time, I hope the Senate will not determine to put this highly-meritorious and highly-deserving officer on a worse footing than the Superintendent of the National Observatory.

Mr. DAVIS. I had supposed this whole matter to be, by law, entirely under the control of the Secretary of the Navy. I suppose that, if the observations are made in the Observatory at Cambridge, there is a good reason why it is done. The Observatory there is supplied with a great number of instruments, many of which are of a very superior character; and although I am not sufficiently acquainted with this subject to state positively that such is the case, I will assume that there exists a necessity for going there, provided that the operations are carried on at that place.

What is the object of making a Nautical Almanac? It is to be a work put in competition with other works of this description which are published by other Governments. It is to be a work purely scientific in its character, and is to recommend itself, if of any use at all, by its great accuracy with matters of very delicate and careful inquiry. In the first place, if the gentleman who has the superintendence of it is competent to discharge the service, the salary of $3,000 a year is not by any means excessive for the performance of that service—not by any means. It requires no ordinary degree of talent and learning to perform that duty. I assume, in the vote I give here, that he is competent for the task, or he would not be employed on it. I believe that most of the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject are of that opinion; and I, at least, am not willing to consider him otherwise until some evidence is shown to prove it.

I confess that the work has cost more than I anticipated when we entered on it, but its usefulness renders it a subject of high importance; no one knows better than the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON,] on the other side of the Chamber, that a book of this description is highly useful in navigation; that it is employed extensively by foreign seamen, and is highly useful to navigators of our own country. From considerations of this kind, I have sustained the work hitherto, and shall continue to do so till I see plainly the evidence of abuses. It is the duty of the Senate to go on with what has been begun, and see that it is brought to completion; for it will be hardly worth while, after having spent so much money to drop the matter now; and to drop it, solely, on the ground that it will be too expensive.

With all due deference to the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] I think that all the reasons he has urged against the appropriation are insufficient, and that it will be expedient to let the work take its course.

Mr. MALLORY. With some little knowledge of the Navy, I yield to no man on the floor of the Senate, in a desire that it should be placed on a footing commensurate with its importance, and the increasing wants of the country. I find myself, however, obliged to vote against this measure. I find myself unexpectedly concurring in my views with the Senator from New Hampshire, and I congratulate myself that I can concur with him on some points. I call on all Senators who are friends of the Navy to put themselves against allowing any officer any extra compensation in face of the fact, that we have these existing statutes against granting any extra pay.

Whether this gentleman is competent or not, is not the question. We all concede that he is competent; he is one of the most meritorious in the Navy, and perfectly competent for this or any other service. But this is not the question. In his present position he enjoys a preferred situation while he is employed upon a work which every officer in the Navy is presumed to be competent to perform. He gets a yearly stipend for his labor, and then we are here called upon to pay him $3,000 extra. Whether that is too little or too much is not the question. We have an Observatory, and we supply it with all needed facilities in the shape of instruments, books, &c. Congress never denies for a moment any appropriation which is suitable to enable it to carry out its objects. We place officers there for the purpose of carrying out its designs, and as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] has stated, the very instant we require something practical, and that something in the line of their duty, which we suppose them eminently qualified to perform, they come here and ask for extra compensation. It is the system of granting extra compensation, and giving preferred situations to officers in the Navy, which more than anything else deteriorates the character of the Navy, and makes it a great eleemosynary institution.

There are officers of the Navy who are as ignorant practically of the command of a ship as any of us upon this floor. They are theoretically acquainted with what is required; but they cannot carry their knowledge into practice. This arises from the fact that we keep them in situations where they are precluded from acquiring the practice of their profession for years at a time. These are preferred situations; and the instant we require something of them which is of a practical character, they come here and ask for increased compensation.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS,] that if we were to call upon a scientific gentleman to perform this duty, $3,000 per annum would not be too great a compensation. But I ask, Have we not this Observatory? Do we not detail officers and keep them there for years, and do they not become experienced in their duty by devoting themselves to these particular duties, to the neglect of the ordinary duties of a naval officer? We have officers abroad, at increased salaries, to acquire this kind of practical knowledge, and instead of taking the officers of the Navy in rotation, and giving each of them an opportunity to acquire this kind of practical knowledge, we keep the identical officers in the same situations for years, and these situations give them advantages which other sea-going officers do not enjoy, and when we call upon them to do what is simply their duty, we are asked to give them an extra compensation.

Mr. CLEMENS. There are some facts connected with this matter which I think ought to be known to the Senate and to the country; and whether they have any influence here or not, they will, perhaps, have some influence upon those who are more directly responsible to the people than we are here.

Under the act of the 3d of March, 1849, Lieutenant Davis applied to the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury for the sum of $3,000 as pay for superintending the Nautical Almanac. The Fourth Auditor rejected this claim, or at least denied that he had any power to pay it. He then came to Congress, and asked for an appropriation of $3,000 for his benefit. Upon my motion, that sum was stricken out of the general appropriation bill by this body. Then, under this act, by which the Fourth Auditor had denied his right to pay this amount, and after the rejection of the appropriation by the Senate, he authorizes the payment of this amount for two years back, to Lieutenant Davis; and in answer to the letter of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] he tells us very gravely, that while under the preceding law, although the appropriation was not in terms included, yet a subsequent act which did not, in terms, exclude its payment, he was justified in making this payment. Sir, the Journal of our proceedings here showed that it was excluded, and that by a vote of two to one of the members of this body. He came here and asked for this appropriation, and we rejected it; and yet, in the face of that rejection, the Fourth Auditor takes upon himself the responsibility of making this payment, and in defiance, too, of the action of the Senate in regard to the application. I am opposed to any further appropriation for this purpose. I was opposed to it then; and it would be a direct condemnation of our own act to insert it now, especially considering that it has been paid in defiance of our authority.

We have heard much, Mr. President, about the propriety of paying this sum, because it is to go to an accomplished officer, and an estimable gentleman. Sir, there are many accomplished officers and estimable gentlemen in the service of the United States; but their accomplishments and amiability do not justify them in putting their hands into the public Treasury. These officers, it should be remembered, owe all that they are to the Government. The Government educates them and supports them; and their services are, therefore, due to the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. There is a great deal of force and pertinence in the observations made by the Senator from Alabama; not because the amount of the salary paid to Lieutenant Davis, or to any other officer of the Navy, is too great, but on the principle that I laid down yesterday, in discussing the general character of the deficiency bill, that it is wrong in itself, and deserves, and should receive at the hands of both Houses of Congress, marked reprobation. Some measure should be adopted to enforce the discontinuance of a practice which has grown up in this Government, which, during the last two or three years, appears to be accumulating in its enormity, and which permits the Executive to thrust his hand into the public Treasury, not only without authority of law, but in direct contravention and contempt of the law. Three thousand dollars constitute but a small sum, and the disposal of them does not affect, by its amount, the character of the Government, or the interests of the Government; but if it is paid away, not merely without authority of law, but as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] has shown, in spite of the law, and after the refusal by a two-thirds vote of this body to sanction it, it becomes the establishment of a principle, and the recognition of a practice which would justify the Executive in taking every dollar out of the Treasury, and paying it to whomsoever he pleases.

We see what has resulted from permitting such a policy, and we can see what it will lead to. We see that the expenses of the Government are going on, increasing in a ratio which must, in a few years, be ruinous to the Government itself. It has gone on increasing from the beginning of this Government, up to the present date, at the rate of twenty-two hundred per cent., from an expenditure of one million nine hundred thousand dollars per annum to forty-three millions last year; and, as we have good reason to believe, it will this year reach fifty-two millions. It has increased at the rate of one hundred per cent. for twelve years past; and calculating, on this data, our expenditure in 1864, twelve years hence, it will amount to a hundred and four millions a year; and carrying the calculation up to 1876, just a hundred years from the birth of this Government, we shall find that it reaches two hundred and eight millions. How can this Government exist under such an expenditure as that? We find that millions on millions of dollars are expended to swell this amount without authority; not only without authority of law, but when the Executive comes here, and asks for an appropriation of money for a certain purpose, and we tell him by a decided vote that he shall not have it, he expends it contrary to law; he violates the law, and treats the action of Congress—the only legitimate and constitutional keeper of the public purse—with contempt. It remains to be seen whether Congress, this Democratic Congress—always preaching economy in the Administration, and the propriety and necessity of compelling the Administration to pursue a constitutional and legitimate course, will sanction such proceedings on the part of the Executive, and then go to the country and tell the people, to turn this extravagant Whig Administration out of office.

Sir, whether Lieutenant Davis is entitled, from his accomplishments, to receive one, two, or ten thousand dollars a year, has nothing to do with the merits of this question. The real question is, whether the Executive shall be permitted, not only without the authority of law, but in violation of the law, to thrust his hand into the Treasury, and carry out measures in any of the Departments, at his own will?

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from Arkansas reminds me of a story which I once heard related in a legislative body somewhat different from this. A certain preacher delivered a discourse one Sunday, from the text "The conies are a feeble folk;" and on the next Sunday he delivered precisely the same sermon from the text "There were giants in the earth in those days." [Laughter.] And the honorable Senator, upon this little appropriation, this question of striking out this proviso allowing to an accomplished officer a compensation of $3,000 for very peculiar services, rises and repeats, in substance, the denunciations which he uttered on the enormous extravagance of this Government, and this Administration, to which the Senate listened with so much pleasure yesterday. Now, I have no objection, at the proper time and in the proper place, to enter upon the consideration of the question of that extravagance—

Mr. DAWSON. Now; now.

Mr. BADGER. And I think it would be no difficult matter to show again, as has been shown conclusively by my friend, the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRANCE,] that the charge wants one essential and proper qualification of a good charge—namely, a sound foundation. But I will not enter into that. I hope we shall be allowed to pass upon this little appropriation without entering into a general discussion about the extravagance of the Administration, although there may be gentlemen here who are delegates to the Convention about to assemble at Baltimore, listening to this discussion, and perhaps being edified in view of the platform which they are about to make in regard to the candidates for the Presidency.

With regard to this particular appropriation, the Senator from Alabama was mistaken if he supposed that he brought forward anything new in relation to the facts. They were all brought forward the other day by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] who stated them with clearness, and urged them with force; and if they were not well and distinctly heard by the Senate, I will venture to say that it was not because he spoke in so low a tone that he could not be heard. [Laughter.] Indeed, so far as that is concerned, I question whether a tolerably attentive auditory outside of these walls would not have been able to collect the general tenor of his remarks. I took occasion then to say what I will not now repeat. This matter was considered in committee. I took occasion then to state, and I repeat the substance of it now, that there was no payment made to Mr. Davis, either in violation of law or without the sanction of law; but that the payments were justified by the interpretation put upon the act. And the interpretation was a just and sensible interpretation; and I would hazard what little of legal reputation I have attained in, (I am sorry to say,) something considerable beyond thirty years' practice of my profession; if I could have that question submitted, not to a Senate of politicians on the eve of a presidential election, but to a judicial tribunal, to make it manifest beyond the fear of successful contradiction or denial. But I will not go into that.

The question is not, as the Senator from Arkansas seems to suppose, whether we shall give our sanction to what has been done in the Executive Department. Not at all, sir; not at all. This proviso is to authorize by act of Congress the payment of this officer that sum of money. It is, that it shall be legitimately paid according to the interpretation of every gentleman; that if there be doubts in the minds of Senators in regard to the Constitution put upon the old law, these doubts may be removed; and I trust that this worthy and excellent officer will not be made to suffer on account of the supposed extravagance of the Administration. Visit their delinquencies, if delinquencies they are, upon themselves and not upon a gentleman who is in every way entitled to compensation, and on whom this compensation would be well and properly bestowed.

Mr. President, the honorable gentleman from Arkansas talks about the Executive taking money out of the Treasury and expending it at his own will. Sir, I think the Senator from Arkansas will find himself utterly unable to verify the proposition that in one single instance the Administration has expended one dollar which has not been appropriated by act of Congress; not one dollar. In this case there was an undoubted appropriation; and it is not pretended that the appropriation was exceeded. Six thousand dollars were appropriated for the expenses of a Nautical Almanac, including the pay of a superintendent. The only question is, whether a correct interpretation was put upon that law, as to the right to allow a certain amount of compensation to the superintendent; whether, because he was an officer of the Navy the Secretary was precluded from paying him anything more than his ordinary compensation as an officer, or whether the law authorizes this payment. That was the question.

The money was no doubt appropriated, not only to defray the general expenses of the Nautical Almanac, but appropriated for the payment of the Superintendent. That is clear; and the only question is, whether that interpretation is right, by which it was supposed that he was to be paid as a superintendent distinct from, and beyond the ordinary compensation which he was to receive as an officer, when in the discharge of the usual duties assigned to him. That is the whole question. Now, whether the interpretation was right or wrong, it is not a case of seizing the money from the Treasury. It was an interpretation put upon the law by intelligent men; an interpretation sanctioned by the head of the Navy Department, of whom I will take occasion to say that there is not a gentleman on this floor who is a better lawyer than he is, nor is there anywhere a gentleman of higher honor, or more unimpeachable integrity, or who, in his private and public transactions, stands with hands more clean and untouched, either by the charge or the suspicion of delinquency. Like all other men, however, he may have erred in judgment. But if error in judgment constituted crime, God help us all here! for we should all be criminals of the worst die if our past transactions should be looked into, and errors of the head should be charged, not as errors of the head, but as errors of the heart.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] said this money was paid, not only without the authority of law, but in direct contradiction to a vote of the Senate, refusing to allow the payment. Well, how does the fact of the refusal to allow the payment, show that the money was paid contrary to law? That brings us back to the question as to what was the meaning of the first law. If the first law authorized the payment, there was no necessity for another for that purpose. There was no declaration of the Senate, or the House of Representatives as to the interpretation of the law. That was left to the Executive Departments. There it was; and if that law warranted the payment, it did not cease to warrant it because the Senate refused to put it in or strike out a particular sum in the general appropriation bill of 1850.

But again, Mr. President, I had occasion to remark, the other day, that the vote upon striking out that amendment, or rather of not concurring in it, furnishes no criterion at all of the opinion of the Senate, by which we may judge of the abstract justice, or the propriety of this measure itself.

I had occasion to remark, the other day, that we were at the close, and in the last hours of the session; that we were warned over and over again by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] who was at the head of the Committee on Finance, that we would endanger the passage of the bill by incumbering it with amendments. And, as I stated the other day, I recollect very well that the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. CLAY,] whose severe and protracted illness we all so deeply regret, voted on that occasion with the Senator from New Hampshire to prevent the bill from being incumbered with another amendment; and voted against striking out an amendment therein, for the reason that he would vote for no other amendment which would be likely to embarrass the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. If, therefore, the Secretary of the Navy looked into the Journal of the Senate to ascertain what took place during the last hours of the session, he could have found out nothing, either because members of the Senate were opposed to allowances, or afraid to endanger the bill, or because they might think that it was unnecessary, being provided for in the original law. However these matters may be, I submit to the Senator from Arkansas not to concur in inflicting what would be a real punishment and wrong upon this highly-talented and meritorious officer. Let us keep this proviso in, and let us settle our political disputes on some other occasion, at the expense of the parties directly, and not at the expense of this individual.

Mr. HALE. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure, as I always do, and with instruction, to the honorable Senator from North Carolina. He has given double instruction; for he got up and cautioned the Senator from Arkansas against repeating his sermon, as he called it, under another text. All the difference between the Senator himself and the Senator from Arkansas is, that he has repeated his speech of the other day upon the same text. He has not even given us a variety in the text.

But I do pray that the merits of this amendment may not be lost sight of in this war of the roses, because it has nothing to do with it. I do hope the Senate will not lose sight of the main facts. The Senator from North Carolina has failed to tell us what our seven mathematical professors at the Observatory are about. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts has failed to tell us of the superiority of the mathematical and nautical instruments at Cambridge, over those which we have been buying here, and paying $10,500 a year for, with $8,000 for books.

Mr. BADGER. I did not state to the Senator what the mathematical professors at the Observatory were about, for the very obvious reason, that I did not know. I am not in charge of the Observatory, and have no communication with it; but I take it for granted, that they are in the discharge of their proper duties.

Mr. HALE. So I take it. I suppose they are in the discharge of their proper duties, or they would be ready to discharge this, if we would let them. But here we have this fact: $31,000 are expended annually for the purposes of science, and we do not use enough of it to calculate an eclipse. We appropriate and expend—I do not know how—$31,000 in salaries, and $10,000 in nautical instruments, and $8,000 in books, and yet, when we want to get an almanac calculated, we have to send to Cambridge to get it done. I want to know if this is not disgraceful to the country, and derogatory to the gentlemen in charge of the Observatory? The very suggestion of John Quincy Adams, that it would be profitable to build one of these light-houses of the sky, upset his Administration. But, sir, I do not think the Observatory can be said to be much of a light-house of the sky, if, when we want to look at an eclipse, we have to go to Cambridge to look through their telescope. That is the question which labors in my mind. Where is the necessity of twenty-three or twenty-four scientific men here, when we have to go to Cambridge to get an eclipse calculated? That, sir, I say, is the difficulty that labors in my mind.

I hope the Senate attended to the remarks which fell from the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLOY.] I know something about how these things are done. I know something about the feelings of other officers of the Navy. The honorable Senator from North Carolina has more than once intimated that I have some hostility to the Navy, or to its officers. When did I ever make a motion to lower the salary of an officer of the Navy? When did he ever hear me vote to take the first mill from any legal emolument which any officer had a right to enjoy? I have always been in favor of paying them liberally, and of compensating them as far as the law compensated them. We do pay now by law, without any extra allowance—and I want the Senate and the country to know it, and I hope the Delegates, if there are any here, will listen to it also, notwithstanding the caution of the Senator from North Carolina—we pay, I say, to the officers of the American Navy higher salaries than are paid to officers of the same grade in any Navy on earth. The honorable Senator from North Carolina shakes his head; but I have looked into the matter; and I call upon Senators, if they doubt it, to go and look at the pay of the officers of the Royal Navy of Great Britain, and of the Navies of France and Russia. They will find that, to officers of the same grade, a higher compensation is paid to officers in the American Navy than to the officers of either the Russian, French, or English Navy, or of any navy upon earth. Therefore there is no necessity for this extra allowance of compensation.

Then, if we have this Naval Observatory; if we have a corps there of twenty-four or twenty-five scientific men; if we are paying them a liberal compensation, where, in the name of Heaven, is the necessity, when we want an almanac, of detailing another officer and sending him to Cambridge to make that almanac? That is the question which the Senator from North Carolina says he has not answered and cannot answer, because, if there is any necessity for it, it is an impeachment of those officers. It is saying that our Observatory is useless; that our professors are dunces; and that our officers of the Navy are not competent to perform the duty which they ought to perform. We are paying twenty-four scientific men a salary, and, when we want a work done, we must detail another man, and send him to Cambridge to get it done.

I will not go into the questions which have been brought into this discussion, except those which relate to this claim; but let me correct a single fact, in regard to an officer, because I want to be accurate. The officer to whom the Senator from Alabama referred, was not the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, but the second Comptroller, Governor Parris, who, I venture to say, was one of the most worthy, faithful, honest, and intelligent officers we ever had. He was too honest, and too intelligent and faithful to stay in his place. He had to go off, because such claims as this could not be got through while he was there. That is the reason he is not there now. When he was there, you could not get through a thing of this sort. When this claim was presented, he said, "No." Both the House and the Senate said "No." The Senator from North Carolina is altogether mistaken in his recollection of what took place on the amendment to the deficiency bill of last year. If he will look to that bill as reported by the Committee on Finance, he will find that the amendment raising Lieutenant Davis's salary to $3,000 a year, was one of the amendments reported by that committee, and was in the bill as it came from them.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly; but every amendment made to the bill, whether reported by the Committee on Finance or not, had to go to the House of Representatives and be acted upon there.

Mr. HALE. Then I am right in that. It was one of the amendments reported by the committee, and if it had been adopted it could not have embarrassed the bill more than the other amendments which were adopted. The facts in the case are, that the Second Comptroller would not pay the claim. It went to the House, and they would not pay it. It came here, and the Senate would not pay it. Then Lieutenant Davis got affidavits from various persons, and submitted them to the man who was put in Governor Parris's place, and it was allowed. And now, when you find out that that claim has been allowed, you want to pass a proviso that nobody else shall ever do the same thing; but, inasmuch as this man has done it, he will be permitted to receive $3,000 a year! It is a sort of premium on the adroitness with which money can be taken out of the Treasury. You have adopted the amendment that nobody else shall ever do it—that no other estimate shall ever warrant such a payment—and then you go on and provide that the only man in whose behalf it ever was done shall continue to receive the advance. It is a mockery on legislation—it is a mockery on the amendment which you have adopted—to say that the only case in which the abuse has been perpetrated shall enjoy the fruits of it, and nobody else shall. For this reason I hope the proviso will not be concurred in.

Mr. CLEMENS. The Senator from North Carolina told us, with a good deal of confidence, that he would hazard whatever reputation as a lawyer he had obtained, that any lawyer would place the same construction upon this law, as was put upon it by the Comptroller. I beg to say to the Senator, that he has put a very valuable article in jeopardy very lightly. The error into which he has fallen is a very common one. It is the error of not having read the law itself, but of having taken the Comptroller's say-so of what it is. If you admit that the Comptroller tells you precisely what the law is—gives you the truth, and the whole truth—then by possibility it may bear the construction which he has put upon it; but, sir, I have the law on which this payment is made before me. I propose to read it to the Senate:

"For nautical books, maps, charts, instruments, and all other expenses of the hydrographical office, $58,360: Provided, That a competent officer of the Navy, not below the grade of a lieutenant, be charged with the duty of preparing a Nautical Almanac for publication; and that the Secretary of the Navy may, when in his opinion the interests of navigation would be promoted thereby, cause any nautical works that may from time to time be published by the hydrographical office to be sold at cost, and the proceeds received therefrom to be placed in the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. BADGER. What law is that?

Mr. CLEMENS. That is a section of the act of March 3, 1849, under which the officer of the Treasury claims to have made this payment; and that is the section under which he claims to have made it.

Now, Mr. President, there is not in that act one solitary word about the payment of the officer for superintending the publication of this Nautical Almanac. The only thing in it is, that the proceeds arising from the sales of certain works shall go into the Treasury of the United States. By no honest construction can it be contended that that officer is authorized to receive one dollar over the compensation allowed by law. Why, sir, he is a salaried officer of the Government already. He owed his service to the Government. The Government educated him. Whatever he is, the Government made him. The Government supports him, and has supported him from his boyhood up. His services were due to the Government, and it was never the intention of Congress that he should be paid double for performing a work which he would much rather perform than go to sea.

The Senator might have saved himself the trouble of defending the Secretary of the Navy. I have made no assault upon that gentleman. I insisted that this Comptroller of the Treasury has acted not only not in conformity with law, but in direct violation of law. I say he did it with his eyes open.

Mr. BADGER. I did not understand the Senator as casting any imputation on the Secretary of the Navy; but I mentioned that Secretary as concurring in the opinion of the Comptroller, and that that opinion has whatever weight he could give to it, as to its propriety.

Mr. CLEMENS. The Senator is mistaken in another particular; and very widely mistaken. He supposes that the vote in the Senate upon striking out this appropriation during the last Congress was no test, and assigns as a reason, that certain gentlemen were anxious to avoid any amendments being made to the appropriation bill; and he mentions particularly the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. CLAY,] whose illness keeps him from among us. If the Senator had examined the Journals, he would have found that he was mistaken in that particular. On my motion, the proviso, "that the officer in charge of said work shall receive the same compensation as the officer in charge of the National Observatory," was stricken out. Amongst those who voted in favor of striking it out was the Senator from Kentucky, to whom he has alluded. He says that that Senator was opposed to inserting the amendment, because he did not want to incur the bill with amendments. Why, in fifteen minutes afterwards he voted to incur it with the Collins line of steamers.

Mr. BADGER. That was a special case.

Mr. CLEMENS. That is not all. Here are two pages of votes on the Journal, one right after the other, and, four times out of five, the Senator from Kentucky voted to put in amendments. Here are the votes. I have the Journal before me. It could not have been, therefore, for that reason that the Senator from Kentucky voted to strike this appropriation out. He voted to strike out as I did, I have no doubt, because he thought the officer was not entitled to receive it.

And now, Mr. President, I ask leave to read the conclusion of this admirable letter of the Second Comptroller. With this Journal before him, with the knowledge of this fact, and the knowledge, too, that the same proceedings had taken place in the other end of the Capitol, he says:

"When the appointment of a superintendent is provided for by law, and his payment expressly authorized by the appropriation act of one year,"

Assuming that it had been expressly authorized, which it never was, as the law I have read shows. It never was authorized; but he assumes that it was expressly authorized by a preceding appropriation act—

"And when the act of the following year contains an appropriation for purposes that would properly include the salary, and without, in terms, excluding it?"

Who ever heard of its being excluded in an act? The Journal is the place which shows whether it was excluded. Who ever heard of saying in an act, a law, passed by Congress, that this officer shall not receive so much? There was no necessity for it. Without an express law authorizing him to receive it, he could not get it.

"And if the whole amount of estimates in which it is specially contained is appropriated, it would certainly be going very far to say that the Secretary has no power to alter it."

It would "be going very far to say that the Secretary has no power to alter it!" The facts, as stated by me when I was up before, and, as the Senator from North Carolina says, by the Senator from New Hampshire the other day—whose speech I did not happen to hear, although I was in the Chamber at the time—are these, and they are not in controversy: The act of March 3, 1849, makes no appropriation for the payment of this superintendent. The Second Comptroller of the Treasury at that time, when the superintendent applied to him for payment, told him the law did not justify him in making it. He then comes to Congress. Congress says, "No, we will not pay it." Then a new Second Comptroller, who had got into office in the mean time, reverses the decision of his predecessor, and in defiance of the votes of both Houses of Congress, pays the superintendent for two years back. These are the facts. They are not controverted. The Senator from North Carolina cannot deny them. Here are the documents. There is no getting round them; and the question now is, Shall we approve of the act of the Second Comptroller?

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. President, I understand that the same question which the present Second Comptroller of the Treasury has undertaken to determine, was previously submitted to Governor Parris, while he filled that office, and that he decided against the claim. He was the proper person to adjudicate upon the question. It came appropriately before him, and he, having made the decision, it was res adjudicata—a thing adjudicated—a question settled; and I would like to know how it happens, after a question of this kind has been decided by the proper officer, that his successor undertakes a revision of it? An important lesson may be learned from this proceeding. We find that the former Second Comptroller stood in the way of claims of this character. A more competent and faithful officer could not be found in the public service in any of the Departments of the Government. He was removed. Why was it? Was it, as has been intimated by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the check imposed upon the expenditure of the public money by his watchfulness might be removed? Can any other cause be assigned? Certain it is, that, since his removal, the expenditure of the public money has been made more easy. I am opposed to granting this allowance, because I regard it as indorsing and sanctioning a disbursement from the public Treasury in violation of law.

Mr. BORLAND. In regard to the facts of this particular case, I have nothing to add to what has been stated by the Senators from Alabama and New Hampshire. With regard to the personal character of Mr. Davis, or of the Secretary of the Navy—upon whom the honorable Senator from North Carolina has passed so high a eulogy, and I have no doubt he deserves it—I have nothing to say. But the Senator from North Carolina characterized my remarks to-day, as a repetition of a sermon which I had been preaching here for some time. Well, Mr. President, I admit that I did express the same idea, and I alluded to the same facts before. I apprehend it was not the repetition of the idea, or the reënciation of the facts that struck the ear of the Senator from North Carolina so unpleasantly—but the fact itself, the broad and glaring fact, of which he cannot get clear. The act of the Administration, of which he is a friend, which stands in bold relief in contrast with the action of Congress—that is what is so objectionable to him, I have no doubt, and those on the same side with him. He has to get clear of that fact before he will ever be done hearing of it, while I have a seat on this floor, and while this Administration is in power. When occasion offers, I shall repeat it every day.

Mr. BUTLER. "Line upon line; precept upon precept."

Mr. BORLAND. Sir, we have high authority, when wrong-doers will persist in their course of wrong-doing, for giving them "line upon line," and "precept upon precept;" but I very much fear that this Administration and its friends will go in the same course sinners have always gone, in disregard of "line upon line" and "precept upon precept." It remains to be seen whether the people of the United States, especially in the approaching crisis of the vote of the political parties, will sit quietly down and permit this sin to be perpetrated day after day, month after month, and year after year; whether they will permit that or will rise up in their power and rebuke it, and that, too, in the most effectual way, by putting the perpetrators of the act out of the positions which enable them to commit such acts.

Mr. BADGER. If anything which I said jokingly about the repetition of a sermon by the Senator from Arkansas upon a different text to-day has had any influence in inducing him to form the resolution he now announces to give it day by day, as long as this Administration is in power—

Mr. BORLAND. I formed it before.

Mr. BADGER. I admit I have committed a great mistake, and I sincerely regret it, not out of regard for the executive branch of the Government, but out of commiseration for the Senate.

Mr. BORLAND. I have but to say that the Senator's commiseration for me—

Mr. BADGER. No, for the Senate.

Mr. BORLAND. Well, whether for me or for the Senate must rest alone upon his conviction that this Administration not only has done wrong, but means to do wrong from this time until the end of its existence. There can be no commiseration, because there will be no infiction, unless the wrong is done; so the very fact that he feels this commiseration, and is so painfully apprehensive that this thing will be done, must rest upon his conviction that the Administration has done wrong in the past; it has got so deeply committed to a wrong policy that it has necessarily, from the force of habit, to go on in the same downward career until it ruins itself.

Mr. BADGER. My feeling of commiseration was inevitable, because, although I do not think the Administration has done wrong, or will do wrong, yet I have no doubt they will always do wrong in the judgment of the Senator from Arkansas; so we are obliged to hear his remarks over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MANGUM

in the chair.) The question is on concurring in the proviso as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLEMENS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to say one word in explanation of a remark which fell from my friend from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS.] What he says is correct, that the expression contained in the letter of the Second Comptroller, that there is any express allowance of this item in the bill, is a mistake. But there is an express allowance of that sum in the estimate which accompanied the bill, which was printed by Congress, and upon which the appropriation was based: "For calculating, printing, and publishing the Nautical Almanac, including the pay of the Superintendent, the sum of $6,000," making part of the gross sum.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Brooke, Davis, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Houston, Hunter, Mangum, Miller, Pearce, Rusk, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Sumner, Upham, and Wade—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Butler, Chase, Clemens, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Felch, Hale, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Sebastian, Underwood, Walker, and Weller—22.

So the proviso was not concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole is as follows:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings be, and he is hereby, authorized to apply any unexpended portion of the money appropriated by an act of Congress, entitled 'An act making appropriation to meet the expenses incurred in consequence of the late fire at the Capitol,' approved January 13, 1852, to the payment of expenses necessarily incurred in repairing the damage lately done by fire in the office of the Clerk of the Supreme Court, and in making other repairs about the Capitol."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole is as follows:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized to purchase for the United States a suitable piece of ground, at a central point in the city of San Francisco, California, as a site for the erection of the custom-house heretofore authorized to be built: Provided, That said site of ground may be obtained with good and sufficient title to the United States in exchange for such reasonable portion of the Government reserve in that city as the said Secretary shall deem just and equitable, or for a sum in lieu thereof not exceeding $40,000; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry into effect this provision, the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That if the said Secretary shall fail to obtain such ground on satisfactory terms, then the said sum, or such portion thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in providing the proper foundations for said custom-house on the site heretofore selected for the purpose."

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. MANGUM in the chair.) All the amendments made in Committee of the Whole have been acted upon, except the one in regard to the appointment of an agent to procure copies of the laws, decrees, or ordinances of the Spanish Government, relating to land claims in California or New Mexico, &c.; which was passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. WELLER. That amendment was passed over the other day on my application, in order that an opportunity might be given to make it satisfactory. My desire was that it should be so modified as to protect the rights, not only of the United States, but of all the claimants to land titles in California under the Mexican and Spanish Governments. I have not been able to get it into such a shape as to be satisfactory to myself. It will require more time and attention than I am now able to give to it. I shall therefore ask that that amendment may not be concurred in. I have no doubt some advantages will result from sending an agent to Mexico with a view to ascertain what the amendment proposes to ascertain; but that can be provided for quite as well under the general appropriation bill.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. CLEMENS. I wish to offer an amendment. It is to insert after the other appropriations for custom-houses the following:

For the completion of the custom-house at Mobile, Alabama, $100,000.

That is in pursuance of an estimate; and the appropriation is the exact amount estimated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATCHISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to propose an amendment to the bill. It is to insert the following:

For the payment of annuities, and the transportation of the same, to certain tribes of Indians, in accordance with the 7th article of the treaty made at Fort Laramie on the 17th of December, A. D. 1851, $60,000.

I will barely state that I have offered this amendment with the approbation of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I also submitted it to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and one other member; and they think it proper. I have a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and a letter from Mr. Fitzpatrick, an agent of these Indians—which can be read, if desired—showing the necessity, the absolute necessity, of this appropriation.

Mr. GEYER. I propose to amend the amendment by adding:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to purchase the provisions, merchandise, domestic animals, and agricultural implements, to be delivered in payment of the annuity first payable under the 7th article of said treaty, without previous advertisement, if such purchases can be so made on reasonable terms.

Mr. ATCHISON. I consent to that, because I believe it to be necessary to expedite the business.

Mr. GEYER. I was going to remark that the Indians are now collected, and are becoming somewhat impatient at delay. It is important that this annuity should be paid at an early day; and if we have to pursue the forms adopted in the Department—advertise for the articles to be purchased—greater delay and uneasiness will be produced.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I desire now to offer an amendment, which I brought to the notice of the Senate the other day. It is an amendment which was placed in my hands by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CLARKE,] who is now necessarily absent. The Senate has already adopted an amendment incorporating into this bill this provision:

"For completing the floating dry-dock at San Francisco, California, authorized by act of 3d March, 1851, $360,000."

This dock is now nearly completed, and will shortly, as I understand, be transported to California. It will be some time before a pier, or a basin and railway, can be constructed in connection with it. If a pier is constructed, it will take but a short time, and I presume it will be ordered at the present session. The object of the amendment which I now propose, is, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to lease this dock upon certain terms. The amendment is:

"And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to contract for the lease of the said dock to any individual or company, who will receive the same, in the port of San Francisco, upon terms most advantageous to the United States, taking due and sufficient bonds for the safe-keeping of the same, and for its delivery to the United States in good order and condition, whenever a site for a navy yard is selected, and shall be prepared for its reception; first giving due notice for proposals for the use of the said sectional dock, and reserving to the United States the right at all times to use the same free of charge, whenever required for any vessel of the Navy or any vessel in the employment of the Government."

Mr. President, this dock has cost $610,000. Now, there are men who will give at least $50,000 a year for the use of this dock when the Government does not desire to use it. I am so informed by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, who placed this amendment in my hands. In view of the large cost of this dock; in view of the large amount of money which the Government has already paid, or contracted to pay, for this structure, and in view of the necessities of the commercial marine of the bay of San Francisco, I think it nothing more than right that the Secretary of the Navy should have power to lease this dock to gentlemen who would give sufficient security for the return of the same whenever it should be needed by the Navy Department, and whenever a site for the navy-yard should be selected. It seems to me, therefore, that there can be no reasonable objection to the amendment. It has been well considered by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, who placed it in my hands. If the Government can, without any detriment whatever to the public service, receive $50,000 a year for the use of this structure, when it does not require it for its own purposes, I think it ought to do it; and I think we ought so to amend this bill as to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to permit the commercial marine to use this structure when it is not needed for Government purposes—the United States receiving a proper compensation therefor. I hope that there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I offered an amendment when this bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of making some disposition for the proper security of this dock, which I subsequently withdrew, upon objections being taken by some Senators; and I think it had better not be now renewed. I think there is no necessity for making this provision in this bill. There is some difficulty, I think, about adjusting the measure in such a manner as to be proper and right, and I think that when the general naval appropriation bill comes up, the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself will be able to arrange an amendment, with the aid of the Senators from California, which will meet the exigencies of the case. The dock will not be delivered until the fall, and we will have ample time to make this provision in the naval appropriation bill.

I think, however, that the provision suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania is in some respects liable to objection, and I will state to the Senate the reason why I think so—at any rate it so strikes me at present. This floating dry-dock in California originated in a provision made upon the naval appropriation bill of September, 1850, in these words:

"For commencing the construction of a floating dry-dock on the coast of California, $100,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enter into a contract for the construction, with all reasonable dispatch, of a sectional or balance floating dry dock, basin, and railway, at such harbor on the coast of the Pacific ocean, as he may select, of a capacity and dimensions in no respect inferior to those of the dry-dock in progress of construction at Pensacola: Provided, That by granting the said contractors permission, if required, to prepare the materials chiefly at some harbor on the Atlantic sea-board, and advancing moneys thereon as the works progress, the said works can be completed at a sum not exceeding by more than twelve per cent. the total amount contracted to be paid for the floating dry-dock, basin, and railway at the Pensacola navy-yard, with the addition thereto of what would be the cost of transportation to said coast of the said materials thus prepared, and with the reservation till the works are done of ten per cent., and the usual surety for the faithful performance of the contract; and the Secretary of the Navy shall also be authorized to enter into an agreement with the contractors, if they will keep the said works in repair, and take proper care of the same for any given period of years, free of charge to the Government, to permit them to use the said works, during such period, on their own account, for repairing merchant vessels, when not occupied by vessels of the Navy, to which precedence shall at all times be given, on such terms as he shall deem reasonable."

Congress, at a subsequent session, after a verbal agreement had been entered into between the Secretary of the Navy and the contractors for the whole work required by this law, the floating dry-dock, basin, and railway, repealed so much of that law as authorized a contract for the erection of a basin and railway, leaving the residue of the law in force. And my impression is, that all the arrangements made in the Navy Department, and the contract made by the Navy Department, were all founded upon, and related to, the whole of the provisions in the law of 1850, to wit: that the contractors should have the use of the dock for the purpose of repairing private vessels, when the Government of the United States did not require it. I think, therefore, that to put it up now at auction until we have ascertained what is the state of the facts as to that agreement, would be taking a step in the dark, that might be unjust to the contractors, and not warranted by a fair construction of the arrangements between the Government and them. The Senate will recollect that the whole authority given by the law of 1850 was not repealed, but only so much as related to the basin and railway. I would suggest, therefore, to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that I think every object will be accomplished by leaving this matter to rest until the naval appropriation bill comes up. In the mean time we can look into the matter in regard to the contract, and see what disposition should be made with regard to the dock. It would then be in ample time.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I cannot yield to the suggestion of the honorable Senator from North Carolina. He says that this dock will not be finished until the fall, and hence that this provision, or a similar one, had better be incorporated in the general naval appropriation bill. Well, now, the fact that this dock is so soon to be completed, renders it quite necessary that the amendment should be adopted; because notice must be given, and a contract entered into. If we defer it until the naval appropriation bill, which will not pass until August, there will not be sufficient time to give public notice, and have a contract entered into. What objection, therefore, can be urged to the adoption of this amendment at this time? The dock is about being completed. The Secretary of the Navy must necessarily have some time to enter into the contract for the use of this dock. If $50,000 can be obtained without any detriment to the public service—because the amendment provides that the use by the commercial marine is not to interfere with the Government vessels that may be brought there for repair—why shall we not take it? If this dock is so soon to be completed, we ought to adopt the amendment now.

The honorable Senator also seems to think that the contractors for this dock should have the use and occupation of it. I do not think so. By reference to the contract, it will be observed that their work is to be examined, and it is then, if done properly, to be taken off their hands. I think, therefore, that those who have constructed this dock should not be the lessees, and should not have the use of it. Besides that, under the provision which the Senator has read, and which was in part repealed during the last session, these contractors, if I understand it aright, would make some $50,000 a year by having the use of it, if they are to have it gratuitously from the Government. So I am informed, at any rate, by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, who placed this amendment in my hands; he tells me that the use of the dock by the commercial marine is worth some $50,000 a year.

I hope that the amendment will be adopted at this time. It is a simple proposition to lease the use of this structure upon good security for a term of years. The dock has cost the Government a large sum of money; and if we can receive a large sum in return for the structure, without any detriment to the public service, it seems to me that we ought not to hesitate a moment in doing so.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, it is entirely unnecessary for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to assume any oratorical display on this subject—

Mr. BRODHEAD. I did not.

Mr. BADGER. I have very great indifference about whether the proposition be adopted or not. I simply made the suggestion to him, of what I supposed to be some difficulty embraced in the adoption of the amendment. That is all. I suggested that I was under the impression that the arrangements which have been made between the Secretary of the Navy and the contractor of the dry-dock, under the act of 1850, modified by the subsequent repeal of a portion of it, referred to or included this very subject. And all I wanted was, if that was so, that we should not now adopt a different arrangement.

I confess that I am not myself exactly pleased with the idea of the Government hiring out this structure to the highest bidder. I would have it put out to competent persons who understand its management, and who would take care of it, on the best terms. I merely suggested, when I was up before, whether it was not proper that the subject-matter of this amendment should rest until the naval appropriation bill comes up. I did not wish any argument or discussion. I did not really wish to be considered as opposing the proposition; for it was a matter of very great indifference to me. As I said before, when I offered an amendment in relation to this matter the other day, I withdrew it when objection was made. I care nothing about it.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I feel under some difficulty in relation to this amendment, because I have not been able to inform myself fully in relation to it. Commodore Smith told me that it would be necessary to provide some appropriation for the purpose of receiving the dock; but he sent me no estimate. It is now being shipped around, or is about to be shipped around. And it is said that something will be necessary for the purpose of painting it. I think, when it shall get there, and that an appropriation for that object ought to be put into this bill; but no estimate for that object has come to me. I have understood that a letter on the subject has been sent to the Navy Department. I had supposed that this proposition was a substitute for that. I understand that this dock is far larger than is necessary for the use of the Government, and that the Government could dispense with at least four sections of it. Various arrangements have been suggested as profitable and as advantageous. One would be to sell four of these sections, upon the condition that the parties buying them would put up a pier, which could be easily done. Another course would be, to let out the dock by contract, on condition that it should be returned in good order. I believe that the practice of taking ships on these docks, and charging something for that service, is not unusual. I think it has been done of late on the stone docks. I was informed that there have been instances in Massachusetts in which it has been done.

Mr. DAVIS. There may have been some instances.

Mr. HUNTER. At any rate, I see no impropriety in it. It would be one means of saving the Government some of the heavy expenditures which have been made for this object, and in that way would be useful. It would be useful to the Government, and it would be useful to the merchant marine. It would be much better than building Government docks for the purpose of docking merchant vessels for nothing. Therefore I feel disposed, on the whole, to go for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. But I have no doubt that the Department might lease the dock out in such a way that it would be preserved, and from which the parties might derive profit enough to paint it, and do what is necessary. I suppose, in fact, that this is a substitute for that proposition; because I know that the Senator from Rhode Island has devoted a great deal of time and attention to the matter; and I presume that the reason why the estimate for the amount necessary to paint the dock, and to provide means for receiving it was not sent down, was, that it was supposed that this amendment would be found sufficient, and that the Secretary could thus put the dock out upon such terms as would provide for these objects without further expenditure to the Government. I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I confess I was inclined to oppose this amendment when it was first submitted, simply for the reason that I am inclined to suspect anything which comes from the Senator from Pennsylvania in regard to this dry-dock, in consequence of the position which he assumed here some time since. But if the Government can derive $50,000 a year from the use of this dry-dock, and if the commercial marine floating on the Pacific can, at the same time, be accommodated, the proposition ought to be adopted. Therefore, notwithstanding the suspicion which I have of everything coming from that quarter in relation to this matter, I am inclined to vote for this amendment, and I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state an additional reason, which escaped me when I was up before. Unless money is appropriated, or unless the Secretary is authorized to make some arrangement for the reception of the dock when it gets there, it is likely that we shall be charged demurrage—that we shall be subjected to great cost in that way. So that I apprehend it will be essential either to appropriate money, or to pass some such amendment as this. We have no estimate as to the amount of money which will be required, and therefore we can offer no amendment proposing such appropriation; hence nothing is left to us but to adopt some such amendment as this.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are acting prematurely, and without the necessary information upon this subject. Gentlemen say that the Government may make $50,000 by this operation; but that is a mere expectation on their part. They cannot say so positively. We do not know but that the Government may lose $100,000 by this. There is no telling what the result may be. There ought to be some arrangements made for this dock.

Mr. WELLER. How can the Government lose?

Mr. RUSK. By damage that may be done to the dock. So far as I am concerned, I have no hostility to the amendment. On the contrary, it strikes me very favorably; but still I would rather consult those who know something about the matter. I confess, however, that the idea of letting out Government property does not strike me very favorably. I am willing to allow the use of this dock to merchant ships, if the proper arrangements can be made; but, by letting it out by contract, it may be subjected to damage. At any rate, we have ample time to look into the matter. The Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the Navy, who understand the business much better than we do, will have ample time to look into the matter, and tell us what may be done; and then we can put some provision for the purpose into the general naval appropriation bill. This is overloading this deficiency bill, as I understand it. It will not be necessary to incur any expense in the reception of this dock until the fall, and certainly we shall pass the naval appropriation bill before that time. For myself, I would much prefer that the Secretary of the Navy, or some officer of the Navy, should be consulted on the subject, and that we should have a report from the Naval Committee, in order that we may have a distinct understanding as to the best mode of securing the safety of the property of the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, when the appropriation for the construction of this dock was originally made, the provision which was in the law, and which has been read by the Senator from North Carolina, was either offered by myself, as an amendment, or was incorporated into it at my particular suggestion, by the committee which had the matter in charge. It was the expenditure of a large sum of money, and on a work which would not be all the time in use by the Government. There was a very large commercial marine in that country. That I desired to see taken care of. There were occasions, when with slight repairs, our merchant vessels could be sent home, and without which it was impossible for them to go round the Cape. I do not understand the amendment, thus incorporated into the original bill, as making a perpetual lease of the dock to these contractors, or anything of the kind.

Mr. BADGER. Not at all.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think that is the true construction of the law, as it now stands. I suppose that it did not go to this extent. It seems to me that the law may stand just as it is until some future period, when it shall be found that additional legislation is necessary. When that work shall have been constructed, and after it shall have been accepted, and after it shall have been put in its place, there may be a commercial marine which may need it. It has not yet been delivered to the Government. The contractors who have it in charge, if they shall be responsible to the Government, may thus use it until it is delivered; but after it shall be actually delivered to the Government, then that clause will terminate. I think, then, that there will be ample time for the Government to make such permanent provision for the use of the dock by the merchant marine as shall be necessary. On that view of the case, while I was at first disposed to favor the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I think we had better let the matter stand as it now is.

Mr. BADGER. I am sorry to trouble the Senate again on this question; but I wish to state that I have in my possession a communication made by the Secretary of the Navy to the Naval Committee, setting forth this whole subject at length. It was a communication of some half dozen pages. The Secretary considers that the authority given him under the appropriation bill of 1850 is still in force, and that he is authorized to make the arrangements contemplated by the bill; but Congress being in session, he prefers that Congress should do so. He prefers that Congress should direct him upon what terms he shall enter into this arrangement, but he considers that he is authorized to enter into it if he chooses, by the authority of the act of 1850, upon such terms as he may think proper.

I wish now to suggest a serious difficulty about this matter. If, in the existing state of things in California, this dock shall be put up and hired out to the highest bidder, he will then be at liberty, of course, to use it for the commercial marine upon just what terms he pleases; and he would have it in his power, as a necessary consequence—there being only one dock on the whole of that coast, when this shall have got there, (for there is none now)—to exact just what price he pleases for the use of the dock; and while he makes enormous profits for himself, and obliges the commercial marine, and the owners of private ships there, to pay him what he pleases, the Government will receive but a very small amount; but if the arrangement is made under the bill of 1850, by the Secretary of the Navy, he can then, with propriety, and as a part of the terms of that agreement, reserve to his Department the power of controlling the charges which shall be made for the use of the dock by commercial vessels.

Mr. HUNTER. Why can he not do so under this amendment?

Mr. BADGER. Because he is required to put it up to the highest bidder.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment requires the contract to be made on the most advantageous terms.

Mr. BADGER. On the most advantageous terms for the Government. If this amendment should be adopted, and the Secretary of the Navy should, in accordance with it, lease this dock to some individuals, he could not, with propriety, interfere with them, after they had paid the money stipulated. At all events, it seems to me that there is no pressing necessity for acting on this matter now. I am sorry that I have mislaid the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, to which I have referred; but when I withdrew the amendment the other day, I did not suppose that the matter would again come up, and I did not think it necessary to preserve the letter.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It seems to me that there can be no difficulty with regard to this matter. The amendment proposes to confer upon the Secretary of the Navy the power to make such a contract as he may think most advantageous to the Government, and beneficial to the commercial marine—it does not restrict him. The amendment is very carefully drawn. In order that the contract may be made at the proper time, I think it should be now adopted.

Mr. MALLORY. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, that the dock may reach California, and there may be no pier, no basin there to make the dock effective. Under this proposed contract, which the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make with individuals, the individuals may erect such a pier as will answer their purpose—which is the repair of the commercial marine, the vessels of which average about six hundred tons, and trade on the Pacific coast. Now, a pier which would be sufficient for the repair of the merchant marine would be wholly inadequate for the repair of the naval marine. I suppose I may say that, in proportion as the bids for this contract would increase, just in that proportion would the bidders be disinclined to expend money upon the pier. Just in proportion as they give for the use of the dock, would they be disinclined to erect a large pier. It is quite possible that, in addition to all the objections which are upon the face of a copartnership between the Government and private individuals, this objection may pertain: that, while the commercial marine may reap the advantages of the pier, it may be perfectly inappropriate to the repair of naval vessels. The Secretary of the Navy, under the proposed amendment, truly has a right to contract upon such terms as he may deem best; but he is restricted, notwithstanding, to contract with the highest bidder.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Who will give proper security.

Mr. MALLORY. It is said that the contract is to be made with the highest bidder, who will give proper security. I understand, too, that if a contract is made with the highest bidder, it will be without reference at all to the form of the pier which is necessary to make the dock effectual.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, it is extremely desirable that some arrangement should be made by which the merchant marine upon the Pacific coast should have the use of this dry-dock; but as to the best mode of accomplishing that object, there may well be a difference of opinion. I can readily perceive, that if the amendment be adopted, without any additional restriction or guards thrown around it, the person who obtains the contract may use the dock given to him in such a manner as to oppress one class of ship-owners at the expense of another. He may refuse the use of the dock to some ship-owners upon the Pacific for the purpose of repairing their vessels. He may be bribed to pursue that course by other extensive ship-owners. I mean that that course can be adopted if there be no restrictions placed upon the contractor—if there be no limits fixed upon the charges to be levied upon the vessels using that dry-dock. I think that in the adoption of any regulation upon this subject, there ought to be some limitation fixed upon the power of the contractor.

The same objection that would arise to letting the contract out to the highest bidder, would apply with equal force to the form prescribed in the old law; for that law provided that a contract should be made, with the original contractors of the dry-dock, for keeping it in this way. Now, the Senate will readily perceive that that power might be abused by the contractors—that those who have obtained this contract from the General Government for the use of the dry-dock might use that power in such a way as to oppress one portion of the merchant service, and favor another portion. I should therefore have preferred, myself, that a question of this importance should have been maturely considered before it was brought before the Senate. I was not aware, until the amendment was offered to-day, that it was the intention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to submit it. I would rely much upon the superior judgment of those who are more familiar with these subjects than I am. Doing so, I shall vote for this amendment; but, at the same time, I must confess that there are not those restrictions thrown around it, which, in my judgment, would be necessary, in order to prevent an abuse of power on the part of the contractors.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this dock, it is said, is larger than is necessary for the use of the Government. I dare say it will turn out to be true. This is what is called a "sectional dock." I have never seen one of those structures called a sectional dock; but if I have a right understanding of them, they are built in sections which are separate; and consequently sections that are capable of being used separately. I think that it will turn out, in the end, that here is dock enough to be divided in such a way that one portion of it can be appropriated to the civil marine, and the other portion be appropriated to the use of the Government, and that both branches of the service can be accommodated by it—the Government prescribing the terms upon which the portion devoted to the civil marine shall be employed. I do not think there is any very great difficulty in prescribing terms that shall save the public from imposition—for there are other modes of repairing vessels which can be resorted to, which are well known and understood, and which generally are resorted to, if very extravagant terms are demanded for the use of docks. If extravagant terms are demanded, of course vessels, unless there is need of great haste, will go to the old mode of repairing. But, I see no difficulty, if I understand and comprehend this structure, in making something like the arrangement which I suggest—an arrangement which shall both accommodate the Government and the civil marine.

Now, I suppose it is very desirable for the civil marine that this dock should be brought into operation. It is very convenient for repairs, because it hastens that operation very much. A Senator suggests that it cannot be used without a pier. That there is a great deal of inconvenience in using it without a pier I take to be true; but I take it not to be true that it cannot be used without a pier. I take it that these sections may be taken into deep water, where they can be carried under a ship, and, if proper care and proper skill is exercised, a vessel may be raised and carried into dock without a pier. A pier, I admit, is very convenient; but the very operation I have described is now going on, I understand, at Portsmouth.

Mr. HALE. The dock at Portsmouth is a floating, and not a sectional dock.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman says that dock is a floating dock. I had supposed it was a sectional one. But whether it is a sectional dock or not, a ship of the line can be taken into it without a pier; and that operation, I understand, is now going on, or has been performed, at Portsmouth. I believe it has been done.

I take it, then, that there is no insuperable obstacle to the use of this dock in the way which I have suggested. But if the Senator from California does not think that this is necessary for the port of San Francisco, I should be disinclined to thrust it upon them. It seems to me, however, that if you clothe the Secretary of the Navy with power to enter into the contract or not, as he sees fit, and to enter into one which shall cover and protect properly all interests, there can be no particular objection whether it is done now or on some other occasion; but the sooner it is done it seems to me the better.

There are, undoubtedly, many vessels visiting California that would be benefited by this dock. There are many vessels belonging there that would be greatly benefited by it. There is a large steam marine plying between California and Panama, and other ports. It is not very convenient to lay down one of these steamers for repairs. It is a difficult job, and the vessel is apt to be injured by the process. Now, if they could have the accommodation of a dock, I have no doubt it would be very useful to them; and very convenient to the public, as it would give great dispatch to the making of repairs.

I have no great anxiety in regard to this measure; but it seems to me reasonable enough to suppose, that the Government may, by a contract, indemnify itself to some extent for the expense of this work. But if, as I said before, the Senator from California does not think it expedient, I should not press the amendment.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is a very easy mode of obviating this difficulty. It is clear that this dock might be put to the uses which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has suggested. In the hands of the contractors, unless guarded, they might put very extravagant terms upon the vessels of the commercial marine, and might forbid their going in. Now, it seems to me, that, if it is provided, that this contract shall be made on terms that shall be advantageous to the interests of the commercial marine, as well as to the interests of the United States, for which the amendment already provides, it would be very well. With this simple addition, the Secretary of the Navy would have the whole power; and then we could hold him responsible.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand that the Senator from Maine has such an amendment as that to offer.

Mr. CASS. I am glad of it. It is idle for us to sit here and regulate all the details with reference to this matter. We cannot understand all the details with regard to the dry-dock in California. Let us refer them to the proper Department to examine all the questions connected with the matter. Let us put the amendment in such a shape that it shall protect, not only the interests of the United States, but also the interests of the commercial marine; and not have the commercial marine imposed upon by extravagant demands.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, by substituting for it the following:

That said dock may be used for the purpose of repairing merchant ships, when not in use by the Government, in such manner, for such compensation, and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine is one which has pressed itself upon my mind, in considering this question, as the true mode of disposing of the subject. I take it for granted that it cannot be the design of any Senator that a lease of Government property should be placed in the hands of private individuals for purposes of private speculation. I will not agree, as one of the members of this body, to part with this property at all; I will not agree to place it in the hands of private individuals to be used for any purpose whatever. Yet I am free to admit, from all I have heard, that it may be very desirable that merchant vessels shall have as free a use of this dock as the exigencies of the merchant service may require. I would, therefore, suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it would be better to accept the proposition of the Senator from Maine as a substitute for his own.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair, on looking at the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, finds that it is an amendment to an amendment. It is an amendment to the amendment already adopted with regard to the sectional dock in California. The Senator from Maine cannot, therefore, offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, for that is already an amendment to an amendment. But if the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania nia should be rejected, it would then be in order for the Senator from Maine to offer his amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. At the suggestion of various friends, I withdraw my amendment and accept that of the Senator from Maine as a substitute for it.

The PRESIDENT. The question will then be on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. RUSK. I dislike to oppose this proposition, but I am one of those unfortunate individuals who do not know everything by instinct. I have to study and reflect before I can come to a conclusion on which I can trust myself. I see no use of precipitancy about this matter; but if this amendment be adopted, it seems to me that it will place a vast deal of power in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy. It will give him the power to prescribe the rules by which this property may be used. My own opinion is, that we had better take time to reflect upon the subject, and adopt some measure by which this power may be taken out of the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, and put upon some principles that may give the merchant marine a fair chance to use this dock. I would give a fair, open opportunity to each; but I do not want to trust too much, in a matter of this sort, to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, it is with great diffidence that I undertake to give an opinion on this subject, but it seems to me that I can no longer allow this debate to go on without expressing my opinion with regard to this matter, and some principles connected with it. I am entirely opposed to these partnerships and speculations between the Government of the United States and private individuals. I do not see where we get the authority to build docks for the purpose of loaning them out, or hiring them out.

In the first place, I do not think it becomes the dignity and character of this Government to do so; and, in the second place, I think this practice is increasing upon us. The dangers into which we are likely to run on account of it are, in my judgment, very great. I have been using my poor influence, since I have been in the Senate, to embarrass the Government of the United States from these private speculations—from all these connections of any kind.

But again: there is no necessity for legislation upon this subject. If we have a dry-dock, or a pier, or any other convenience, for the purpose of repairing the vessels of the United States on the Pacific coast, and if there is no other convenience there by which merchant vessels can be repaired, and a merchant vessel should go into the port where that convenience is, the commanding officer of that port would feel himself under an obligation to permit that vessel to go on the dock and be repaired. This is the universal practice of the Navy; and the officers are commanded to do so. If an American man-of-war meets a merchant vessel in distress, and they can relieve her, they are bound to do so; and all that they ask is, that the actual expenses to which the Government has been put, shall be repaid by the persons so accommodated. Now, why cannot that practice continue without this amendment? There is no reason in the world why there should be such an amendment. If there is any amendment made, I hope we shall make none that will carry with it the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to hire out or lease any part of the public works.

I repeat, sir, that this dock, if constructed in California, will be entirely at the service of the merchant marine; because that will be in accordance with the universal practice of the Navy, and their established rules and regulations, namely, to afford every facility to every citizen of the United States that it is within their power to afford. I therefore hold that legislation is not necessary for the purpose of affording the merchant marine in California the advantages of any dock the Government may see fit to build there.

Mr. BRODHEAD called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, if it has been the practice of the Government to suffer the merchant marine to use these dry-docks whenever application is made, and whenever they are not necessarily used by the Navy, there would, as the honorable Senator from New Jersey says, be no necessity for this provision. But I do not believe that has been the practice to such an extent as would enable the merchant marine, floating on the Pacific ocean, to use this dry-dock, unless there was some legislation on the subject. As a general principle, I am opposed, as a matter of course, to all copartnership between the Government and individuals. It was because I was opposed to interfering with the business of private individuals, that I was constrained to vote against the appropriation for the Collins line. There was a copartnership. There was an established concern, with a capital stock of some $800,000 paid in by the Government of the United States. That copartnership met with favor from the Senator from New Jersey. It seems, then, that he has become latterly a convert to this doctrine of abstaining from intermeddling with the affairs of private individuals, and forming copartnerships between the Government and private citizens.

I think that legislation upon this subject is necessary, and that the amendment, as it now stands, is in a shape where the power cannot be abused. We have the standing and reputation of the Secretary of the Navy to assure us that this dry-dock, when not necessary for the use of the Government, will be used for the accommodation of the merchant marine floating upon the Pacific ocean. That is all that we desire. We intrust this power to the Secretary of the Navy. He may abuse it, it is true, as all human power is oftentimes abused. It would, however, be an argument against all Governments. You are compelled to trust those who have been selected by the people for the discharge of these executive duties. It is for that reason I prefer that the amendment in its present shape should be adopted, in order that we may have the security which the reputation and the standing of the Secretary of the Navy can give, that that power shall be exercised, not only to protect the interests of the Government of the United States, but also to accommodate all the vessels that may be found floating upon that ocean.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the suggestions thrown out by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, are strictly correct. I doubt whether any instance can be found of the controller of a naval dry-dock, sectional floating dock, or other contrivance for the repair of vessels, refusing the use of the dock to a private vessel when not incompatible with the public service. The fact is, however, that on the Atlantic coast such a request will rarely ever be made, because nearly every considerable port of the United States has its dock. We have some five public docks on the coast of the Atlantic; and, if I am not misinformed, there are in the Atlantic cities an infinite number of private docks always open to the merchant marine. Undoubtedly on the Pacific coast, where no private docks exist, if the officer controlling the Government dry-dock should refuse it, when not needed for the public service, to the merchant marine, he would meet with the reprobation of the Secretary of the Navy. I do not, therefore, deem legislation at this moment essential.

While I am up, I would ask the Senator from Maine whether, if this amendment be insisted upon, he had not better insert a provision controlling the Secretary of the Navy as to the time for which he shall lease this dock? It would be better, I think, to control the Secretary of the Navy as to the duration of the lease; or is he to have, in addition to the controlling power which the amendment confers upon him, a right to lease the dock throughout its entire existence?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator will be very much troubled to find any power given in the amendment which I have offered which will authorize the Secretary of the Navy to lease this dock to anybody for any length of time. It was offered for the sole purpose of obviating the objection which has been alluded to. I want the Government to go into copartnership with nobody. This amendment proposes simply to do by law what the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Florida say is now done without law. Besides that, I do not agree with the assertion of those gentlemen with regard to the use of these docks for private vessels when they are not needed for public purposes. There may be cases—extraordinary ones—in which they have been allowed to be used for private purposes; but if there have been such cases they are exceptions. The real rule is, as I understand it, that the public docks are to be used for mercantile purposes on no occasion. But the amendment, admitting the assertion to be true, only provides that, what the Senators say is now done without law, shall be done by virtue of law and not in violation of law.

The Senator from New Jersey is mistaken, if he supposes that these docks are to be constructed for the purpose of leasing them to merchants; or that they are to be constructed for the purposes of the merchant service. It is not so. They are built for the Government, but while not in the use of the Government, in an extraordinary state of circumstances, with the great amount of commerce on that coast, and with no facilities for repairing vessels, it is proposed to do there, by law, what both the Senators from New Jersey and Florida assert is done without law, although I do not understand that it is so.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, when this, or a similar amendment was proposed before, I gave it as my opinion, that it was the commencement of a new principle. I am one of those who desire, in my legislative action, to avoid making contracts on the part of the General Government; for I know that, whenever the Government of the United States goes in as a contractor, all the losses invariably fall upon it. What are we proposing to do now? To give ourselves the character of a lessor, with a view to lease the public property to individuals, and thereby, to the extent of the contract which we make with the lessee, transferring the public property to the control of that lessee, subject to the contract. And if the contract turns out to be disadvantageous or injurious to the lessee, any losses that will be sustained, I venture to say, will be saddled upon the Government; and for this purpose, our public property is to be controlled by individuals. Now, this is said to be for the benefit of the mercantile interest—for the benefit of the merchant marine. Who are to be the owners, the controllers, and the lessees of this property? Individuals?

Mr. WELLER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to read the amendment? He certainly misapprehends its whole character. It does not propose to lease the dry-dock at all.

Mr. DAWSON. What does it propose?

Mr. WELLER. Its provisions are:

“That said dock may be used for the purpose of repairing merchant ships, when not in use by the Government, in such manner, for such compensation, and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.”

Mr. DAWSON. Is not that equivalent to leasing it?

Mr. WELLER. Do you call that leasing it?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly; because if this is to be used for private purposes, under such terms and stipulations as the Secretary of the Navy may choose, the individual who enters into the contract will have rights given to him by it, and will have the possession and control of the property. I do not desire to oppose this finally. All that I desire is, that we should take time. The dock is not yet there; it has yet to be completed. Let the Secretary of the Navy inquire into the state and condition of things there, and present to Congress a scheme accompanied by facts, so that we may comprehend the condition of things there, and then we can pass a law to meet whatever emergency may arise. But now, before the dock is erected, are we to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to put it at the command of individuals who may desire to use it for their vessels? The great injury which is to result from it is this: The use of this public dock for private purposes will prevent the erection of private docks, and the lessee or the contractor, who will have possession of the public docks, will demand of those who desire improvements and repairs upon their vessels just what he pleases. It destroys all competition, and it will grow into this result: that the Government will be the builder of all the docks for public and private purposes hereafter. And so soon as this dock shall be placed without the control of the Government in this way, the dock at Kittery, the one at Philadelphia, and the one at Pensacola will all follow in the same train, and individuals will go there—ship-builders, ship-repairers—and get possession of the Government property. I prefer that this proposition should be withdrawn, for I concur most thoroughly with the honorable Senator from New Jersey, whose experience and observation should have great influence on this subject. Let it be passed over, at least for the present, and let it be brought up when the general naval appropriation bill shall be before us, when we shall have time to consider, and so hear something more upon the subject. This is what I desire. Upon one great principle, which controls me, that this Government should enter into no such contract, I want to see the time when the Government shall pay down the dollars whenever it purchases anything. I want the Government to make none of your running contracts—none of those arrangements in relation to the public property.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it seems to me, that the whole argument amounts to this: whether this Government will act the part of the dog in the manger in this dock business. The whole amount of the amendment is, that while we do not want to use this dock, we will allow our merchants to use it. And the only question is, whether that use shall be at the discretion of the officer in control of the station, subject to his whim and caprice, or whether it shall be under a set of regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy in pursuance of law. That is the whole dispute. It seems to me that so plain a question cannot need much elaboration before the Senate.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, this, to my mind, is not quite so small a matter as some Senators suppose. I think there is a great principle which Senators must remember may grow out of this, and be established by it. Senators say that they want to do now, by law, what they have been doing without law. They must admit, then, that the public officers in the public service of the United States, who have command of the public ships and public dock-yards, will hereafter be prohibited from rendering aid to the mercantile marine or to a vessel in distress; because, they say here, we must have a law to do it. If you must have a law to permit a merchant vessel in San Francisco to go into the public dock, you must have a law authorizing a man-of-war to give a barrel of flour, or a barrel of pork, to a vessel in distress. I say the principle is established, and has been practiced since the foundation of the Government, that whenever a public officer meets a private citizen in distress, he is authorized to give to that private individual all the aid he can, simply requiring from that citizen a remuneration for the actual expense he has been put to; and if he were to call upon that individual to pay more, he would be scouted by every public man. This Government was not intended for any such purpose. In my judgment, if, through the agency of the public officers, or the public works, you can benefit a citizen, you should benefit him, only requiring him to pay the actual expenditures incurred by the benefit. You should not degrade this Government by asking or requiring your officers to call upon the citizen to pay for any service you happen to render to an unfortunate man.

Then, again, it does appear to me, that if anything is done upon the subject, it should be with more caution. We should take, as my honorable friend from Georgia says, more time. You are undertaking to throw your legislation over a very wide field, and you must take time to do it. If, therefore, you do anything, I hope that this matter will be postponed until the Senate can have an opportunity to look into it. But, I repeat that, in my judgment, no legislation is necessary.

I have one word to say to my friend from California, who, with an air of triumph, that does not seem to me to be at all justified by the argument he made out, seemed to think that he not only accused, but convicted me of great inconsistency; because, said he, "you went for the Collins line, and now you will not go for this." Well, sir, I abstained from participating in the debate on that amendment before the Senate, not that I had not views which I wanted to express, but because I hoped every speech which I heard would have been the last. I could not conceive how a simple proposition to pay a mail carrier an additional compensation, could have given rise to such an exciting and extended debate. If the gentleman from California, and those who made the onslaught upon that proposition, submitted by the Naval Committee, chose to go into great questions of Government, which had nothing to do with it, it is their fault, not mine. That recommendation of the Naval Committee was not, in my judgment, treated by those gentlemen with the respect and confidence it deserved. That committee were not asked, the duties imposed upon them did not require that they should undertake to examine into the authority under which that contract was made. They were not required to go and ask how much money the steamers of the Cunard line cost. They were not called upon to go and inquire whether the Government made money or lost by the postage. The matter referred to that committee was simply this: "Will you give a few thousand dollars more to a mail carrier, or will you allow the mails to be stopped?" That was the question, and the proper question before the Senate, and the only question, Senators will permit me to say, with due deference to them, that ought to have been debated in the Senate. And now, I should like to know, taking that view of the subject, how the Senator from California can come here and hold me responsible to principles which were entirely irrelevant to the question before the committee and for which I voted? How can he undertake to tell me, that I went for a partnership? I say, I went for no such thing. That partnership had been formed and consummated by a previous Congress. The deed had been done. The Naval Committee did all they could to disembarass themselves. They turned them all out of the committee as soon as they could, and I believe at my instance. I want my friend from California, therefore, to understand, that I voted simply to give a mail contractor an additional price—not to establish a principle. The principle was established by a previous Congress. The contracts were made by the authority of the Government, and this Senate, permit me to say, had no authority whatever to look beyond those contracts. It could neither annul, modify, nor alter them. We must take them as they were; and the only question, therefore, that was before the Senate, and the only question I voted upon, was whether we would give the contractors $5,000 or $6,000 more a trip, or run the risk of losing the benefit of the transportation of the mail by these means.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into the discussion of the merits of the Collins line appropriation.

The PRESIDENT. It will not be in order to do so.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish, however, to reply in a single word to the Senator from New Jersey. He lays it down as a principle to govern the action of this body, that we had no right, and have no right, to look behind contracts even to extend or modify them in any particular whatever.

Mr. STOCKTON. Not without the consent of the parties.

Mr. BORLAND. Why, here are the proprietors of the Collins line, and they came forward and declared to the Senate of the United States that they had modified the contract; that they had violated it in almost every particular, and yet they called upon Congress to modify and change, or materially alter it in another. That is all that I have to say.

The PRESIDENT. The appropriation for the Collins line is not now under discussion.

Mr. WELLER. Certainly, I am not disposed to discuss that question; but I am rejoiced that I made allusion to it, and therefore provoked a most eloquent speech from my friend from New Jersey; and I only regret that there was not a more numerous audience present to have listened to his display. I did not say that the Senator was inconsistent in supporting an appropriation for the Collins line, and in not supporting this proposition; but I said that there was an inconsistency in his argument. The proposition now under consideration is simply one to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to permit the merchant marine to use this dock whenever it shall not be necessary for the use of the Government—whenever it shall not be necessary for our vessels of war. That is all. There is no partnership there. Whether there be or be not a partnership between this Government and Collins in the running of his line of steamers, I shall not undertake to discuss, because that would not now be in order.

The Senator said a short time ago, before he sat down, that the reason he voted for that was, because the partnership had been formed long ago. There was an admission that there was a partnership, and that he had voted to continue the partnership, and yet he was all the time affirming that it was a fixed principle in his mind never to have the Government go into partnership with private individuals.

Mr. STOCKTON. How could you get rid of that contract?

Mr. WELLER. I will tell the Senator how he could have got rid of it. They told us that unless we gave them more than $850,000 a year, they would take their steamers off, or in other words, they would abandon their contract. If the Senator was opposed to partnerships between the Government and private individuals, why did he not take these men at their word, and suffer them to discontinue their line of steamers? The remarks of the honorable gentleman from New Jersey, in regard to the discussion of that subject, did not apply to me. I did not open my mouth about that matter. I was perfectly satisfied with recording my vote against that which I considered wrong in principle, and calculated in practice to lead to most disastrous results.

I ask the Senator from New Jersey, if it be true, as he says, that all these dry docks are now, under the orders of the officers, permitted to be used for the purpose of repairing vessels, what can be the objection to the amendment? It is simply declaring that that hereafter shall be legal which heretofore may have been considered, by some, illegal. That is all we ask for. It is simply that that dry-dock shall be permitted to be used by your merchant vessels whenever it is not necessary for your naval purposes. And what is the objection to that? He says we have always done that heretofore. Then adopt the amendment, and it will be done hereafter, and it will be done upon such terms and conditions as the head of the Department having charge of the naval affairs of your Government may choose to prescribe. Sir, I did not intend to have said a word; but this is a question which concerns a part of the State which I represent. I therefore was anxious that there should be some arrangement by which merchant vessels should be repaired on that coast. It has been my practice never to open my mouth in the Senate, and I intend to adhere to that for some time, unless upon a question in which my constituents are directly interested.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey says the deed is done in relation to the Collins line. Well, then, I submit to his judgment, whether it is not done here? If he had listened to the remarks of the honorable Senator from North Carolina, he would have learned that the Secretary of the Navy, by the law as it stands, claims to have the power to exercise this very authority. Now, sir, it will be within your recollection, and within that of many other gentlemen here, that one of the principal arguments when this law was passed, which was pressed upon the Senate, was, that it was to be for the benefit of the mercantile marine.

Mr. MANGUM. I rise to a point of order. I do it the more freely, because I raise it upon a friend on my own side of the Chamber, who sits near me. It is said somewhere, that there should be an end to all earthly things. I hope there is a period approaching when there will be an end of the discussion of this deficiency bill—and the point of order which I raise is, that this discussion is wholly irrelevant to the amendment under consideration, for we have passed upon the amendment proposing an appropriation for the Collins line.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts is not discussing that question at all. He is confining himself to the amendment.

Mr. MANGUM. I understood him to be repelling an argument brought forward by the Senator from New Jersey, in relation to the Collins line.

The PRESIDENT. That is passed by. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MANGUM. I understood that the Senator from Massachusetts was repelling an argument offered by the Senator from New Jersey, having relation to the Collins line; but as it seems I am mistaken, I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend from North Carolina labors under some misapprehension, in regard to the drift of my argument. I am sorry that I am not able to make it a little more intelligible. But I was saying, that when this law, authorizing the construction of this dry-dock was passed, the argument was pressed very earnestly upon the Senate, that one of its principal uses would be for the civil marine, and perhaps that argument was more influential in carrying the bill than any other; for the Government had very few ships in the Pacific ocean that required repairs there. The clause to which allusion has been made by my friend from Maine, was ingrafted upon that bill, and the power now exists, at this moment, by virtue of that law, to do just precisely what this amendment proposes to carry out a little more in detail. That power, that authority, is now claimed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. STOCKTON. I was not aware of that fact. I therefore withdraw my opposition to the amendment, because this will be the best thing that can be done to remedy the matter. I was not aware of the existing law.

Mr. DAVIS. I was about to add, that I felt some objection to it at the time it was passed. I think now that we are committed to this policy, and being committed to it, we are bound in good faith to carry it out; and that is the reason I shall vote for the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment offered by Mr. HAMLIN, resulted—yeas 35, nays 5, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Borland, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Brooke, Cass, Chase, Cooper, Davis, De Sausure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Downs, Felch, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, King, Miller, Norris, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Sumner, Upham, Wade, and Weller—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Dawson, Mangum, and Rusk—5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. I have an amendment which I wish to offer. It is one which I offered in Committee of the Whole, early in the discussion of this bill, and at the suggestion of Senators I then withdrew it temporarily. I now renew the amendment. It is to insert:

That the selection of newspapers for the publication of the laws of the United States shall, after the passage of this act, be made by the Secretary of State, as follows: The number selected shall be one in each Congressional district in each State, one in each Territory, and four in the District of Columbia. And the preference shall be given, in all cases, to the papers which, at the time of selection, shall have in the States or Territories respectively in which they are printed, the largest number of weekly subscribers; and to those in the District of Columbia which shall have at the time of selection, the largest number of weekly subscribers in the United States; the amount of such number of subscribers to be ascertained by the affidavit of the publishers respectively, and by such additional evidence as may be requisite to establish the facts in each case to the satisfaction of the postmaster at whose office such papers respectively commence their circulation.

And be it further enacted, That when it shall be necessary to publish any public advertisements, except advertisements of letters in any State, they shall be published in the two papers in said State having the largest number of subscribers, as provided in the preceding section of this act, for the publication of the laws, the amount of circulation to be ascertained in the same manner as provided in the preceding section aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, That said public advertisements shall be published in the newspapers having the publication of the laws as aforesaid in the District of Columbia, and in the papers having the publication of said laws in the Territories, when and as often as may be deemed necessary.

And be it further enacted, That as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and at the beginning of the first session of every succeeding Congress, a copy of the list of newspapers selected, according to the terms of this act, for the publication of the laws of the United States, shall be communicated by the Secretary of State to the heads of the several Executive Departments, and to the Senate and House of Representatives respectively.

And be it further enacted, That the President shall cause to be communicated to the Senate and House of Representatives annually a list of all newspapers that shall have published by authority, during the next preceding year, any advertisement as aforesaid, with the names of the publishers, the place of publication, the nature of the work performed, and the amount paid to each publisher.

And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and they are hereby, repealed.

The Senate will recollect that at a very early period of the debate I withdrew it at the suggestion of Senators, that it would be better to offer it at a later period.

Mr. BADGER. It can be offered on someone of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask my friend from Arkansas if it would not satisfy him better to have this inserted in one of the general appropriation bills? I hope he will withdraw the amendment. We are anxious to order the bill to its third reading to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. This cannot be called a deficiency, but it regulates the use of an appropriation, which is made in the bill to supply a deficiency.

Mr. HALE. It is a sufficiency, and we will go for it by-and-by.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not raise any question of order; but I would suggest to my friend from Arkansas that it would be better to bring this in in one of the general appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator can offer it to any of these bills.

Mr. HUNTER. That being the case, I hope he will now withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I am not particularly desirous to press the amendment now, but there are other Senators who desire particularly that I should do so. I offer it not only in accordance with what I believe to be right, but because I know it is desired and expected by others, at whose suggestion I withdrew it originally. I renew it in accordance with the promise I then made; and it is simply for the Senate to say whether they will adopt it or not.

Mr. MANGUM. I believe this amendment was withdrawn on a former occasion principally at my suggestion. I have turned my attention somewhat to it, and I think that with some modifications, it is a measure that ought to be adopted. If it would not weary the Senate with sitting too long, I would prefer that it should be done now. But, there being plenty of time, I am willing, as far as I am concerned, not to stand in the way of the withdrawal of the amendment, if other gentlemen desire its withdrawal. I think, however, its object is desirable, and, with a few modifications, the amendment will meet with my approbation.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator from North Carolina is right in saying that it was mainly at his suggestion that I withdrew the proposition before; and, with his consent now, I will withdraw it again.

No further amendment being offered, the amendments which were adopted were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

RAILROADS IN MISSOURI.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. HAYS, its Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate, "granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public land, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State," with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NAUTICAL ALMANAC.

Mr. HALE. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up a resolution of inquiry, which I laid on the table some time since, in regard to the Nautical Almanac, and which the honorable Senator from North Carolina, in his remarks to-day, supposed had been passed. It is a simple resolution, calling for information which we want in order to guide our action. I move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up that resolution.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 13, nays 23.

On motion, the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 28, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being Senate bill No. 3, granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Hannibal to St. Joseph, in said State. A motion is pending to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, upon which the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. WALSH. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Commerce. It is simply to admit a vessel to registry which is lying in the harbor at Baltimore, almost to the destruction of the interest of a poor man.

Mr. HALL. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to modify his motion, so that it shall be disposed of before the commencement of the morning hour.

Mr. WALSH. I will so modify it.

Mr. McMULLIN. Before the House proceed to any business, I rise to inquire whether the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday is as full as it should be. I desire to inquire of the Speaker whether it is usual, when a motion is submitted to the House asking leave to introduce a bill of which previous notice had been given, and objection is made, as was the case yesterday, in regard to the mileage bill, for such motion to appear on the Journal?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Such motions never appear upon the Journal, for the reason—and the gentleman will see the point—that it was not in order for the gentleman to make the motion. It was simply an appeal to the House.

Mr. McMULLIN. Very well. I only asked for my own information.

There being no objection,

Mr. WALSH then, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce, a bill to change the name of an American-built vessel, named Amelia, and to grant a register in her new name, which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read through by the Clerk, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and having been engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

On motion by Mr. FLORENCE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Sarah Peacock, praying for remuneration from the United States for losses sustained in the Seminole war of 1836, be withdrawn from the files of the House and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN. Some weeks ago a bill was introduced from the Committee on Public Lands in regard to a deficiency in the public lands heretofore granted to the State of Indiana, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House. A motion was made to reconsider that vote on the reference. I now desire to know whether that motion will take precedence, as the first business in order, if it be called up?

The SPEAKER. Not until the morning hour has expired, it being excluded by the special order until that time.

MISSOURI RAILROAD BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question now before the House is upon seconding the demand for the previous question upon the motion to recommit Senate bill No. 43—the Missouri railroad bill—to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALL. I desire to withdraw the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether it is competent for the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw the motion to recommit during the pendency of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HIBBARD. The previous question was called by the gentleman from Missouri upon his motion to recommit, and the fact of the gentleman having withdrawn the motion to recommit, carries with it the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether the gentleman from Missouri could withdraw the motion to recommit, unless he first withdrew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire if, when the gentleman from Missouri withdrew the motion to recommit, the Chair did not state that the motion was withdrawn, and recognize the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD?] I submit that he could not withdraw it regularly while the demand for the previous question was pending; but that when it was withdrawn, it carried with it the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman from Tennessee is correct, except in this: The Chair did not state that the gentleman from Missouri had the right to withdraw the motion to recommit; but, on the contrary, he was stating to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] that the gentleman had no such right until he had withdrawn the demand for the previous question, when he was interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Suppose the gentleman from Missouri had moved to recommit, and suppose I had demanded the previous question, my demand is not upon his motion to recommit simply, but upon the whole bill. Now, if the gentleman withdraws the motion to recommit, that does not affect my demand for the previous question, but it will still cover all that is left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moved to recommit the bill, and upon that motion demanded the previous question. The Chair doubts whether he can withdraw the motion to recommit while the previous question is pending.

Mr. STEPHENS. He had a perfect right to withdraw his motion, and the previous question would still remain upon the passage of the bill. The previous question might have been called by any other person, in which case it would not have been affected by the gentleman withdrawing his motion to recommit. Now, the fact that he made the demand for the previous question himself makes no difference. The operation of the previous question is the same, and it will still remain if the motion to recommit be withdrawn.

Mr. HALL. If the demand for the previous question had been seconded, of course I could not withdraw the motion to recommit; but it had not been seconded, and I think I had the right to withdraw the motion.

Mr. HIBBARD. I submit that the gentleman from Missouri having made both the motion to recommit, and the demand for the previous question, that it is not competent for him to withdraw the motion to commit unless he first withdrew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. STEPHENS. If the Chair will indulge me for one moment, I will give the views I presented in another light.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia contend that the gentleman from New Hampshire has the right to make a motion to recommit after the previous question has been demanded?

Mr. STEPHENS. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Yet he would contend that he has the right to withdraw that motion, though it was covered by the previous question?

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman upon that point.

Mr. STEPHENS. This is the view I was about to present: Suppose a proposition is pending, and a motion to amend that proposition be made, and the previous question is then demanded, the gentleman moving the amendment has certainly the right to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri insist upon withdrawing the motion to recommit?

Mr. HALL. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman has not the right to withdraw it so long as the demand for the previous question is pending.

Mr. HALL. Have I the right to withdraw the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. HALL. Would I then have the right to withdraw the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. Without doubt.

Mr. HALL. Can I then renew the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman can get the floor for that purpose.

Mr. HIBBARD. I believe I am entitled to the floor, having been recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw the motion to recommit. I thereupon rose and was recognized by the Chair. I made a motion to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman still insists upon his right to withdraw the motion, and does withdraw it, and with it the demand for the previous question; for if the Chair please, the withdrawal of the motion to recommit carries with it the demand for the previous question. I therefore insist that I am now entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire will recollect that the Chair has decided that during the pendency of the demand for the previous question, the gentleman has no right to withdraw the motion to commit.

Mr. HIBBARD. Yes, sir. But I submit that when the gentleman withdrew his motion to recommit, he withdrew the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from New Hampshire, for the gentleman from Missouri certainly did not withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. HIBBARD. I submit again, that after the gentleman had withdrawn his demand for the previous question, I rose and the floor was awarded to me, and now that he has withdrawn that demand, with his motion to recommit, that I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not withdraw the demand for the previous question at all.

Mr. HIBBARD. I so understood him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand him. The gentleman propounded the question to the Chair, whether he could withdraw it, but did not withdraw it, and it is now pending. The Chair, therefore, decides that no debate is in order.

Mr. HIBBARD. If the gentleman withdraws the demand for the previous question, can I claim the floor for the purpose of referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair must decide the right of each gentleman to the floor as the exigency arises. He will make no promise to any one.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. HALL. I understand the Chair to recognize me as having the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HIBBARD. I now claim the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has not yet yielded.

Mr. HALL. I also withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. HIBBARD. I now claim the floor.

The SPEAKER. There can be no question that the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to the floor to make a speech if he desires. Having withdrawn the demand for the previous question, and the motion to recommit, he still retains the floor to debate the proposition. If gentlemen will reflect for one moment, there can be no other opinion in relation to it. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor to make a speech if he desires it.

Mr. HALL. I only wish to say that I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from New Hampshire was not willing that we should have a direct vote upon the passage of this bill. I move the previous question, and call for tellers on the second.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HALL, and HARRIS of Tennessee, were appointed; and the question being taken, the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 66.

So the previous question received a second.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay this bill upon the table. I hope it will be done, and that it will be kept there until the convention shall have acted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 104; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bennett, Briggs, Breckinridge, Buell, Caldwell, Caskie, Chastain, Churchill, Clingman, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Dockery, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Thomas J. F. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Townshend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, and Williams—104.

So the bill was not laid upon the table.

[Ifere a message was received from the Senate by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed "An act to enable the Government to deepen the passes of the Mississippi."]

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Shall the main question be put?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 74; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Charles Allen, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bibbhaas, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. NAYS.—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, John H. Seymour, Skelton, Benj. Stanton, Sutherland, Wallace, Welch, Wildrick, and Woodward—74.

So the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. OUTLAW, when his name was called, said: I have paired off upon this question with Mr. PORTER; otherwise I should vote against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POLK. I would inquire, if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. BOCOCK. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the repetition of that proposition without any change in the action of the House upon the bill, is scarcely in order.

Mr. BOCOCK. Has the previous question been moved and sustained upon the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BOCOCK. Is a call of the House in order now?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

ingly rose. He then called for the negative, and none rose.

Mr. STANLY. I did not hear the Chair call; but I was up.

Mr. FLORENCE. I was up, also, in the negative. [A laugh.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to having a recount?

Mr. FULLER. I object; it was a fair vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then decides that the committee have agreed to rise.

Mr. STANLY. Several of us stood up and demanded a count on the negative side.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have clearly decided to rise.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1853, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. STANLY. Is it in order to amend the report of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. STANLY. Suppose the report of the chairman is disputed?

The SPEAKER. According to practice, the House can only know the report made by the chairman.

Mr. STANLY. I state the fact that there were only fourteen who rose in the affirmative. A count in the negative was demanded, the chairman said he did not hear it, and he did not put it. I say there was a majority against rising.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut. If the gentleman will be good enough to yield. The gentleman did not understand the precise statement of the chairman of the committee. The affirmative were called to rise, and they did rise, and were counted. After that the chairman called on the negative to rise, and he was under the impression no one rose. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] said that he did rise.

Mr. FLORENCE. I did rise, and voted in the negative.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I did not notice the gentleman, but I think there were no others that rose. The Chair distinctly announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. STANLY. I called for the division myself.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I was close at the Clerk's desk—

The SPEAKER. Any question arising as to the report of the chairman must be confined strictly to the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. STANLY. A division now, Mr. Speaker, if you please. [Laughter.]

The question was then put on the motion to adjourn, and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 20, noes 10.

Mr. STANLY. It is seen that a Democratic Congress can do nothing at the end of a session. [Laughter.]

The House was adjourned accordingly till tomorrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. COTTMAN: The petition of John Cullen, Edward Long, John Dennis, and 80 others, citizens of the United States, praying Congress to pass an act to provide for placing buoys in Pocumuck Sound, and in Chessonessex Harbor, in the State of Virginia.

By Mr. BRENTON: The petition of citizens of Indiana and Ohio, asking the right of way and grant of public lands for the construction of a railroad from Toledo, Ohio, via Fort Wayne, Logansport, Delphi, and Lafayette, in Indiana, to Springfield, in Illinois.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 29, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STUART. I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House, before proceeding to the business of the morning hour, to take up and dispose of the territorial business now on the Speaker's table. It is highly important it should be disposed of at an early day in order that it may be passed in the other House.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think unanimous consent should be granted for that purpose, and hope that it will.

Objection was made.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Public Lands, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were ordered to lie on the table, viz:

The petition of James W. Marshall, of California, praying Congress for a grant of land in consideration of his services to the country for having made the first discovery of gold in California in 1847;

The memorial of the defenders of Baltimore, praying for a further grant of land in consideration of their services;

The petition of Peter Lane, praying for a grant of land for services rendered during the war with Great Britain;

The petition of Hannah Obar, praying for bounty land on account of the services of her father, Solomon Nichols, a soldier during the war of 1812;

The resolution of instruction relating to the allowing of bounty land to certain companies of volunteers of South Carolina, and also to other volunteers engaged in the public service.

Also, a bill granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Milwaukee, on Saginaw river, to Grand Traverse bay, thence to the Straits of Mackinaw; and

Also, bill No. 64, to amend an act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1851."

Mr. FLORENCE. Will it be in order to move the recommittal of the report just made, relating to the granting of bounty lands to soldiers of the war of 1812, to the Committee on Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order. It would have been in order before it was disposed of.

SALINE LANDS IN INDIANA.

Mr. HALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana in relation to the saline lands in that State, to report "A bill to enable the Legislature of the State of Indiana to dispose of the unsold saline lands in the said State."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HALL. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] desires that the bill shall be put on its passage; and that he may make the motion, I yield him the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. These saline lands are lying idle, of no profit to the State of Indiana, or any one else. It is only asked that power be granted by Congress to dispose of them. I hope the House will permit the bill to be now put on its passage. I make that motion.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I think that bill is one of too much importance to be passed by us in this hasty manner. It really changes our land system, and is the commencement of a new era in the mode of disposing of the public lands, so far as the price is concerned. If the gentleman shall be gratified in this, the next move will be to have the price of the public lands graduated in such a way as to destroy or impair their value. It being a bill of much importance, I desire it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, there to be thoroughly discussed. I do not like this mode of legislating; that is, of having a bill reported from a committee, and, without discussion, and without any examination whatever, passed through the House, become a law, and thereby become a precedent, and oftentimes a very dangerous one. I therefore move that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GORMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut, I am confident, would not submit the motion he has, were he fully advised of the facts of this case. These lands are now subject to sale at $1 25 per acre. They have been in market for the last twenty years, and yet remain unsold—never can nor never will be disposed of for anybody's benefit at the present price. The State of Indiana owns the land, but there is a clause in the original grant providing that the State shall not sell it at a price less than $1 25 per acre. They never will be sold for that price. It is merely asked that Congress will repeal that clause of the original law.

Mr. PHELPS. The act only proposes a modification of the existing law, which is that the State of Indiana may be permitted to sell her lands at less than $1 25 an acre. They have been offered for twenty-five years in the market, but have not found a purchaser.

Mr. CLEVELAND. It is perfectly apparent, and must be, I think, to the whole House, that this bill is interfering with the well-settled policy of the Government. When this grant was made, it was a gift from the General Government to the State, and it was made with this proviso, that she should not reduce the price of her lands, and thereby obtain an advantage over the Government in their sale. This must be apparent to every member of the House.

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman yield the floor to me for a moment? As I understand this matter, the greater part of the lands owned by the Government in the vicinity of these lands have been sold.

Mr. GORMAN. That is a fact.

Mr. PHELPS. The object of providing, in the original grant, that the lands should not be sold for a less price than the Government lands, was to have the sales go on pari passu. That was the object of the existing law. The reason, therefore, for the adoption of the proviso, has passed away.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Even this explanation shows the importance of the House knowing something of what we are to vote upon. I submit to the House that this is not a very correct mode of legislation in regard to a very great interest, like the interest we have in our public lands. This is, I believe, the first effort of this kind which has ever been made in Congress. I am not aware that any State has ever come forward and asked a provision of law to graduate the price of her public lands, which are a gift to her from the Government, until the effort was made this morning.

Mr. SACKETT. If gentlemen will refer to the law making the original grant, we may see exactly what we are doing with these lands.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Every step we take in this matter, shows the importance of the House sustaining the motion I made. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the passage of this bill; and if, upon a fair examination of the matter, it proves to be just and proper, I may vote for it. We have a proposition of this kind, certainly a very important proposition, offered without a report from a committee. We know nothing of it, except from the gentleman, who simply says that it is all right. I repeat again, it is the commencement of a new system of legislation, and one that may be prejudicial to the interests of the Government. Upon finding that it will not be prejudicial, I should have no sort of objection in the world to giving to the State of Indiana the power of disposing of her lands upon her own terms, provided it can be done without injury to any other interest, and especially without injury to the interests of the Government. The House will see that it is one of those questions which ought to be considered before it is acted upon, and if the gentleman will come out with an explanation, which shows that this is a matter interesting the State of Indiana alone, and that no danger whatever will result from the passage of this bill, I will have no objection to it.

Mr. DUNHAM. This matter is easily understood. It is a matter of small importance, and certainly of no importance at all to the General Government. These saline tracts in the State of Indiana are very small in extent, and were granted to that State some years ago. They were reserved by the Government when the lands were first offered at sale, because they were supposed to contain salt springs, and afterwards the General Government released them to the State for an university. They are the poorest lands in the State of Indiana, and cannot be sold for $1 25 an acre. Nobody can be interested in the matter except the State of Indiana, and she is not interested in them in her corporate capacity, because she has granted these lands for educational purposes. The object of the present bill is to enable the State to authorize the sale of these lands, that the proceeds thereof may be applied to educational purposes, for which they were intended. They have been lying idle, some of them, for twenty years.

Some gentlemen seem to suppose that they comprise the reserved section for school purposes. It is not so. They are lands which were first reserved, because they were supposed to contain saline springs.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there a full section reserved where a spring was found?

Mr. DUNHAM. Sometimes only a quarter section; just as the sections were supposed to contain salt springs.

Mr. HALL. I desire to call the attention of the House to the provisions of the original law, by which these saline lands were granted to the State of Indiana. I will ask the Clerk to read the third paragraph of the second section.

The section was then read, as follows:

"That all salt springs within the said territory, and the lands reserved for the use of the same, together with such other lands as may, by the President of the United States, be deemed necessary and proper for working the said salt springs, not exceeding in the whole the quantity contained in thirty-six entire sections, shall be granted to said State, for the use of the people of said State; the same to be used under such terms, conditions, and restrictions, as the Legislature of said State shall direct, provided the said Legislature shall never sell or lease the same for a longer period than ten years at any one time."

Mr. HALL. I will state, now, that all this bill proposes is this: that the State of Indiana shall have the liberty to sell those lands in fee. It is precisely the same thing we did for the State of Iowa two or three weeks ago.

Mr. DUNHAM. It does not seem to be understood by some gentlemen that the General Government has no interest whatever in the lands. It is a matter which concerns the State of Indiana alone, as the General Government has long since released the lands. These lands we may lease from time to time, and we can sell them; but many of them are the poorest lands in the State of Indiana, and cannot be sold for anything like $1 25 per acre.

Mr. CLEVELAND. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] does not seem to understand the bill reported this morning, or I do not understand it. It is unlike the bill from Iowa. It provides that the State may sell them at her own price. That is the object of this bill. Certainly no one will object to the other part of it; but what is it?

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to make another suggestion. The gentleman's remark calls to my mind what I wish to suggest. The General Government can have no interest in keeping up the price of these lands, because they have no lands in their vicinity. The only object of putting in that restriction, in the first place, was to prevent us from underselling the lands of the General Government, and they have no lands which can be undersold now.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? The Government appears to have reserved these lands on account of some salt springs. What has become of those springs?

Mr. DUNHAM. I can explain the reason. It was ascertained that there were no salt springs upon these lands, and then the General Government released them to the State of Indiana. When the surveys were first made, the surveyors found that they were saline lands, which might possibly, as the settlements developed them, prove to be valuable; but as the settlements gathered around them it was found that there was not salt enough to be of any use whatever; and the lands being worthless, the General Government released them to the State. There is no salt manufactured upon any of them, or in the State of Indiana. But, suppose there were, the United States Government could have no interest in these lands, because the title has been released to the State, and it is a matter which concerns the State alone.

Mr. CLEVELAND. If these facts, which are now stated by the gentleman, had been reported by the committee, and that report read to the House, it would have satisfied me. If the lands are in such a condition that they cannot be sold for the prices at which Government lands are sold, and there are no Government lands in the vicinity of these lands which will be injuriously affected by the passage of this bill, then I have no objection to its passage. This very discussion will satisfy the House of the importance of this committee, and other committees, when they submit to the consideration of the House an important act, presenting along with it a report giving the reasons for the conclusion to which they ask the House to come. If these facts are stated correctly—and I doubt not that they are—I shall have no objection to the bill, and will withdraw my motion; but I am opposed to this mode of getting these bills through the House. It is wrong, and the committees ought to furnish us reports.

Mr. LOCKHART. The lands which the provisions of this bill affect are principally, if not all, in the district which I represent. I am, therefore, well acquainted with their situation, and can concur fully in the statement made by my colleague, [Mr. DUNHAM.] I hope, therefore, that the honorable member from Connecticut [Mr. CLEVELAND] will withdraw his opposition to the bill, and let it pass.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I am satisfied with that explanation, and I will withdraw my motion.

IOWA RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. HALL. The Committee on Public Lands have instructed me to report back, with sundry amendments, Senate bill No. 1, entitled "An act 'granting the right of way and making a grant of lands to the State of Iowa, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.'"

The original bill was read through. The following are the first and fifth sections thereof, viz:

Sec. 1. And be it enacted, &c., That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the State of Iowa for the construction of railroads from the city of Dubuque to Keokuck, and from Davenport, on the Mississippi river, in said State, to such point on the Missouri river as may be designated on the authority of said State, which authority shall also fix and determine the rights of each of said railroads; and shall have the right, also, to take necessary materials of earth, stones, timber, &c., for the construction thereof from the public lands of the United States adjacent to said railroads; Provided, That locating the railroads aforesaid, and assigning the limits to the easement, no more land shall be taken from the United States than is necessary for a convenient construction.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if the said railroads shall not be completed within ten years, the said State of Iowa shall be bound to pay to the United States the amount which may be received upon the sale of any part of said lands by said State, the title to the residue of said State remaining valid; and the title to the residue of said lands shall reinvest in the United States, to have and hold the same in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.

The following amendments are proposed by the Committee on Public Lands to Senate bill No. 1.

In the 7th and 8th lines of the first section, strike out the words "on the Mississippi river, in said State, to such point on," and insert the words "and Burlington to."

Strike out the fifth section of said bill, and insert the following:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State shall be disposed of by said State only in manner following, that is to say: that a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections for each of said roads, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of said roads, may be sold; and when the Governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that said twenty continuous miles of either of said roads are completed, then another like quantity of land hereby granted may be sold; and so from time to time, until said roads are completed; and if said roads are not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made, and the land unsold shall revert to the United States.

Add the following section:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That in order to aid in the continuation of said road from Burlington to Lafayette, Indiana, via Peoria, in the State of Illinois, on the most direct and practicable route, all the rights, privileges, and liabilities hereinbefore conferred on the State of Iowa, shall be granted to the States of Illinois and Indiana, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Burlington to Lafayette, on the Wabash river; and that public land to the same extent, in proportion to the length of the road, on the same terms, limitations, and restrictions in every respect, shall be and is hereby granted to said States of Illinois and Indiana respectively.

Mr. HALL. That bill is similar in its terms and provisions to the bill which passed this House yesterday granting lands to Missouri. The Senate bill provides for the construction of two roads in the State of Iowa, one from Davenport, on the Mississippi river, west of the Mississippi river, in the State of Iowa, and the other from Dubuque, upon the Mississippi river, to Keokuck. Both of these roads are roads in which the people of Iowa have manifested deep interest. They have petitioned Congress for many years for a grant of land to aid in the construction of both of these roads, and the Senate of the United States has three several times passed a bill proposing grants of land to aid in the construction of these roads.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Does this amendment provide for an additional road beyond what the bill of the Senate provides?

Mr. HALL. It does.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I want to know whether you have added on another road, and if so, the extent of that road?

Mr. HALL. I am going to speak about that. The Committee on Public Lands have, however, proposed to amend the Senate bill so as to provide for the construction of a railroad from the town of Burlington, in the State of Iowa, and also to the Missouri river, and to continue the road from Burlington to the Missouri river, east to the town of Lafayette, in the State of Indiana. The amount of lands granted by the amendment of the Committee is about 900,000 acres, to wit: about 800,000 for the purpose of constructing the road from Burlington to the Missouri river, and somewhere between 50,000 or 100,000 acres to aid in the construction of the road from Burlington eastward to the city of Lafayette, in Indiana.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I will ask the gentleman if we have not referred a bill for this last road, provided for in your amendment, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. HALL. I do not know that we have referred a bill for the same road to the committee.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Substantially the same.

Mr. HALL. I know one thing, however, that we have referred a bill similar to the Senate bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I do not want this bill to go there too. I know that, and I cannot yield any more. Mr. Speaker, yesterday this House, by its vote, indorsed a principle granting these alternate sections of land. This House granted lands to the State of Missouri, so far as its action is concerned, to aid in the construction of two roads in that State. Now, sir, a sister State similarly situated, asks you to make a similar grant of two roads of equal importance to her and to the nation at large. The question submitted for the consideration of this House is, whether, having yesterday declared that they would give land to one of the Southern States of this Union, they will to-day refuse to give land to a Northern State of the Union? I trust we shall manifest none of that partiality, but show the willingness of this Congress to treat all sections alike, and to do equal and exact justice to all. One road in this bill it is said runs parallel to the Mississippi river. Now, sir, I have not time to discuss that matter much, but I will merely state that I was surprised at the objection made by a Representative of the State of Illinois. Last Congress we made a grant of land for a road running from that State to the Gulf of Mexico, some twelve or fifteen hundred miles long, parallel to the Mississippi river, from one end to the other. That road I believe branches off and runs into the gentleman's own district. The Illinois road terminates at Galena.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The road terminates opposite Dubuque, and not at Galena.

Mr. HALL. Now, sir, as I understand it, the Mississippi river is navigable at almost all times from Dubuque to its mouth, whereas at Dubuque above it is interrupted many months of the year by ice, and at all times more or less by the rapids. Is it right that you should make a grant of land to aid in the construction of roads parallel to the Mississippi where the river is navigable, and refuse to make a road along the Mississippi river where the navigation is difficult?

Mr. FULLER. I want to inquire how many acres of land the Senate bill disposes of, aside from the amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. HALL. According to the best information I have, the Senate bill disposes of 1,800,000 acres.

Mr. FULLER. And this bill, if I understand the gentleman correctly, disposes of about 3,000,000 acres.

Mr. HALL. About 2,600,000.

Mr. FULLER. One more question. The gentleman has spoken of the House establishing a principle by its vote yesterday in reference to a Southern State, and that a similar question is to come up to-day upon a road in a Northern State. With the permission of the gentleman, I want to ask him how far these two roads, one in a Northern State, and the other in a Southern State, are apart?

Mr. HALL. The road proposed in the Senate bill is distant from the north Missouri road about one hundred and thirty or one hundred and fifty miles; somewhere about that. The southern road proposed by the Committee on Public Lands is, I believe, about sixty miles from the Missouri river; but I can say this to the gentleman from Maine, if he does not like the amendments proposed by the Committee on Public Lands, he can vote them down. Now, I demand the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to make one or two inquiries of the gentleman who reported this bill. This is a very important bill—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw his demand for the previous question?

Mr. HALL. What do the friends of the bill say? [Cries of "No!" "No!" "Do not withdraw it."]

Mr. HALL. Very well, I will not withdraw it.

Mr. JONES. Then I say that it is unkind and unjust to force this bill through the House without any discussion.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I desire to make an appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the previous question, for the purpose of enabling me to offer an amendment, which is to strike out the Keokuck and Dubuque road, and insert what I hold in my hand.

Mr. HALL. I cannot do it, sir.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I ask, when the question is taken, that it be taken by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Upon a second we cannot have the yeas and nays, but upon ordering the main question to be put we can.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to have my amendment read for the information of the House.

Mr. HALL. I must object to that.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay the bill and amendments upon the table, and upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put upon Mr. DEAN's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bocoek, Bragg, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chapman, Chastain, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, George T. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dockery, Duncan, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Floyd, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meacham, Millson, Minor, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Peaslee, Polk, Powell, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Russell, Savage, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Taylor, Thurston, Walbridge, Wallace, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Bissell, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Cullom, John G. Davis, Disney, Durkee, Eastman, Ficklin, Florence, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodrich, Gorman, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Hendricks, Henn, Thomas M. Howe, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Penniman, Phelps, Richardson, Sackett, Scurry, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stuart, George W. Thompson, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, George W. Thompson, Towns, Townsend, Walsh, Ward, Addison White, Alexander White, and Williams—68.

So the bill and amendments were laid on the table.

Mr. COBB obtained the floor.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield me the floor for a moment? I rise to make a privileged question.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is already upon the floor to a privileged question.

Mr. HALL. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. JONES. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; and upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, the morning hour having expired.

Mr. JONES. I submit a question whether the gentleman can do that while a privileged motion is pending. The question to reconsider is a privileged question, and I think supersedes the other.

The SPEAKER. The business of the morning hour, the gentleman will recollect, may be at any time suspended for the purpose of submitting the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ORR. Take it by tellers.

Mr. COBB. Well, we will try it first by tellers, and I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. FULLER and COBB were appointed; and the question being taken upon Mr. COBB's motion, the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 79.

Mr. BISSELL. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. STUART. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. St. MARTIN, and FULLER of Maine, were appointed; and the House being counted, tellers reported 40 in the affirmative—deemed to be sufficient.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MACE. I move that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MACE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SACKETT. Is it in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether it is in order until the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table has been disposed of. There being private business upon the Speaker's table, the Chair thinks that the proposition to go to the business upon the Speaker's table should be first put.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I want to know, if we make a final end of this bill to-day, what will become of the speech of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK] which is unfinished? [Laughter.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. COBB's motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, and it was decided in the negative—ayes 72, noes 103; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Bell, Bibbhauss, Bissell, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Carter, Chaudler, Clark, Cobb, Daniel, John G. Davis, Duncan, Duhan, Durkee, Edgerton, Ficklin, Florence, Gaylord, Giddings, Gilmore, Gorman, Green, Hall, Haws, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Howard, John Johnson, Robert W. Thompson, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Welch, Addison White, Alex. White, and Williams—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Allison, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Barrere, Beale, Bennett, Bragg, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Caldwell, Lewis D. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Martin, McDonald, Millson, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Meade, Millson, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Peaslee, Polk, Powell, Rantoul, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Russell, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Taylor, Thurston, Townsend, Walbridge, Watkins, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—103.

So the House refused to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK] to withdraw that motion, so as to allow me to submit another, which, perhaps, will be better.

Mr. CLARK. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BISSELL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DEAN. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DEAN. I thought the motion was to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to say, if that motion does not prevail, I shall move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DANIEL] has the right to make that motion now, and it would take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL].

Mr. DANIEL. Then I make that motion.

Mr. DEAN. Is that motion in order, while a motion to reconsider and lay upon the table is pending?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. DEAN. I understood the Speaker to decide, when the motion was made before, that it was not in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider will be entered upon the Journal, and can be called up at any time the gentleman elects to do it, except when some other privileged question overrides its consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope there will be no objection to taking up some of the territorial bills.

Mr. STANLY. I object, decidedly.

Mr. BISSELL. It is manifest that if we go on in this way—one side trying to kill the bill, and the other trying to save it—we shall do nothing. I move that we go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman if the bill is not dead already?

Mr. DEAN. Is this a debatable question?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. DEAN. Then I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DANIEL] must be first put, under the rules.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House do now adjourn. This is Saturday, and we have worked hard all the week.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ORR. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. DANIEL.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McMULLIN. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 113; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Bissell, Bowne, Briggs, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Clark, Clingman, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Duncan, Duhan, Durkee, Edgerton, Ficklin, Florence, Gentry, Gilmore, Gorman, Green, Hall, Haws, Hendricks, Henn, Howard, Thomas Y. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham

P. Stevens, Stratton, Taylor, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Watkins, Welch, Wells, A. White, and Wildrick—103.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, when his name was called, said: "It is Saturday evening, and two o'clock. I therefore vote aye."

Mr. CLARK. I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole upon the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now pending, and upon it the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole upon the Private Calendar, and it was decided in the negative—ayes 36, nays 109; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, William Appleton, Bell, Bissell, Brenton, Briggs, Clark, Cobb, Daniel, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dockery, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Ficklin, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gaylord, Gorman, Green, Hall, Hendricks, Henn, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, John Appleton, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhaus, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Burrows, E. Stephens, Taylor, Thurston, Townsend, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Woodward—109.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair, before that motion is put, as to the condition of business. If the House should adjourn now, will the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the railroad bill come up on Monday as the unfinished business of this day; or is there any motion that will exclude it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that motion when it is regularly up.

Mr. JONES. Is there any motion now pending?

The SPEAKER. There is a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUELL. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. STANLY. Is it in order to ask the gentlemen to withdraw the motion, and let us have two or three speeches? We have had no chance here.

Messrs. STANLY and HALL were appointed tellers on the yeas and nays, and the House being counted, the tellers reported—ayes 35, nays 84; there being one fifth, the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MACE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I renew the motion.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEBARD. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 79.

So the House, at half-past three o'clock, adjourned until Monday, at twelve o'clock.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. GAMBLE: A petition, signed by Kimber Cleaver and Daniel Miller, Esqs., and 46 others, citizens of Shamokin, Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, asking the imposition of a specific duty upon all imports, sufficiently high to protect domestic manufactures and the protection of the raw material, and a capitation tax of $250 each on all foreigners immigrating to this country, for the protection of American labor.

By Mr. MACE: The petition of William P. Davis and 163 others, citizens of Boone county, Indiana, asking for a grant of land to aid in making a railroad from Springfield, Illinois, to Andersonstown, Indiana, via Danville, Covington, Crawfordville, Lebanon, and Noblesville.

By Mr. JONES, of New York: The petition of Ebenezer Conch, a soldier of the Revolution, and sundry others, for an increase of pension to said Conch.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 31, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the War Department, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 25th instant, transmitting a report of the Chief of the Topographical Engineers, in relation to the cost of improving the navigation of the Tennessee river; which, on motion of Mr. BELL, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. MANGUM. Mr. President, it has been usual for several years past, upon the approach of a National Convention to nominate candidates for President and Vice President, for the Senate to adjourn over, to avoid the necessity of having to pass upon important matters of legislation with a bare quorum present. With a view to avoid that difficulty, I now move that, when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. I had supposed that, with reasonable harmony in the party about to assemble, they might get through with the business about Wednesday; but I will say Thursday.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] will modify his motion, so that the adjournment, for the purpose of taking up the carpets, may take place on Wednesday next to 8 o'clock on Thursday morning, when we can adjourn to Monday next, to give the workmen all the time they may need to put the Chamber in its summer costume. We can thus have until the adjournment on Wednesday to transact business.

Mr. BUTLER. If a good reason can be given for the motion, I shall vote for it. I shall vote for an adjournment for the purpose of cleaning the Senate Chamber. I think there is more occasion for that than for adjourning in reference to the Baltimore Convention. If I should express myself fairly on that subject, I would say that I should dislike to see the Senate yield to any consideration of that kind—to adjourn for any such Convention; but I am perfectly willing to adjourn over for the purpose of cleaning the Hall.

Mr. MANGUM. It has been the practice heretofore to adjourn over on such an occasion.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will not move the adjournment to take place now.

Mr. MANGUM. My motion is, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday.

Mr. GWIN. Would it not be as well to adjourn from Wednesday next?—and, in the meantime, the Senate can proceed with the consideration of the deficiency bill, upon which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] desires to address the Senate.

Mr. CASS. I would ask whether it is necessary to take any order respecting the cleaning of the Chamber? for it is certainly indispensable that that should be done, and I think we can have no better opportunity to do it?

The PRESIDENT. There will be no necessity for any such order if there is an understanding of the kind. If it be the understanding of the Senate that the carpets are to be taken up in the mean time, no order will be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. CASS. I hope it will be so understood; or, if that is not the understanding, a formal motion for that purpose can be made.

Mr. HALE. If that is the reason for adjourning now, we shall want some plausible reason for adjourning when the Whig Convention sits, and I do not know what it will be. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that the morning business will be dispensed with, in order to take up the deficiency bill, that the Senator from Virginia may have an opportunity of addressing the Senate on that subject this morning. I move that the morning business be dispensed with for the purpose of taking up the deficiency bill.

The PRESIDENT. There are several bills on the table.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I beg to suggest that the Senator from Virginia will have an opportunity of addressing the Senate after the morning business is gone through with. It will not take more than half an hour to dispose of it.

Mr. GWIN. It is important that the deficiency bill should be taken up to-day. It is very doubtful whether we can get through with it to-day; therefore, I think it is better to take it up early.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The morning business will not take half an hour.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not ask the Senate to postpone the morning business on my account.

Mr. MASON. I am sure that the Senate, in the present peculiar condition of its members, will not insist upon the morning business. The effect of it will be to throw my colleague, in his reply to a very extended debate, to so late an hour as to give him but a very small opportunity. My colleague does not ask the Senate to postpone the morning business on his account, but I would ask it for him. I think it is due to him. I hope the Senate will agree to the motion of the Senator from California to dispense with the morning business, and take up the deficiency bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the bills upon the table of the President will be taken up, as they can go to the House to-day. If the House votes to adjourn to Thursday, these bills will be thrown into next week, unless we send them over to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. I would suggest that the deficiency bill be not considered at all to-day. It is a very important question; and the Senator from Virginia, as chairman of the Committee on Finance, feels it to be his duty to present his views, no doubt, at considerable length, particularly in reply to the speeches on the other side. We see the Senate is thin, and it is very obvious that it is not particularly disposed to give attention to public business to-day, and will not be for several days to come. I think, therefore, that it would be better that we should postpone the consideration of the deficiency bill until the next meeting of the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I should be very unwilling to delay the deficiency bill; but it is far more disagreeable to me to speak on this question than it can be to any one to hear me. I should like to escape it if I could; but it has been suggested to me by my friends that perhaps I owe it to those whose interests I in part represent to answer some of the positions taken by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE.] I would certainly much rather not speak at all than delay action on the deficiency bill. I hope that bill will be acted on to-day. All that I ask is, that it shall not be postponed. I would rather not speak at all, if by so doing I should delay action beyond to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. I certainly do not insist upon the postponement of this question, with a view to avoid hearing the Senator from Virginia, for no one deems it of more importance than I do that he should speak on this subject, and no one would listen to him with greater satisfaction than myself; but for the purpose of letting him have an opportunity of speaking under circumstances where he would have a better chance to do justice to himself, I suggested that it would be better not to take up the subject to-day; but if the Senator is prepared and willing to proceed to-day, I shall withdraw all opposition to the motion, and listen to him with great satisfaction.

The motion to postpone the prior orders of business was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1852, came up on its third reading.

Mr. HUNTER addressed the Senate at some length, in reply, mainly, to the speech delivered by Mr. PEARCE on the 29th and 30th ultimo, on the governmental administration in California, &c. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. PEARCE again spoke in response to Mr. HUNTER, and a long debate ensued, in which Messrs. DAWSON, WELLER, HOUSTON, GWIN, and BORLAND took part. [A report of the debate is published in the Appendix.] At the close of the debate, the bill was passed.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate supplied the vacancy on the Committee on the Judiciary, occasioned by the resignation of Mr. BERRIEN, by the appointment of Mr. BADGER.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were read a first and second time and referred—the first to the Committee on Public Lands, and the second to the Committee on Commerce:

An act to enable the Legislature of the State of Indiana to dispose of unsold saline lands in said State; and

An act to change the name of the American-built vessel named "Amelia," and to grant a register in her name.

RAILROADS IN MISSOURI.

The PRESIDENT. There is a bill returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Is that the Missouri land bill?

The PRESIDENT. It is a bill granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein.

Mr. COOPER. I hope that bill will not be taken up now.

The PRESIDENT. The bill comes up now as a matter of course.

Mr. COOPER. I move that its further consideration be postponed until Thursday next.

Mr. ATCHISON. I trust not. The amendment which has been made by the House of Representatives is one restricting the grant, and we are willing to accept it. I hope the vote will be taken now.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope the postponement will not be agreed to. I have examined the amendment, and I think it is a proper one. The House of Representatives has improved on the action of the Senate. I trust that, as these lands are being rapidly swept away by land-warrant entries, if the grant is to be to Missouri, it will be made now. As the bill has struggled for a long while, and been for years before Congress, I hope the Senate will now consent to the amendment.

Mr. COOPER. I withdraw the motion which I made to postpone the subject, and move to refer the amendment to the Committee on Public Lands. I can see no reason why there should be such haste in regard to it.

Mr. FELCH. I think that, if the Senator will allow the amendment to be read, he will find that, in order to meet his views, it will be hardly necessary to refer it to that committee. It limits the grant, and I suppose that those who are opposed to granting lands for railroads would certainly not object to an amendment of that description. I see no necessity for referring it to the Committee on Public Lands, and I hope it will not be referred.

Mr. GEYER. I apprehend that the committee will answer no purpose but to produce delay. The bill, as it went from the Senate, contained a fifth section, which permitted the land to be sold at the discretion of the State, with no other limitation than that if the road was not completed within ten years the State was to pay to the General Government all the money received from the lands sold.

The amendment of the House of Representatives provides that only one hundred and twenty sections shall be sold until twenty miles of the road are completed, and so on, taking security all the time that the road, for every twenty miles, shall be made before any more lands shall be sold. Its effect on the Missouri railroads will be, that forty miles, twenty on each, must be constructed before the State can receive a solitary cent from the land.

One reason why I am indisposed to commit this bill is this: I am satisfied that the Committee on Public Lands will report in favor of the amendment, and delay at this stage is almost ruinous.

The lands are being entered by military land warrants almost every hour, and we have now before us a bill which will probably pass Congress at this session, called the homestead bill. It is important that these railroad bills should be passed at once, if it is designed that there ever shall another dollar come into the Treasury from the public lands. A dollar and twenty-five cents will be saved to the Treasury for every acre that is dedicated to these railroads.

The motion to refer was not agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The amendment was read. It is to strike out the fifth section of the Senate bill, which is in these words:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That if either of the said railroads shall not be completed within ten years, the said State of Missouri shall be bound to pay to the United States the amount which may be received by said State upon the sale of any part of said lands granted for the use of such roads; the title to the purchasers under said State remaining valid, and the title to the residue of said lands granted to the use of said roads shall re-invest in the United States, to have and to hold the same in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.

And to insert in lieu of it the following:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State shall be disposed of by said State only in manner following, that is to say: that a quantity of land, not exceeding one hundred and twenty sections, on each road, and included within a continuous length of twenty miles of said road, may be sold; and when the Governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that said twenty miles of said road is completed, then another like quantity hereby granted, may be sold, and so, from time to time, until said road is completed; and if said road be not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

Mr. COOPER called for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment; and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 1; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Bradbury, Brooke, Chase, Dawson, De Saussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Geyer, Gwin, Hale, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, King, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Sebastian, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, Wade, and Weller—28.

NAY—Mr. Cooper.

No quorum voting.

Mr. COOPER moved that the Senate do now adjourn; which was not agreed to.

Mr. ATCHISON. Although I am very anxious that the bill shall pass, I am unwilling, for my own gratification, to send for gentlemen who are now absent. I trust that the bill will be taken up, as a matter of course, next Thursday, when the Senate meets again, when no call for the yeas and nays will have the effect of defeating it. Hoping that course will be pursued, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COOPER. If the Senator's remark is intended for me, I will only say that I will do here, at all times, what my duty enjoins upon me.

Mr. ATCHISON. I say that the call for the yeas and nays was intended to defeat the bill.

The PRESIDENT. The motion was to adjourn. Senators will take their seats. They have no right to make any remarks when a motion to adjourn is pending.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned until Thursday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 31, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

Mr. SIBLEY. I desire to make a motion that the business allotted to the morning hour be postponed, with a view to take up, and have disposed of, the unfinished territorial business which has been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. OLDS. I suppose the motion is merely that the territorial business be taken up before we commence with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIBLEY. Then, if there is objection, I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce the motion.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. The special order was made by the concurrence of two thirds, under a suspension of the rules. The first business in order is the execution of that special order, and it is not in order to suspend the rules until that special order be in some way disposed of. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] moves that the special order be postponed until the House shall have disposed of the territorial business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. If it be the pleasure of the House to take up the territorial business, as a matter of course, I do not intend to throw any obstructions in the way. Some of these bills are contested, and in the present condition of the House I take it for granted that there will be a disinclination and indisposition upon the part of everybody to press any contested legislation to final action. There is this that we can do, if we would agree to do it—that is, to receive such reports from committees as require a mere reference. For instance, the Committee on Claims have a great many reports which they would present and have referred to the Committee of the Whole House. Other committees are in the same condition. That class of business we could do just as well as if the House were full.

The SPEAKER. Is objection made to the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota? [Mr. SIBLEY.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is the proposition to take up the territorial bills upon the table and dispose of them?

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition.

Mr. JONES. Then that might postpone the special order a whole week. A great many of these bills—I do not know the nature of them all—were objected to in the Committee of the Whole, and—

Mr. SIBLEY. I rise to a question of order. I do not think it is competent for the gentleman to get up and make an argument against my proposition.

The SPEAKER. Remarks are out of order on all sides.

Mr. AVERETT. I object to the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. SIBLEY.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Allow me to ask the Chair a question. I would be willing to vote for a postponement of the special order, but I desire the Chair to inform me, if doing that, I at the same time vote for taking up the territorial business?

The SPEAKER. You do. It is a compound motion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Can this be done without a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts. You cannot suspend the rules, and the question is, can you postpone the special order by less than a two thirds vote. The Chair is of opinion that you can postpone, by a majority, to a particular day. The effect of the gentleman's motion would hardly change that principle.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a motion pending to suspend the rules already.

The SPEAKER. No motion would be in order to suspend the rules, while the House is in the execution of an order made under a suspension of the rules, and by a vote of two thirds; and the proposition now is, to suspend that special order thus made.

The question was then taken on Mr. SIBLEY's motion, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN. I ask leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Then the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] is objected to.

Mr. McMULLIN. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, for the reason that the House is now executing a special order made under a suspension of the rules; and we cannot pile one special order upon another.

THE IOWA LAND BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire if the question under consideration, when the House adjourned on Saturday last, does not come up for consideration? It was a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will respond to the gentleman, that in his opinion, it does not come up as unfinished business belonging to the morning hour. The bill was reported from the committee, and defeated. A motion is pending to reconsider the vote by which the bill was defeated, which is a privileged motion, taking its place among other privileged motions, outside of the special order.

Mr. JONES. Was not that privileged motion the subject under consideration when the House adjourned on Saturday?

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. JONES. I wish to inquire, if the House had not adjourned, would not that subject have continued before the House? And then I inquire, if it does not come up as the unfinished business when the House was last in session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, the other day, decided that, when a bill of a similar description was before the House; but it was upon a different principle, upon the principle that the previous question had been moved and seconded. The Chair doubts whether the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is not right in his construction of the rule, but is inclined to the opinion that the bill having been reported from the committee, voted upon and defeated by the House, the motion to reconsider takes its place among other privileged motions, and does not connect itself with the morning hour. The Chair doubts, however, in regard to the correctness of the decision.

Upon reflection, the Chair is disposed to decide, if any gentleman calls up the privileged question connected with the bill which was reported during the morning hour, that it is the unfinished business; and he so decides.

Mr. DEAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Iowa land bill was defeated.

Mr. HALL. Will it be in order to move to postpone that question until Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be in order.

Mr. HALL. It is a very important question, and there is a very thin House; I therefore move that the consideration of this subject be postponed until Thursday next.

Mr. DEAN. I move to amend the motion by inserting "Monday next," in the place of "Thursday next."

Mr. HALL. I will modify my motion so as to make it this day week.

Mr. JONES. A motion to postpone is not in order while a motion to lay upon the table is pending. But if it is the wish of those present to postpone it until this day week, I will withdraw the motion to lay upon the table, and then the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] will be in order; but if the House say they will not postpone it, I will renew the motion to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. JONES. I do withdraw it.

Mr. HALL. I now move to postpone the consideration of this subject to this day week.

Mr. STANLY. I object to that. I object to the day. There was another bill postponed to that day for consideration.

Mr. HALL. Then I move that it be postponed until to-morrow week.

Mr. STANLY. Very well. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, who has charge of this bill, that I understand the deficiency bill will reach the House from the Senate probably to-day, and if he could postpone the consideration of the bill, which he has now in charge, to some other day, so as to give the deficiency bill a few days, I would prefer it.

Mr. MARTIN. I object.

Mr. HALL. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to withdraw his motion to lay upon the table. Is it not in order to make the motion I have, to postpone the further consideration of the proposition to reconsider the vote by which the bill was defeated?

The SPEAKER. It is in order, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. ORR. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. KING, of New York. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. KING, of New York, and CLINGMAN were appointed; and the House being counted, the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 90. Being one fifth, the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that all will now agree that this matter should be postponed until Tuesday next. I hope it will be allowed to pass over by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object.

The question was again taken on the motion to postpone the consideration of the special order, and it was agreed to—yeas 110, nays 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernethy, C. Allen, W. Allen, William Appleton, Bell, Bissell, Bowie, Bowne, Bragg, Brewster, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Bushy, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Cullom, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Duncan, Darkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Gaylord, Gentry, Goodenow, Gorman, Green, Grey, Hall, Harper, Isham, Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hascall, Haven, Richard, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Horsford, Houston, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McCorkie, McNair, Miller, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Murphy, Olds, Orr, Oulaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Pennington, Peik, Richardson, Ross, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smith, Snow, Stanley, Stone, Stratton, Taylor, Thurston, Townshend, Townshend, Venable, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Wilcock, Williams, and Yates—110.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Averett, Babcock, Barrere, Bennett, Boccock, Buell, Caldwell, Caskie, Colcock, Dean, Dockery, Edmundson, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Hamilton, Hammond, Holladay, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Martin, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Milson, Morehead, Newton, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Russell, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Wallace, Addison White, and Woodward—51.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

FLORIDA AND ALABAMA RAILROADS.

Mr. ORR. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report to the House, "An act granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands to the States of Florida and Alabama, for the construction of certain railroads in said States."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from South Carolina will yield me the floor for a few moments, I will suggest to the House that there are a great many members absent, and that there are not a sufficient number present to take up for action these contested cases; and that it would therefore be just to all sides, and the interests of those concerned in these contested questions, that action should be postponed until after the sittings of the Baltimore Convention, and the House shall be full. One other suggestion, and I am done. Let us proceed with the call for reports from committees, with the unanimous understanding that such only will be received as those making them will be willing to have referred to the Committee of the Whole House, or the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Let the bills and reports be printed, that they may be prepared for the action of the House when it shall be again in a condition to do business.

The SPEAKER. Is the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee acceptable to the House?

Mr. SACKETT. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield the floor to me for a moment to submit a resolution to be read for information?

Mr. ORR. I yield only for the purpose of having the resolution read. I do not know that I shall give the resolution my assent.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows: Resolved, That all special orders, the reports of committees, and final action upon the bills upon the Speaker's table, be and the same are hereby postponed until Friday next.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I object to the introduction of that resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the first part of it. I hope the gentleman will modify it so that it will read, "That the House will receive only such reports as those making them may desire to have referred to a Committee of the Whole House or the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and to have them printed."

Mr. SACKETT. If the Clerk will insert the words "only such reports as may be referred to the Committee of the Whole House or the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union," I presume there will be no further objection to the resolution.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I object to it.

Mr. ORR. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to move to put the "Act granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands to the States of Florida and Alabama for the construction of certain railroads in said States upon its passage."

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and then read through.

Mr. HUNTER. I inquire of the Chair whether it is in order to move that that bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is; but the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] who reported the bill, is entitled to the floor.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, notifying the House that he had approved and signed certain bills.]

Mr. ORR. The bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands this morning, and which has just been read through, provides for the granting of the right of way, and the donation of alternate sections of the public land, to aid in the construction of two railroads—of more importance, in my judgment, than any which have been referred to that committee. The first road embraced within the provisions of the bill will connect the Atlantic coast with the Gulf of Mexico, across the Peninsula of Florida. By its construction, in a national point of view, very useful and valuable purposes will be subserved to the Government in time of war, and important commercial advantages to the citizens of the United States in time of peace. Two or three war steamers of a foreign enemy, stationed off the southern coast, and between that and the West India Islands, would effectually cut off all naval communication between the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic. The pass there is a very narrow one. This communication every one knows to be of vast importance, in time of war, to the Government. The road projected by this bill will place the Government in a condition to keep open the communication certainly and speedily.

The distance across the peninsula along this road will be, perhaps, one hundred and fifty miles. Upon this road the Government may have a safe and speedy transportation of provisions or troops, according to the emergency, and whenever it may be desirable, the necessary munitions of war within half a day. It often happens that time is an important consideration in assailing a foreign enemy on our shores, or in defending a given point against a premeditated attack of the enemy, and this road will really shorten the communication between the Mississippi river and the Atlantic coast several days, when compared with the time now required to round the cape, even if there were no obstructions on the coast. It is not at all improbable, in my judgment, if this road is built, that much of the produce going out from the ports of New Orleans and Mobile will, if a safe and convenient harbor is found—and it is believed there will be found such a harbor—go to the Florida coast in steamboats, be transported across the peninsula, and be reshipped in sail vessels to the Atlantic cities and Europe. The voyage will be shortened by the construction of this road and the necessity of sailing vessels passing Key West and Cape Florida—the most dangerous part of the coast of America—will be entirely obviated. There have been more wrecks of merchant vessels on the coast of Florida than upon any other part of the coast of the United States, not excepting that of North Carolina. I have seen a statement, in which it is estimated that the annual value of property destroyed in making the passage around the southern coast is between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000.

Mr. MEADE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will suggest that cargoes from New York to New Orleans, and from New Orleans to New York, would scarcely bear the expense of transshipment. I would also suggest, therefore, to him so to modify his resolution to recommend as to embrace instructions to the committee to inquire into the expediency of constructing a ship canal across the peninsula instead of a railroad.

Mr. ORR. I suppose the suggestion was made by my friend from Virginia in good faith; but the Committee on the Judiciary, I judge, would be about as proper a committee to which to refer the proposition as the Committee on Public Lands. If my friend feels a great interest in the proposition, I hope he will move a resolution of instructions to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into it, and no doubt it will have their special attention.

Mr. MEADE. It is not within the province of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ORR. Nor that of the Committee on Public Lands. My reasons for venturing the speculation that produce will be carried over this road from New Orleans, Mobile, and Galveston, are founded in the fact that the transportation between these cities and the western terminus of the railroad could be successfully carried on in steamboats, not of the first class and highest cost, but of smaller value; and that insurance upon every cargo would be considerably reduced in consequence of the diminished time and perils of the voyage, whilst, at the present time, the transportation is carried on in sailing vessels around the cape, exposed to the caprice of the winds and waves driving them upon the reefs and bars. Sailing vessels would find a safe and convenient harbor at or near the mouth of the St. Mary's river, the eastern terminus of the railroad, and that point would be the great depot where sailing vessels would load for every part of the commercial world, having unladen their freights for the Gulf States and the Great West, watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries. The saving of time and the reduction of insurance would, perhaps, pay the expenses of shipment.

But, Mr. Speaker, whether the produce transported from the ports of New Orleans, Mobile, and Galveston, and the goods shipped from New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, and Charleston, would pass across the railroad, is a matter of conjecture; but in time of war, with the passage between the Gulf and the Atlantic entirely cut off, I ask whether our Army and its supplies might not be constrained to pass over that route by slow marches, ten days through sand and hammocks without a railroad, or with steam in half a day with a railroad? They would be transmitted certainly and speedily, and without heavy expense to the Government. Besides, if it were necessary, a large force could be concentrated at the mouth of the Mississippi river from the East; or, vice versa, a large force could be thrown on the Atlantic coast from the West. Is the bill, then, not worthy of your favorable consideration and action?

So much for the first road embraced within the provisions of this bill. It is proposed to start the road somewhere about the mouth of the St. Mary's river, and from thence to strike the Gulf at the most eligible point, which, I presume, will be on Tampa Bay. The State of Florida has provided for taking stock in the road; and a survey is being made under the supervision of a board of engineers of that State. This road passes over some ninety or one hundred miles of pine country, a barren wilderness. I examined, a few days ago, a map of Florida, prepared at the Land Office, showing all the unentered lands in that State, and found a tier of seven townships of public lands, over which this road would run, where there has not been a solitary acre entered, although it has been in market for the last twenty years. It will not be entered for the next fifty years, unless you afford to the products of the forest facilities for transportation to market. The products of its forests will be turpentine, pitch, tar, and lumber. The lands will become valuable by the passage through them of this road, and may be sold. The persons purchasing will be enabled to transport their products to the Gulf, or to the Atlantic coast, and these facilities will be the sole consideration of their enhanced value. That is the description of country through which the road passes. One hundred miles which this road traverses is as poor a pine, barren desert as can be imagined. The probability is, that if you construct this road, this land will be enhanced in value so as to bring to the Government $250 an acre, when now it would not bring ten cents.

I shall not repeat the argument which I had the honor to make the early part of the session in favor of the general policy of donating public lands to railroads. That question has been pretty fully discussed, and I do not know that I have anything new to add to what was then said. The second road provided for in this bill, for there are two, was from Pensacola Bay up to Montgomery in the State of Alabama, with a branch thrown out in the direction of the Chattahoochee river, to intersect with one of the Georgia roads, somewhere in the direction of Albany, in that State. That road will be perhaps seventy, eighty, or one hundred miles in length. There is but little public land through which it passes, but that is of the same poor quality of which I have spoken. It is important that you should have a certain and speedy communication from the interior with Pensacola. You have expended at Pensacola already some two or three millions of dollars in building up there a dry-dock and the establishment of a naval station.

For the distance of fifty miles around Pensacola, there is not productive land in sufficient quantity to furnish provisions enough for the workmen and persons connected with the Navy, who are located at that point. It would be the easiest matter in the world, in time of war, for an enemy to throw a few hundred men in the rear of your works there, and besiege the city of Pensacola, and take possession of your naval station; because provisions must be transported either along the Gulf to this point, or they must come from the interior of Georgia and Alabama. Give them this railroad, penetrating up to Montgomery, where it connects with other railroads in the State of Alabama, with a branch thrown out to the Georgia railroads, and you furnish facilities for supplying that station expeditiously and cheaply with provisions, and, if necessary, with men in abundance, to defend that station, who will pour down from Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee. The two roads, with the branch upon the road connecting the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico added together, will make about one million six or seven hundred thousand acres of public lands. I venture the assertion—and I will call the attention of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] to the remark, for he feels a deeper local interest in this bill than I do—that the one million and six hundred thousand acres of public lands, if they were put in market, would not bring upon an average to the public Treasury, ten cents per acre. If the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] gets the floor after I shall have concluded, I desire him to state whether the conjecture I have ventured is not true.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has, and the first business in order is the motion submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to suspend the rules to introduce a resolution fixing the day for a final adjournment.

Mr. ORR. When this matter is resumed again, will I be entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will it be in order for me to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. Was there not a motion made to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. There was not.

Mr. JONES. Then the floor could not be taken from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] for any other purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the floor could be taken from the gentleman from South Carolina at the expiration of the morning hour to consider a privileged question. This being Monday there is a privileged question pending, which is the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to suspend the rules that he may introduce a resolution fixing a day for the final adjournment of Congress. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BRIGGS] addressed the Chair, and asked the unanimous consent of the House to enable him to submit a proposition.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Is the motion I submitted on last Monday, the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS:] I desire to submit a motion, that by unanimous consent the bill which has been under consideration this morning may be printed.

Mr. JONES. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

The SPEAKER. There is already a proposition pending to commit.

Mr. ORR. I suspect the gentleman cannot make that motion. I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] did not yield to the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. CABELL,] to make any motion about it.

Mr. CABELL. I ask the unanimous consent—

Mr. JONES. I will make this remark: If the gentleman will make a motion to postpone this bill to Tuesday next, as the other one was, and to print it, I will not object to it.

Mr. CABELL. I am willing to acquiesce in anything which may be the sense of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] asks that the bill be printed. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] moves that it be postponed until Tuesday. By unanimous consent either or both of these motions can be entertained.

Mr. CABELL. I will state to the gentleman, that it is not the purpose of the friends of this bill to demand the previous question. They are satisfied that the bill has merits, and that it will pass the House upon a full discussion. We may as well go on with the discussion of this matter in a thin House. We do not propose to call the previous question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. ORR. As there seems to be an indisposition to act upon this bill in a thin House, I will consent, with the unanimous approbation of the House, that this bill which we have been discussing shall be postponed until Tuesday week, and be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the order will be so entered upon the Journal.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a privileged motion. On Saturday there was a report from the Committee on Public Lands unfavorable to the memorial of the defenders of Baltimore, asking for bounty land. I wish to make a motion to recommit it, with instructions. I make the motion to reconsider the vote by which that unfavorable report was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be entered upon the Journal, but the vote cannot now be reconsidered.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The SPEAKER. The question pending is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] to suspend the rules, for the purpose of introducing a resolution for the final adjournment of this body.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That this House adjourn sine die on the first Monday of August, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose to amend the resolution, so as to make it the 19th of July. I propose to strike out the words "first Monday of August," and insert "19th of July."

Mr. SACKETT. I move to postpone this question until Monday next.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. Is it in order for the gentleman to make that motion while the House is dividing?

Mr. SACKETT. I wish to inquire of the Chair if it is in order to move to postpone the consideration of this resolution until Monday next?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. SACKETT. I make that motion, then, considering the thin state of the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Would not a motion for the previous question take precedence of this motion of the gentleman from New York? [Mr. SACKETT.]

The SPEAKER. It would; and would cut off the motion to postpone.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] a question, that I may vote understandingly upon this subject. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means whether it is probable we can pass the appropriation bills, and pass them understandingly, if we adjourn at so early a period as that indicated by him?

Mr. HOUSTON. The only reply I will make to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] is: I think it almost improbable that we will pass the appropriation bills understandingly at any period within the next twelve months. If we will go to work, as gentlemen ought to do, we can pass the appropriation bills, and everything else, in one month from to-day, and give them proper investigation. That is my opinion.

Mr. ORR made a suggestion not heard by the Reporter.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If the House will allow me, I can answer the inquiry of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] by reminding him that when we passed the appropriation bills the first session of the last Congress, we took them up in the middle of September, and adjourned on the last day of the month. We passed the appropriation bills at the last session within the last three weeks, and surely we can pass them now in two months. I move the previous question.

Mr. SACKETT. If the previous question is to be moved, considering the thin state of the House, I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. I will, for a moment, withdraw my call for the yeas and nays, and let the question be taken upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SACKETT.]

The question was then put upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table; and there were—ayes 51, noes 58.

Mr. HART. I demand tellers upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. HARRIS, of Tennessee, and MOORE, of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was then put, and upon a division, there were—ayes 68, noes 50.

Mr. HIBBARD. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. Gentlemen think that the amendment I propose is standing in the way of this resolution, and I will therefore, by the consent of the House, withdraw it.

The question was again taken, and resulted—ayes 56, nays 98; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bennett, Bissell, Bowne, Bragg, Busby, B. Carrington Cabell, Chandler, Clark, Conger, Evans, Florence, Floyd, Gaylord, Goodenow, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Horsford, Thomas Y. How, Jenkins, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Letcher, Mace, McDonald, McMillin, Orr, Samuel, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Pennington, Rantoul, Ross, Russell, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Seely, Smart, Snow, Stanley, A. P. Stevens, Strother, Taylor, Thurston, Walsh, Ward, Welch, Alexander White, and Williams—56.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, Averett, Bahecock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bell, Bowie, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chapman, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Costman, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Doty, Duncan, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Fowler, Gamble, Gentry, Giddings, Green, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Istait G. Harris, Hart, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McLanahan, McQueen, Meade, Miller, Morehead, Murphy, Newton, Olds, Outlaw, Penster, Powell, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Toombs, Townshend, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Watkins, Wildrick, Woodward, and Yates—98.

So the resolution was not laid upon the table.

Mr. HARRIS. I propose to modify the resolution that I offered. I propose to add the word "next," immediately after the word "August," so that the resolution will read "the first Monday in August next."

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask that the resolution be read as modified.

The resolution was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, (with the concurrence of the Senate,) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives close the present session of Congress, by an adjournment of their respective Houses, on Monday, the second day of August next, at the hour of twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. HUNTER. I move a call of the House; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The House is dividing upon a call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to address the Chair while the House is dividing. If the gentleman from Georgia insists upon it, the Chair will enforce the rule.

Mr. STEPHENS. I insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia insists upon the execution of the rule, which declares that it is not in order to address the Chair while the House is being divided. Being insisted on, the Chair must enforce the rule.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Chair have the 190th rule read? If I understand it, it is this: "Any time before the second is ordered," &c.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that is not the question of order made by the gentleman from Georgia. The question of order is, that the gentleman had no right under the rule to address the Chair while he was in the act of dividing the House.

Mr. HUNTER. Clearly under that decision, I have the right now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the right now, for the Chair is supposed to be in the act of dividing the House until a division is made.

Mr. SACKETT. Is it in order to move the postponement of the consideration of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to address the Chair until the House has divided.

The question was then put upon seconding the call for the previous question, and there were—ayes 57, noes 56.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CLINGMAN, and HARRIS of Tennessee, were appointed.

A count was again taken upon seconding the call for the previous question, and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROBBINS. I demand the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Let us adjourn!"]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I wish to inquire of the Chair if this resolution, should the House now adjourn, would not come up in order on next Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts if it will not come up in order before that time. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that it will go upon the table, but he will decide that question when it arises.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to introduce a resolution.

Mr. ROBBINS objected.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that it may be read.

It was objected to.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum to do business.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. The resolution offered by myself, I believe, is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] will withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I withdraw my demand for the previous question. The resolution will be open to amendment, and I ask the yeas and nays upon its passage.

Mr. SACKETT. I move to postpone the consideration of the resolution until Monday next.

Mr. SMART. There is no quorum to do business.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair is called upon to enforce the rule strictly, he must decide that there is no House here to do business, and that a motion to adjourn, or to compel the attendance of absent members, are the only motions in order.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I move a call of the House.

Mr. EVANS. I do not think it is right, when our Democratic friends are at Baltimore, to enforce their attendance here. [Laughter.] I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SACKETT. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be read for information.

The resolution was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That when this House adjourns to-morrow, it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. SACKETT. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. It is moved that the House do now adjourn. That question must be first put.

Mr. SACKETT. We ought to adjourn over merely as a matter of courtesy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's resolution will alter the standing order of the House. It will be competent for this House to adjourn, and a motion would be perfectly in order to adjourn from to-day until Thursday next, or until Wednesday next; but it is not competent for this House to make the change proposed by the resolution, which is, that when this House adjourn to-morrow it will be to meet on Friday next.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn, and it was disagreed to, there being, upon a division—ayes 66, noes 77.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum to do business.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I withdraw my motion for a call of the House.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce my resolution.

It was objected to.

Mr. SACKETT. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. CLINGMAN. We are now acting under the suspension of the rules, on a resolution, and, therefore, I insist that another motion to suspend the rules would not be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that. The proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] is correct, that the business to be considered is the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] which was admitted under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the yeas and nays upon that resolution.

Mr. HIBBARD. Is not a motion to adjourn a privileged one, and in order?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. HIBBARD. I propose to make a motion that when this House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the very day on which we do not want to meet. If anybody goes to Baltimore no one wishes to come back on Thursday.

The question was then put on the motion to adjourn until Thursday next, and, on a division; there were—ayes 65, noes 60.

Mr. DUNCAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not competent for the House, unless it changes one of its rules, which requires, as every one knows, a suspension of the rules to pass the resolution proposed by the gentleman from New York, which is, to provide for the adjournment to-morrow. It is in order, under a special rule of the House, to move to fix the time of the adjournment when the House adjourns to-day.

Mr. SACKETT. Will it be in order to move that when the House meets to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Friday next? I know that we have passed such resolutions frequently.

The SPEAKER. If two thirds of this body will suspend the rules. The rule to which the gentleman has reference reads as follows:

"A motion to adjourn, and a motion to fix the day at which the House shall adjourn, shall be always in order."

Mr. HIBBARD. If I rightly understand it, the proposition of the gentleman from New York is to ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce that resolution.

Mr. CARTER. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know what question is pending before the House?

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish to inquire of the Chair if the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] has made a proposition, and, if so, what it is?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York rose in his place to ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow him to offer a resolution which proposes that when this House adjourns on to-morrow it adjourn to meet again on Friday next. The Chair decides that it is not a privileged motion, and cannot be entertained without a suspension of the rules. It is not now in order to move a suspension of the rules, because the House is now acting under a suspension of the rules. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] moves that when the House adjourns to-day—which is a privileged motion under the rule I have just read—it adjourn to meet on Thursday next; and that is the motion the House was in the act of taking the yeas and nays upon.

Mr. HIBBARD. I believe the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] is the better one, and hoping that the House will adopt that, I withdraw mine.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish to inquire what the motion before the House is?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution fixing the day for the final adjournment of Congress, and upon that we are acting under a suspension of the rules, made this day, and it is not in order to move to suspend the rules until the matter upon which we are now acting is in some way disposed of, it having been introduced under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. Is it in order to move to postpone the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] until Monday week?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Then I make that motion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Believing there is a quorum in the House, I renew my motion for the previous question. I hope that will dispose of it.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to ask a question of the Chair. If the previous question is sustained, will it not cut off the motion to postpone?

The SPEAKER. It will, and bring the House to vote directly upon the resolution.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That is my object.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The motion to postpone must be first put, as it was first moved.

A count was taken on seconding the previous question, and there were—ayes 31, noes not counted.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. SEYMOUR] modify his resolution so as to postpone the matter until Monday next?

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition of the gentleman's colleague over the way.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the resolution be the first business in order on Monday next, if it is postponed until that day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I have no objection to postpone it until that day.

The SPEAKER. There being no second to the demand for the previous question, the motion to postpone until Monday next is in order.

Mr. STANLY. I ask for a division upon that question, as we have a special order for that day.

The question was then taken, and there were, on a division—ayes 114, noes not counted.

So the resolution was postponed to Monday next.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce my resolution.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I object.

Mr. SACKETT. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. A privileged motion is already pending before the House.

Mr. COBB. Would it be in order to move to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. A privileged motion is already pending, which is to suspend the rules. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] moves that the rules be suspended so as to enable him to introduce a resolution, which will be read for information.

The resolution was then read by the Clerk as follows:

Resolved, That when this House adjourns to-morrow, it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand the yeas and nays upon the suspension of the rules.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DUNCAN. I wish to raise the question, whether this motion to vote to-day to fix the time of adjourning to-morrow, is in order?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order if the rules are suspended, and that is the proposition now before the House.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CARTTER. Let the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read by the Clerk.

Mr. SACKETT. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wish to offer an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. No amendment is in order, as the previous question is demanded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I supposed I was recognized by the Speaker before the call for the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. CARTTER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I ask for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. KING, of New York, and BRIGGS, were appointed, and a count being taken, the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BELL. I wish to make an inquiry. What is the desire of our brethren on the other side? If they desire an adjournment, I, for one, am willing to grant it.

Mr. POLK. We do not desire it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. A part do.

Mr. SMART. I answer for one, that I desire it, and I think a majority of the Democrats desire it.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—ayes 58, nays 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bowne, Breckinridge, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Clark, Conger, Cottman, Cullom, Eastman, Edmundson, Evans, Fitch, Florence, Gorman, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Haws, Haven, Hibbard, Holladay, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Leitcher, McDonald, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaselee, Powell, Robbins, Ross, Russell, Sackett, Seurry, Smart, Snow, Stanley, Stone, Taylor, Thurston, Toombs, Venable, Walsh, A. White, and Williams—58.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Allison, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bowie, Briggs, Brenton, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Caldwell, Carter, Caskey, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Edgerton, Floyd, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Goodenow, Green, Grey, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hascall, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas H. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McCorkle, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Millson, Miner, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murphy, Newton, Pennington, Polk, Rantoul, Robie, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Strother, Townsend, Walbridge, Wallace, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Wildrick, Woodward, and Yates—102.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am aware that many members desire to be absent from the House a greater part of this week, and I feel desirous to accommodate them. I have a resolution in my hand which, it seems to me, will accomplish the whole object, the same as though the House were to adjourn. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer it. If it be objected to, I will move a suspension of the rules.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the special order of this House, requiring reports from the standing committees for one hour each morning of this session, and also all privileged questions now pending, be postponed for one week from this day.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I object.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of allowing me to introduce that resolution.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The resolution offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SACKETT], and just voted down, proposed that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Friday next. It is very evident that we are going to do nothing for the next two days. The Senate have adopted a resolution that when they adjourn, they adjourn to meet on Thursday next. That is as far as they could go. I move that when this House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to lay that motion upon the table. We have had one chance at it, and refused to adjourn, and that is enough.

Mr. McNAIR. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] submits the motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNAIR] moves that the House do now adjourn. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is first in order.

Mr. LETCHER. I moved to lay that motion upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order. It is one of those privileged motions, however, about which there can be no talk. It is precisely such a motion as a motion to adjourn.

Mr. LETCHER. What sort of a motion would be in order now, in connection with that proposition, for I would make any sort of motion that would get rid of it? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in reply, must say, that the only way to oppose it, is to vote against it, [laughter,] just as he would against a motion to adjourn.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. McMULLIN. Allow me to request the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to withdraw his motion. Let it come from the other side of the House and I will vote for it, and I will also state, that when the Whig Convention comes off, I will extend the same courtesy to them.

A Voice. We do not want any bargains.

The question was then taken on the resolution to adjourn till Thursday next, and it was not agreed to—ayes 65, nays 77; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bowie, Briggs, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, L. D. Campbell, Carter, Clark, Conger, Cottman, Eastman, Edmundson, Evans, Fitch, Florence, Floyd, Gentry, Giddings, Goodenow, Gorman, Grow, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Haven, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Thomas Y. How, James Johnson, John Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Humphrey Marshall, McDonald, Meade, Miner, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaselee, Pennington, Powell, Robbins, Ross, Sackett, Smart, Snow, Stanley, Strother, Taylor, Thurston, Toombs, Venable, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Addison White, Wildrick, and Williams—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Charles Allen, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bibb, Bowne, Bragg, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Caldwell, Chandler, Chapman, Cleveland, Clingman, Colcock, Curtis, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dockery, Durkee, Edgerton, Fowler, Gamble, Gaylord, Grey, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Hebard, Hendricks, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas H. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Lockhart, Martin, McLanahan, McNair, McQueen, Millson, Molony, Morehead, Murphy, Newton, Pennington, Polk, Robie, Russell, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Walbridge, Wallace, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Woodward, and Yates—77.

Before the announcement of the above vote, Mr. McCORKLE asked leave of the House to vote, as he was not within the bar when his name was called; but it was objected to.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. It is evident that a great many gentlemen desire to be absent from the House during the next three days, some of whom are not inclined, I apprehend, to vote their wishes. [Laughter.] There are also a number of gentlemen, as I learn, who are desirous of making speeches, which they have prepared, upon various subjects, and with a view to accommodate all, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution.

Mr. OLDS. Before my colleague's resolution is read, I wish to give notice of my intention to move that the French spoliation bill be made the special order for to-morrow. [Laughter.]

The Clerk then read the resolution of Mr. CAMPBELL, as follows:

Resolved, That from Tuesday, June 1st, until Thursday, June 3d, 1852, inclusive, no motions except to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to adjourn, shall be entertained by the House.

Objected to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move a suspension of the rules, to enable me to introduce it.

Mr. GENTRY. I rise to a question of order. If I understood that resolution correctly, it will, in effect, change the standing rules of the House, and should lay over one day. It changes the whole order of business prescribed by the standing rules.

The SPEAKER. That is so; and the gentleman can only introduce his resolution by the operation of a two-thirds vote.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]
Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I hope the House will permit the resolution I send to the Chair to be read for information.

Mr. ORR. I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] moves to suspend the rules; and if the motion to adjourn is not carried, the proposition of my friend from New York cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. Except by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Read the resolution!" "Read the resolution!"]

Mr. ORR. I withdraw my motion for a moment.

The Clerk then read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That until Friday next the business of this House shall be limited to the receiving such reports from the standing committees of the House as shall, by the person reporting, be moved to be referred to either the Committee of the Whole, or the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that prior orders until that day be suspended.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish merely to say to the House, if we proceed to call the committees as they are now called, that it will take two months to go through with them; but there are vast numbers of reports which will only occupy two or three days which can be passed over, in this way, and no one's rights will be compromised.

Mr. HOUSTON. You cannot get a quorum to-morrow.

Mr. ORR. I renew my motion to adjourn.
The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was not agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 46, noes 64.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL], to suspend the rules.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. MEADE. I suggest that the resolution first proposed, for the adjournment of the House from to-morrow till Friday next, be taken up and adopted by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]
Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I object.

Mr. BRIGGS. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution proposing an adjournment from to-morrow till Friday next was defeated.

Mr. SACKETT. Is it in order to amend the motion of the gentleman from Florida by moving that when this House adjourn to-morrow, it be to meet on Friday next?

The SPEAKER. It is not.
Mr. CABELL. I withdraw my motion, if the gentleman meets with general consent.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRIGGS] on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question must be first taken on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to suspend the rules.

The question was put, and the House refused to suspend the rules.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, to lay the motion of Mr. BRIGGS to reconsider the vote by which the resolution that the House adjourn from to-morrow till Friday next on the table, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. BRIGGS to reconsider, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the resolution, that when the House adjourns to-morrow, it be till Friday next.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SACKETT. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. Is not the resolution under the operation of the previous question? The previous question was moved and seconded before on its passage.

The SPEAKER. It stands in the same position it occupied before it was rejected.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I demand tellers on the demand for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. STEPHENS, of Georgia, and HINBARD, were appointed; and a count being had, the tellers reported—38 yeas—a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. STEPHENS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my motion. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then put on the resolution to adjourn from to-morrow till Friday next, and it was agreed to—yeas 60, nays 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Bowie, Briggs, Burrows, B. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Clark, Conger, Curtis, Edmundson, Evans, Florence, Gaylord, Gentry, Giddings, Gorman, Hays, Haven, Henn, Hubbard, Holladay, Houston, Thomas V. How, Ingersoll, Ives, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Landry, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, McCorkle, Henry D. Moore, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Pease, Penniman, Polk, Robbins, Robie, Russell, Sackett, David L. Seymour, Stanly, Taylor, Thurston, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Welch, Addison White, and Wildrick—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Alken, Allison, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bowne, Bragg, Breunton, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Caldwell, Chandler, Chapman, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, George T. Davis, Duncan, Durkee, Edgerton, Ewing, Fowler, Goodenow, Grey, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Hendricks, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, McLanahan, McQueen, Millson, Morehead, Newton, Origen S. Seymour, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Toombs, Wallace, Watkins, Woodward, and Yates—57.

So the House agreed to adjourn from to-morrow till Friday next.

On motion by Mr. STANLY, the House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees—

By Mr. CURTIS: A petition for the establishment of a mail route from Brookville, Pennsylvania, to intersect the route leading from Shattontville, Clarion county, Pennsylvania, to Warren, Warren county, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of Isaiah Hatch, of Wellfleet, Massachusetts, asking compensation for valuable services rendered in the case of the "Barnegat wreckers," and for aid and services in the case of the United States ss. Owners of ship Franklin.

By Mr. KUHN: The petition of Elizabeth Drum, widow of Captain Drum, late of the fourth artillery, United States Army, for continuance of pension.

By Mr. MILLER: The memorial of the heirs of Mr. Corby, deceased, of Missouri, praying Congress for relief for French spoliation.

Also, the petition of E. Bynum, C. B. Fallenstein, and sundry other citizens of Missouri, praying for a post route in said State from Keyesville to Bee Branch.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The petition of James H. Carr, of Philadelphia, memorializing Congress to pass a law granting an invalid pension to George Noble, who lost his eyesight in the service of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 1, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

[A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House of the passage by that body of House bill No. 207, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852," with amendments, and asking its concurrence therein.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up and refer the deficiency bill to the Committee on Ways and Means. It is necessary that the amendments proposed by the Senate should be examined into.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let the amendments be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to that. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that the bill and amendments be printed; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of John Ozias; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

Also, from the same committee, to which was referred House bill No. 122, entitled "A bill granting to the State of Missouri the right of way and a portion of the public lands for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from St. Charles, on the Missouri river, to the northern limits of said State," reported the same back with an adverse report; which was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following cases, and that they do lie on the table:

Resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware, in reference to the public lands; and
A memorial of the General Assembly of Missouri to Congress, asking a grant of lands for the Northern Missouri Railroad, viz: a railroad to begin at St. Charles, on the Missouri river, and to terminate at the northern boundary of Missouri.

Mr. HALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back a bill making further provision for the satisfaction of Virginia military land warrants, which I move be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to the proposed reference of that bill, although, considering our recent legislation respecting the public lands, it would certainly be a reasonable request that this bill, which proposes to do tardy, but, I hope, not reluctant, justice to the claims of Virginia, should be passed at once. I would not say anything at all, at this time, but for the fact that, some weeks ago, when another bill was under consideration, the two gentlemen from Ohio [Messrs. TAYLOR and STANTON] obtained the unanimous consent of the House to address it for ten minutes each, and one of the gentlemen, whom I now see in his place, [Mr. STANTON,] having availed himself of the privilege given, but, not having the opportunity to say all that he desired within the brief space allotted, published in the Globe an extended argument, in which, as I thought, he somewhat unnecessarily went into a discussion of questions involved in the bill which has just been reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The gentleman fell into many errors, which may possibly have created a prejudicial influence upon the bill. I beg merely to say that, when the time for the discussion of this question shall arrive, I will be prepared to show that many of the statements of the gentleman, and most of his calculations and deductions, are erroneous. I am well satisfied that the gentleman intended no misrepresentation; but I now say, simply for the purpose of correcting the mistakes into which he fell, that the gentleman was in error when he said that, in the Twenty-sixth Congress, Mr. Highland Hall's report against these claims was sustained by the House, and the bill for the issue of scrip defeated; that another report of Mr. Hall, made at the succeeding Congress, was again sustained by the House, and that the House, at the Twenty-eighth Congress, refused to sustain the elaborate report of Mr. Hubard in favor of these claims, and again defeated the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The gentleman is in error. There was no vote upon the bills or reports at either of the Congresses indicated by him. To correct another error into which the gentleman has fallen, I would say that, adopting the very calculation made by him of the number of officers and soldiers of the Virginia Continental line, who were engaged in the revolutionary war, I can disprove the conclusion to which he came.

The gentleman himself, while endeavoring to show that claims of a larger number of these revolutionary officers and soldiers had been allowed than ever had served during the revolutionary war in the Continental line, conceded, or at least assumed, a number that far exceeds the number of those who have already received compensation. The error into which the gentleman fell was in understating the average amount to which those officers and soldiers, or the heirs of those officers and soldiers, were entitled. I do not mean now to detain the House by any discussion of the merits of the bill; but I deem it proper, inasmuch as that portion of the remarks of the gentleman to which I have alluded, though published in the Globe, was not made in the House, and as this is the first opportunity I have had to advert to them, that I should avail myself of the occasion to call the attention of the House to the statements of the gentleman, which I am very well assured he will, upon more mature examination, be willing to withdraw. I make no objection now to the proposed reference of the bill.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. There is a possibility I may have been mistaken with regard to there having been any formal action upon the reports of committees of this House in the Twenty-sixth or Twenty-eighth Congress. What I said in my speech was, that that subject was very thoroughly investigated—very thoroughly discussed on minority and majority reports of standing and select committees of this House; and that the bill, after having been so discussed and examined, failed to receive the sanction of this House.

Mr. MILLSON. It was not acted upon at all. Mr. STANTON. It may be that it was not drawn to a vote. I have not examined the Journals to ascertain whether there had been a vote or not. It failed to receive the sanction of the House, either through want of time, or indisposition of the House to act upon it,—which I do not know. At a subsequent Congress, a report was made by Mr. Hubbard, of Virginia—a solitary majority report—which was discussed in the House; and, if my understanding of the matter is correct, was then voted upon.

Mr. MILLSON. It is true, Mr. Speaker, when that very able and learned report was made by the Committee on Public Lands, to which the gentleman refers, there was a discussion in the House; but the only vote was to order the publication of 10,000 extra copies of the report; thus far seeming to indicate approval of the principles involved in it.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I have not, myself, regarded as of great consequence the action of former Congresses. A word or two—and but a word or two—in regard to the statistics to which the gentleman from Virginia alludes. When the time comes for the gentleman and myself to compare notes, and to investigate these supposed errors, we will be enabled to engage in a discussion more understandingly. If I have fallen into any mistakes, they are mistakes derived from official records, which I have no means of correcting. I shall be a little gratified, and a good deal disappointed, if the gentleman from Virginia will be successful in showing, from my own data, that these warrants have not been fully satisfied. I shall be a good deal disappointed if he can find out any errors in the figures which I have submitted, and which are derived from official data, and show that the troops of the Virginia line on the Continental establishment have not already received a larger amount of lands than they can by any possibility be entitled to. There may have been improper claims allowed, and proper ones still outstanding; but it is not proper for me to go into this matter fully at the present time. I have no especial interest in resisting the passage of this law. I do not propose, unless it becomes necessary for the purpose of defending the positions I have already taken, to engage in resisting the passage of this bill, but I did deem it necessary, upon the bill which was reported by my colleague, [Mr. TAYLOR,] to attempt to satisfy the House that the claims which he asked to be satisfied were not meritorious, because that was a matter pecuniarily affecting my own constituents. So far as the bill now under consideration is concerned, proposing to subject these warrants to location upon any of the public lands, I acknowledge that my constituents have no peculiar interest, except what is common to the whole country. If no other gentleman sees proper, therefore, to engage in resisting the passage of this bill, I shall not do so.

I tell the gentleman, unless it becomes necessary for the purpose of protecting my own position and statement, that I have heretofore made upon what I regard improper legislation—

Mr. MILLSON. With the gentleman's permission, I will say that I have very little desire to assail his positions, not merely because I do not believe they were assumed with any intention to do injustice to these claims, but because I am willing to occupy many of those positions myself; for I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact, that in his own calculation, he estimates the number of privates in the Virginia Continental line to have been some eight thousand four hundred and fifty-nine. Now, I do not say that he has not fallen short of the correct number, but I do say that the whole number of claims which have been heretofore allowed, both for officers and privates of the Continental and State line and State navy is only a little over six thousand. That is a fact to which I call the gentleman's attention. He is surprised, however, that these six thousand and upwards should have received more than he estimates to have been due to the whole number. I will indicate to him the source of his error. It was in understating the amounts to which these officers and soldiers were entitled. He assumes, for instance, that the privates were entitled on an average to only one hundred acres of land. Mr. H. Hall, of Vermont, the most virulent opponent these claims have ever encountered in this House, some ten years since assumed the average due to privates to be one hundred and fifty acres; and for assuming so small an average, he was successfully assailed in the report of Mr. Hubbard. I merely indicate to the gentleman the occasion of his mistake, being perfectly satisfied that he will, when he comes to examine the question, admit the error and retract it.

Mr. STANTON. One word in reply to the gentleman. If warrants have issued only to the number which the gentleman states, it appears very clear to me that warrants have been issued for more land than their owners were entitled to. I will state the difference in the estimates of Mr. Highland Hall, to which the gentleman alludes, and myself. Mr. H. Hall attempts to ascertain the number engaged in the Virginia line who were entitled to bounty land warrants, and makes a variety of estimates, predicated them upon a variety of data. Those entitled were those who served for three years, and during the war. Now, all his investigations are to ascertain what number have served three years, or during the war. That is the point with regard to which all the difficulty has arisen. There exists no data to show the term of service of the Virginia troops. There is the difficulty. Hence, Mr. H. Hall could not ascertain with demonstrable certainty the number of Virginia troops who were entitled to land warrants. He makes an estimate from the best data he could get of the number who had served long enough to entitle them to bounty lands; and allows, as an average, one hundred and fifty acres to each. Those who served three years were entitled to one hundred acres; those who served during the war were entitled to two hundred acres, and he therefore assumed the average of one hundred and fifty. I start upon a different basis, conceding, in the outset, that there is no official data upon which you can ascertain the number that served long enough to entitle them to bounty land warrants. I take the aggregate of rank and file, and officers, without regard to the term of service. I take every man who is entered on the pay-roll—whether he served a week or day, who received advance pay. I take it for granted that in that aggregate there was a large number who did not serve three years, and, therefore, never became entitled to bounty land warrants. I assume that the whole of them—those who were not entitled to bounty land and those who were—served three years; supposing those who served during the war to be equal in number to those who served less than three years. It would, then, leave the average of soldiers, without regard to the term of service, at one hundred acres. That I believe to be a liberal estimate. The gentleman will, I think, now perceive the difference between Mr. Hall's estimate and mine. There is no inconsistency in the two propositions.

Mr. STANLY. I wish to say a word upon this bill. One argument the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] referred to ought not to be allowed to pass without a protest. He said that, of one of the reports made upon these Virginia land claims, some ten thousand extra copies were ordered to be printed, and cited that as an illustration that the House favored the views taken in that report. These claims have other merits to stand upon besides that. If that be the only argument in their favor they are weak indeed.

Mr. MILLSON. The House will recollect that I did not refer to the order of the House for the publication of extra copies of that report until the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] stated there was a vote taken at that session of Congress. I then, in reply to that observation, said it was true a vote had been taken, but that the only vote taken was upon ordering the publication of a large number of extra copies of that report; and, inasmuch as that report was a favorable one, it was fair to infer, if the House meant to intimate anything at all by that vote, that, so far as it went, it was favorable rather than unfavorable.

Mr. STANLY. So far as it went! I say that it does not go anywhere. It does not go at all. How does it argue when extra copies of minority reports are ordered to be printed? If I recollect aright, when Mr. Van Buren's plan for reorganizing the militia was introduced, there was a large number of extra copies ordered to be printed, for the purpose of showing the bad policy of the Administration. It does not argue anything that an extra number of copies has been ordered to be printed. I do not wish this bill to be prejudiced by any remarks made now before we are ready for action upon it, nor do I want it to be supported by arguments that will not hold water. I do not think that the ordering of an extra number of copies of a report to be printed, sanctions at all the principles involved in it. At that rate, it might be said that a Democratic Congress has recently sanctioned high-tariff opinions contained in the Patent Office Report; for, a year or two ago, 100,000 extra copies of that document were ordered to be printed. It contained some strong statistics, some strong arguments, in favor of a protective tariff. No man voted for the printing of that extra number of copies of that report because it contained tariff arguments. I have remarked thus much by way of preventing prejudice to this bill, which, I hope, will have a fair hearing on its own merits.

The bill was then referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. COBB, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the consideration of the following cases, and that they do lie upon the table, viz:

Three petitions of one hundred and twenty-two citizens of Morgan county, Ohio, asking a grant of 100,000 acres of unsold lands within said State, to aid in the construction of a certain plank or macadamized road;

Petition of Philip Adams and fifty others, citizens of the counties of Morgan and Perry, asking the grant of 100,000 acres of public land to aid in the construction of a certain plank or macadamized road;

The petition of citizens of the State of Wisconsin, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a plank road;

Petition of E. Douglass and thirty others, citizens of Mississippi, praying a grant of land for the benefit of Franklin Institute, a literary and scientific school in the county of Copiah, Mississippi; and Memorial praying for a grant of land to the settlers on the lands ceded by the treaty of Pembina.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of William J. Price, praying for the relinquishment of the reversionary interest of the United States to a section of land in Jackson county, Alabama, granted by treaty to William Jones, on conditions that have been fully complied with, reported a bill for his relief, which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for tomorrow, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition, &c., of Jasper A. Maltby, praying for bounty land, reported a bill for his relief: which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for tomorrow, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. My colleague has in his hands a bill, which was ordered to be reported by the Committee on Public Lands, with a recommendation that it do pass, for the purpose of extending the time in which the State of Alabama was to select her sixteenth section of school lands which were taken from her by the Chickasaw treaty, in 1832 and 1835. I do not desire it to be reported now, unless the House agree unanimously to pass it. It is a matter involving no principle, but owing to the passage of previous bills, provides for the selection of other lands, in lieu of the sixteenth sections. It is an extension only of the time for selection.

Mr. COBB. The State of Alabama selected lands in Louisiana, but when the returns were made to the General Land Office, it was found the lands they had located were within some Spanish grants. An extension of time, for the selection of lands in lieu of the sixteenth school sections, is all that is asked. If it is objected to, I will not now submit the report I have been instructed to make.

Mr. AVERETT. I do not think the House is now in a condition to act upon anything. I have the utmost confidence in the statements of the gentleman from Alabama, but from the thin state of the House, there not being a quorum present, I am compelled to object.

On motion by Mr. HENN, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following cases, and that they do lie upon the table:

Petition of James A. Cunningham and fifty-two others; Petition of A. R. Sparks and sixteen others; Petition of John Linder and twenty-seven others; Petition of William J. B. Ferguson and twenty-five others, citizens of Iowa, asking for the creation of a new land district in the western part of said State, and for the location of the land office therefor at Kanesville; Petition of John K. Cook and fifty-four others, citizens of Iowa, asking for the creation of a new land district in the western part of said State, and for the location of the land office therefor at Kanesville; Memorial of a convention of delegates assembled at Oskaloosa, Iowa, on the 25th day of November, 1851, asking a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Davenport, via Muscatine and Oskaloosa, to Trader's Point, on the Missouri river;

Petition of the Board of Education of the State of Michigan, praying for a grant of lands to them, equal in value to certain salt spring lands heretofore granted to said State, and erroneously confirmed by the Secretary of the Treasury;

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill No. 50, entitled "An act for the relief of Sidney S. Allcott;" which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

Also, from the same committee, "An act for the benefit of the citizens and occupants of the town of Kanesville, in the State of Iowa;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I hope the House will grant its unanimous consent to be reported and passed, a bill of a good deal of importance to my constituents, and to which certainly no one can object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is no quorum here, and we cannot pass any bills to-day.

A Voice. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. STANTON. It is a bill ceding to the State of Ohio the unfinished portion of the Cumberland road in that State. No one can object to it.

Mr. JONES. I object.

On motion by Mr. BRIGGS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition and papers of Mary Martin, for the purpose of having them referred to a committee of the Senate.

Mr. COBB. The morning hour has expired; and, if there is no objection, we can proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table, and take up only such bills as will not give rise to debate. The House may, however, go on receiving such reports from committees as are not to be pressed to a vote at present.

Mr. HOUSTON. That would be the proper way. Let the call on committees for reports continue, and let contested matters be kept back, to be reported some other time.

Mr. COBB. I would inquire of the Chair, if the Committee on Public Lands is passed, with the understanding that only such matters as are not to be pressed to a vote, shall be reported, will it be first called for reports on Friday next?

The SPEAKER. It will, if that is the understanding. The Chair will state the proposition. It is proposed, by unanimous consent, that the House pass not permanently from the Committee on Public Lands, there being a good many bills in the possession of that committee, the members interested in which are absent, that it proceed to receive and to refer such matters as shall give rise to no debate, and upon which action is not asked at present; and that when the call for committees shall be resumed at the next meeting of the House, it shall commence with the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to it.

On motion by Mr. BENNETT, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions and memorials, and that they do lie upon the table:

Petition of inhabitants of the State of New York, for grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Saratoga Springs to Sackett's Harbor, on Lake Ontario;

Memorial of A. Dawes, and one hundred and forty-five others, citizens of Morgan county, Ohio, asking a grant of 100,000 acres of unsold public lands within the State of Ohio, to aid in the construction of a certain plank or macadamized road;

Memorial of the directors of the Hempfield Railroad Company, for an appropriation of public lands to aid in the promotion of their work;

Petition of Adelson J. Goodwin, Seth Williams, and one hundred and twenty-six other citizens of Wesley Township, Washington county, Ohio, asking Congress to grant the "Independent School Association of the Commonwealth of Wesley" thirty-six sections of the public domain, for the benefit of education in said Association;

Also, a letter from Susan Crow and eight other females of the same county, on the same subject;

Petition of the Board of the Lawrence University, in the State of Wisconsin, asking Congress to appropriate a certain portion of the public lands upon conditions therein expressed; and Joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the granting the military reserve at Fort Winnebago in aid of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers improvement.

Mr. BENNETT. I have a bill to report, upon which I desire the action of the House. I would ask the Chair whether it would not be pending, if now reported, as the unfinished business, and be the first business in order when the House again meets? If that is not the case I will not make the report.

The SPEAKER. That direction can be given to the bill only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BENNETT. If I report it, move to recommit it, and then the morning hour expires, will I not have the floor when the House again resumes its session?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would be entitled to the floor in that case.

Mr. BENNETT. I will then report the following bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the passing of any bill. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire a vote of the House upon it. I do not, however, wish to press it to a vote now, but only to report it, so that it may lay over and come up next Friday, as the first business in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think that is the proper course to pursue. It would clog up everything else. Let the gentleman make his report next Friday.

Mr. BENNETT. I will not make the report now; but wait for some more favorable opportunity.

Mr. HALL. I will state, in reply to a remark of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB,] that the Committee on Public Lands are not anxious—indeed they do not wish to make any important reports this morning—but they are unwilling, in the present thin state of the House, that that Committee should be passed by, and important matters left in their hands unreported until all the other committees have been called. If the gentleman will consent that we now go on to receive reports from other committees on unimportant matters, and when the House is full, that the Committee on Public Lands be again called, I will not object; otherwise I will.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to that.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The only way to settle all this difficulty is for the House, in its present condition, to adjourn, and I therefore make that motion.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. JONES. There is no quorum present, and I intend to have one before you do any business.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was disagreed to—yeas 28, noes 41.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] how many reports he proposes to hold back under the suggestion he makes, concerning bills which he intends to put upon their passage?

Mr. HALL. There are two in my hands.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. There is no quorum present; and it is incompetent to transact any business until we have a quorum.

The SPEAKER. No motion, but one to adjourn, or for a call of the House, is now in order, there being no quorum present.

Mr. SACKETT. I move a call of the House, and upon that motion I demand tellers.

Mr. HOUSTON. I demand the yeas and nays. We can then ascertain whether there is a quorum present to proceed to the transaction of business, or not. A great many who voted against the adjournment on yesterday, went off to Baltimore last evening and this morning.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was agreed to—yeas 54, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Averett, Babcock, Bell, Bennett, Bibig-haus, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Burrows, Busby, Caldwell, Lewis B. Campbell, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dockery, Evans, Ewing, Florence, Gamble, Goodenow, Hall, Harper, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Holladay, Houston, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, Kuhus, Landry, Mace, Martin, McDonald, Millson, Newton, Olds, Samuel W. Parker, Robie, Ross, Russell, Sackett, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Walsh, Ward, Addison White, Wildrick, and Williams—54.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Caskey, Chandler, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Fowler, Gaylord, Giddings, Hascall, Hebard, Henn, Horstford, John W. Hoive, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, George C. King, Meacham, Miner, Morehead, Murphy, Penniman, Perkins, Robbins, Scudder, Stanly, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Townsend, Walbridge, Watkins, Welch, and Wells—38.

So the motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned until Friday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 3, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, papers in relation to the claim of Samuel A. Belden & Co. against the Government of Mexico; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 25th May calling for the best plan for the improvement of the Lake St. Clair Flats, in Michigan, a report from the Chief of the Topographical Engineers on that subject; which was ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Navy, in relation to the removal of the wreck of the United States steamer Missouri from the bay of Gibraltar, stating that $80,000 had been appropriated for the purpose by the last Congress, and that the work had been completed in the most satisfactory manner for the sum of $59,000, to the entire approbation of the English authorities at that port. The report also contains certificates from the United States consul at Gibraltar, testifying as to the facts. The report was ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have in my hand a petition from Jonathan Dennis, junior, representing that he is an agent for inventors here, and that there is no provision made by which appeals from the Commissioner of Patents may be tried, in case of the sickness or disability of the Chief Justice of the District of Columbia. He informs me that the act which has recently been passed by both Houses of Congress and become a law, conferring the judicial power exercised by the Chief Justice upon some of the other judges in case of his sickness, has been construed by those judges not to relate to the special jurisdiction of the Chief Justice under the patent laws, and that there is now literally no tribunal for that purpose. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have also received a petition, numerously signed, from citizens of Chemung county, in the State of New York, who represent to Congress that they are opposed to the fugitive slave law, and wish that it may be repealed. They state that they regard it as inhuman, tyrannical, cruel, a disgrace to the age, and offensive in the sight of God. They further say that they will never cease their constitutional opposition to it until it is annihilated. I suppose, sir, that it is not unbecoming the dignity of the Senate to take notice of manifestations of public opinion which we see elsewhere, and as a distinguished body has lately laid on the table a proposition to adopt and reaffirm the principles of that bill, I hope the Senate will confirm that, and refer this petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANGUM. I move to lay the memorial on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON presented a petition of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of Savannah, Georgia, praying that the site of the old Oglethorpe barracks may be granted to the city as a parade ground for the volunteer corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask leave to present a petition of some fourteen presidents of agricultural societies of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, many of them gentlemen distinguished for their knowledge in the science of agriculture. They represent that they believe that the public interests would be greatly promoted by the establishment of a Bureau of Agriculture, and by the establishment of other institutions, where it, as a science, might be studied. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

It was so referred.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a memorial of the citizens of the city and county of St. Louis, praying that a certain tract of land appropriated by the treaty with the Sauk and Fox Indians, of August 4, 1824, for the use of the half-breeds of those tribes, may be disposed of by the United States agreeably to the original intentions of that treaty; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented two petitions of citizens of South Wheeling, Virginia, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a petition of citizens of Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEWARD presented twenty-four petitions of citizens of New York, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHASE presented nine petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WADE presented seventeen petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CASS presented three petitions of citizens of Michigan, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER presented seven petitions of citizens of Massachusetts, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. UPHAM presented a petition of citizens of Vermont, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COOPER presented the memorial of Stephen Colwell, administrator of Joseph Ball, deceased, praying for special powers of sale and settlement in behalf of the heirs of Joseph Ball, within the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FISH. I present a petition from merchants in New York, asking for the establishment of a mint in that city. Appended to it is a statement showing the amount of gold imported from California to New York since gold was first discovered in the former place. It is an interesting document, and I ask that it may be printed, and that the memorial may lie on the table, as a bill has been reported on the subject.

The memorial was laid on the table; and the motion to print went to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FISH also presented two petitions of citizens of New York, praying that the public lands may be granted, in limited quantities, to actual settlers not possessed of other lands; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Thomas Flannagan, reported it without amendment. He also submitted a report on the subject, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill appropriating land scrip in full and final satisfaction of Virginia military bounty land warrants, reported it with an amendment. He also submitted a report on the bill; which, together with the amendment, was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives further to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants and returning surveys to the General Land Office, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of the Mayor and City Council of the city of Savannah, submitted a report, accompanied by a joint resolution, for surrendering the site of the old Oglethorpe Barracks to the city of Savannah.

The resolution was read a first time and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAWSON. I ask for the immediate passage of this resolution. I will state that the old Oglethorpe Barracks, adjoining the city of Savannah, contain a few acres of land, and were abandoned in consequence of the great sickness of that place. The barracks were removed within the city. The city of Savannah gave the Government nine thousand feet square in the center of the city, and it now asks, that after an abandonment of twenty-five years, these lands, lying waste, may be conveyed to the city.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being offered, it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

Mr. CHASE submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate a statement, showing in detail the expenses incurred and the claims made under the act to amend, and supplementary to the act respecting fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters, distinguishing the expenses incurred and claimed by reason of prosecutions for treason, alleged to have been committed in resistance of said act, from expenses incurred and claimed by reason of other prosecutions for offenses against said act, and for proceedings before and under orders made by commissioners.

BILL PASSED.

The engrossed bill authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to the Pittsburg, Kittanning, and Warren Railroad Company, the right of way over the grounds of the United States at the Alleghany Arsenal, was read a third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BRODHEAD gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the payment of the workmen upon the wings of the Capitol, during the suspension of the work.

PENNSYLVANIA AND OHIO RAILROAD.

On the motion of Mr. WADE, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey the right of way to the Cleveland and Pittsburg, and to the Cleveland, Painesville, and Ashtabula Railroad Companies, through certain lands therein mentioned; and the reported amendments being amended, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. The bill gives to these companies the right of way over the hospital grounds belonging to the United States in the city of Cleveland, in the State of Ohio.

LETTER OF MR. HULSEMANN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. SEWARD on the 14th May, and it was agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, if consistent with the public interests, a copy of a communication made by Mr. Hülsemann, now or late Chargé d'Affaires of the Emperor of Austria, on or about the 29th of April, 1852, to the Secretary of State of the United States, on the occasion of the withdrawal of Mr. Hülsemann from his place as such charge; and also a copy of the reply thereto made by the Secretary of State; and also copies of all other correspondence touching the matters which are the subjects of the said communication of Mr. Hülsemann.

RAILROADS IN MISSOURI.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, the Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. COOPER. As this bill was laid over on Monday at my suggestion, and as I had called for the yeas and nays thereon, I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The call for the yeas and nays was withdrawn, and the amendment of the House of Representatives was concurred in.

ROADS IN MICHIGAN.

On the motion of Mr. FELCH, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land, for the purpose of constructing a road from Saginaw to Montreal river, with a branch from the Grand river, into the same. The Committee on Public Lands reported a substitute for the bill.

Mr. FELCH. I will state that the amendment reported by the committee is in the usual form of these bills, except that it only grants one section instead of six for the purpose of making a road—not a railroad. It goes through a portion of the country where, at the present time, there are no settlements. There is no population along the line of the proposed road, but only at the extremes.

Mr. CHASE. Where is the road?

Mr. FELCH. It is a road from Grand river, in the lower peninsula of Michigan, going thence, by way of the Sault Ste. Marie, to the upper peninsula, through a mineral country just beginning to be opened. There is not a foot of road in the whole northern peninsula of Michigan. This is the first attempt to get a road there. When this bill was originally reported, it was for a road with a branch. Since that time a bill has been passed making a grant for a railroad covering that branch. I wish now to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out that portion which was provided for in the railroad bill which was passed the other day. For that purpose I move to strike out of the amendment the word "Saginaw," and insert "Grand river;" and also to strike out "and of a branch leading to the same from Grand river;" and again, to strike out "one hundred feet," and insert "fifty feet."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The first section of the amendment of the committee, as thus amended, provides:

"That the right of way through the public lands be and the same is hereby granted to the State of Michigan, for the construction of a road from Grand river to the Montreal river, by the way of the Sault Ste. Marie, in said State, with the right also to take the necessary materials of earth, stone, and timber, for the construction thereof, from the public lands of the United States adjacent to said road: Provided, That the right of way shall not exceed fifty feet on each side of the line of said road; and a copy of the survey of said road, made under the direction of the Legislature, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices, respectively, and to the General Land Office at Washington city, within ninety days after the completion of the same."

The amendment of the committee was further amended, on the motion of Mr. FELCH, by inserting a provision that the lands reserved to the United States shall from time to time be offered at public sale, and shall not be subject to entry until so offered.

The amendment as amended was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments were concurred in.

The question was stated to be, Shall this bill be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. CHASE. I should like to inquire of my friend from Michigan, if this road is proposed to be constructed on the same principle which governed the construction of the Maumee road in Ohio? Is the grant a mile wide throughout its extent?

Mr. FELCH. The bill grants alternate sections for a mile in width on each side of the road.

Mr. CHASE. That road, I believe, extends through a considerable tract of country composed almost entirely of public land, and is laid off throughout its entire extent for a mile wide. It was intended, I believe, for a turnpike road. I ask if the same principle prevails in this bill?

Mr. FELCH. It is the same. I think that was a grant of a mile wide for the purpose of making a road.

Mr. DAWSON. I have not even heard the bill read. Do I understand, however, that it is for the purpose of creating and establishing a turnpike road?

Mr. CHASE. I believe it is.

Mr. FELCH. A part of the route will probably very soon require the construction of a plank road. This bill, however, does not define the kind of road which is to be built. It will be a turnpike road, or a plank road, as circumstances require. As it stands now, of course it is competent to make either. The bill makes the same grant as those which were made for the earlier roads in Ohio. The one to which the Senator from Ohio has referred was, I believe, a common turnpike road.

I will state further, that this road is to commence on the Grand river, which is a river flowing in the lower peninsula into Lake Michigan, about midway, perhaps, of the lake. It extends through a portion of country very little of which is sold, and which a few years ago was regarded as very poor land, but which, however, on further investigation, proves to be a good farming country. It is very desirable now that some communication should be had with the settlements upon Grand river. There is none at the present time. The only access now is from the lake. This road is to pass through a region where much of the land is good for cultivation. Other portions of it are pinelands. It extends to the northern peninsula, which is very well known, (and of which I need say nothing,) as a region offering very great inducements on account of its mineral resources. There is within that peninsula not a single mile of road of any description, except roads running back from the river to the mines for half a mile or a mile, made by the individuals engaged in the mining business. There is no access to that country at all, except by water along the lake. The design is at this time to make some provision by which we may be secured in roads such as have been given ordinarily to new Territories on their settlement.

Mr. DAWSON. What is the extent of the road?

Mr. FELCH. I suppose its whole length will be about three hundred miles.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, I think it wrong to undertake to decide this question now, with such a thin Senate. It seems to me that we have descended from railroads to turnpike and plank roads. It is proposed now to build a road three hundred miles in length, through an unsettled country, and to appropriate public lands for that purpose. How many miles on each side of the road is it proposed to take land?

Mr. FELCH. A strip of land a mile wide is granted.

Mr. DAWSON. I dislike to interpose, for I know how unavailing opposition to these bills has been heretofore. But this certainly involves a very important principle. It involves, it seems to me, the same principle which the Cumberland road involved. It is an internal improvement, upon the same principle and to a greater extent. I trust that the Senator from Michigan will permit the bill to lie over until the Senate shall be full. I desire to look into it. We ought not to pass a measure of this kind hastily. I would suggest, therefore, that the bill be passed over, particularly as we might run foul of some of our old principles, Whig or Democratic, and might get up a discussion of the question of internal improvements to-day; and we all know that this is a very bad time to discuss any political question, especially before a thin Senate. I hope the Senator will consent to let the bill lie over for the present.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I think the honorable Senator from Georgia, on reflection, will not require that this bill shall be postponed. He supposes we are coming down from railroads to turnpikes and other roads. Why, as early as 1796, the same thing was done, by a grant for the construction of a road from Wheeling to Limestone—now the town of Maysville—through the State of Ohio. The same thing has been done in almost every one of the Western States. Lands have been granted to them for the purpose of making turnpike and other roads throughout the whole public domain, before railroads were invented. Here is a tract of country, extending along Lake Superior, which, as my colleague truly says, has not a single road throughout its whole extent. The country belongs to the United States, from one end of it to the other. All that is asked is a strip of a mile in width to construct a road, which will be of vast importance to the public property, as well as to the people there. I repeat, I do not think there is one State in the West in which roads of this description have not been made. There is no new principle involved in this bill. The rise in value of the property of the United States which will result from the making of this road, will be certainly, in proportion to the amount of lands granted, as great as the benefit resulting from the making of railroads.

Mr. DAWSON. I understand that thoroughly. I recollect, however, that the Cumberland road was carried on by appropriations from the General Government. It became a great political question; it was one of the test questions down to the year 1836; and certainly it cannot be distinguished from the question now presented to us, because the Cumberland road was built by money appropriated from the Treasury. I am sure the Senator from Michigan will not say that it should be a precedent now for us to appropriate money to build another road like it. This is the first time since I have been on the floor of the Senate, where appropriations so extensive as this, through a country unoccupied and unsettled, were proposed to be made by the Government for the purpose of making a road. This bill proposes to give a strip of land a mile in width, throughout the whole extent, for the purpose of making a road, three hundred miles in length. Towns may be built up within that strip of land, and the State of Michigan may thus derive an immense amount from the sale of town lots in the course of time.

I know that gentlemen from the new States think that this opposition to such bills is possibly unkind; but they ought to recollect that all these lands were paid for out of the common fund. We see now, that according to the legislation proposed to be passed by both branches of Congress, all the public lands are to go, not for the general purposes of the country, but to individuals and States, and in opposition to the rights of all who are settled permanently as citizens, and who have been sustaining the Government for years. According to some propositions before Congress, unless a man shall be driven from his home and the place of his birth into the new States and settle there, he is not permitted to enjoy any portion of his right in the public lands. If we would reflect upon it for a moment, we should not hurry it through so soon. Gentlemen ought to give us an opportunity at least to endeavor to do something to secure the rights of the old States to the public domain—to march up in defense of our rights in opposition to these vast appropriations. I am as unwilling as any gentleman on this floor to embarrass any of the new States in their growth and prosperity; but I do not like to contribute out of the common funds of the country, too much to them. At a time like this, when the Senate is in the condition it is, I think the Senator ought not hastily to press this proposition.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia will allow me to say that he is under a total misapprehension upon this subject. This has no relation to the Cumberland road. In that case appropriations of vast sums of money were made by Congress for a road in Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Ohio—in the old States of the Union. This is no such appropriation. It does not bring up the question of internal improvement. This is a road through the land of the United States. The bill proposes to give land and the management of it to the State of Michigan, for the purpose of making a road, and avoids the question of internal improvement. This bill presents precisely the same question which is involved in every railroad bill that you have before you. It has no relation at all to the question of internal improvement. It brings up the old proprietary question, which we have so often discussed. I thought the position had been abandoned, that the granting of public lands in this way involved the question of internal improvement. If this involves that question, every railroad bill involves it. The gentleman says this road is to be three hundred miles in length. He must recollect that the railroad from Chicago to Cairo is to be nearly four hundred miles.

Mr. DAWSON. I know that.

Mr. CASS. In that case, six sections were granted on each side of the road; in this case only one is asked. Allow me to say to the honorable Senator, that the State of Michigan has had less land granted to her than any State of the Union.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 96.

She has not had one acre except the 500,000 acres granted on her admission into the Union as a State. If this bill should pass, it would give her, in addition to what she has already had, not more than fifty per cent. of what Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois have each received. With the addition of the amount granted by this bill, she will have nothing like what Missouri and Iowa have received. I trust, then, that the honorable Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, I know that Michigan is a very modest State. She claims very little from the legislative or executive departments. She has, however, now, a prospect of heading the Government, and if she will only let her roads remain as they are a little while longer, she may have possibly the benefit of the Executive influence to promote them.

Mr. CASS. If the honorable Senator will only guaranty that, we might abandon the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWSON. If the ballot already had in another assembly [alluding to the ballot taken this morning in the Democratic National Convention for a candidate for the Presidency] is any evidence of a guarantee, the honorable Senator has it. I trust now, that while Michigan is in so prosperous a condition, and everything seems to be going on so smoothly, she will not press the matter too far for fear of a reaction; for the telegraphic dispatches go between here and Baltimore very rapidly, and, if it should be known that this great question of internal improvement were raised here, and that my friend from Michigan is in the front upon that subject, perhaps some of those gentlemen who have a little feeling on that question, might rebel.

It is true, the public property has been appropriated to build a road through Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, but it was upon the principle that it was to advance the value of the public land; and yet the constitutionality of that has been doubted from the beginning to the present day, and it was a party question down to 1836. I recollect that in the presidential controversy of 1836, it was one of the leading points of discussion. I trust that question will not be raised now; but if it be raised it shall not be my fault. I want to keep this question out of discussion. I want no confusion created by it. I do not wish to create any difficulty. I do not wish to throw any obstacle in the way of the race now going on over the Baltimore course.

Mr. SEWARD. I will leave the consideration of affairs at the Baltimore Convention to that distinguished and respectable body, and say a word upon the question before the Senate. It is a simple question. It is a proposition to enrich the United States by making a road through their own lands in a region where there is no road, and never has been any road, and where those who are acquainted with the country know that no road can be made in any other way than in that proposed by this bill. It is in that part of Michigan which adjoins Lake Superior. It is a new country, and if I correctly understand the location of the road, there is no way of passage in the winter season from that region to the interior and settled parts of Michigan, except over the untracked snow. There, I understand, the mail, in the winter season, is carried by trains of dogs over the snow drifts, and the members of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, from that northern region, reach the capital of the State without any roads, and by a very precarious route. It is in that portion of the State of Michigan in which the United States have the largest interest in the national domain. But beyond all that, and what is of vastly more importance, it is in that portion of the State which is adjacent to the copper mines, and the mineral wealth of the Government.

It strikes me that it would be a want of common prudence, and of common sagacity, to let any day pass by when a chance was presented of passing a bill so meritorious as this. My own recollection of the inconveniences that have been suffered in my own State from the want of some such policy as this, inclines me very strongly in favor of this bill. We have a large tract of land in the State of New York, embracing, I should think, one eighth, or one tenth of the whole territory of the State, which lies between the St. Lawrence river on the north, and the Erie canal on the South—large portions of it belonging to the State, and the rest to private proprietors, which has lain unimproved and uncultivated up to this time, being a great drawback upon the resources and prosperity of the State; and all because we have never been able to adopt a system of carrying roads through it by which to promote emigration. The emigration passes north and south of it, leaving those forests in their virgin state, although the land is rich in timber, and adapted to cultivation. I hope we will signalize this day by the passage of an act so wise and so meritorious as this.

Mr. HALE. I suppose when this bill was taken up, it was taken up under the impression that it would not lead to debate, and occupy the time of the Senate. I see that it is causing debate, and though I am in favor of the bill, and in relation to the public lands shall go for giving them all away to everybody, I hope the Senator from Michigan will consent to let it lie over for the present.

Mr. CASS. Take the vote.

Mr. HALE. Well, I have no objection, only if there is a division called for I fear the Chair will announce that there is no quorum.

Mr. CASS. Let the vote be taken.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill till to-morrow.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope that motion will not be agreed to. I have some acquaintance with this bill, and I am sure it is one of the most meritorious that has come before the Senate, or that shall command our attention. The facts have been stated so clearly and succinctly by the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] that it is unnecessary for me to undertake to travel over the same ground.

But there is one thing I will say. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Dawson] says that Michigan is an exceedingly modest State both as relates to legislative and executive patronage. Michigan can speak for herself, and defend herself on all points; but I must say that I cannot reciprocate the compliment which has been given, when speaking of Georgia. It will be borne in mind that Georgia has been more ably represented on this floor than many other States, and has had a Senator whom we all admired and esteemed—in fact, a sort of model Senator. That State has been able recently to get through this body a large appropriation for the removal of obstructions in the Savannah river, and without the least possible objection on the part of Senators. I confess I have felt ashamed that I was considered as having spoken against the interest of Georgia. I happened to enter this Chamber when the Senator from Georgia, who has since resigned, [Mr. BERRIEN,] was making the motion for the consideration of the bill to which I have referred, and I was desirous to hear what the Senator from Georgia, now present, [Mr. Dawson,] would say in its favor. I have never known a bill to come up, making an appropriation for the West, since he has had a seat in this body, that he did not attack it most violently. It is most manifest that whenever a small appropriation, embracing a trifling quantity of land produced by an accretion from a river has been asked for by us, that Senator has invariably taken occasion to attack it right and left, and in the center. And what more has he done? This very morning he has succeeded in getting a bill through this body to surrender to his State a military site belonging to the United States.

The PRESIDENT. That is not the question. The question is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I trust it will not be postponed.

Mr. HALE. I hope Senators will understand my motion as not being made because I am opposed to the passage of the bill, for I am in favor of it, and will vote for it. But when we come to vote, if there is a division I fear we shall find ourselves without a quorum.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. There is a quorum present. Let us have the vote.

Mr. CHASE. I do not propose to go into a discussion on the merits of this bill; but inasmuch as the question I proposed to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FELCH] may have been the unfortunate cause of the debate, and, possibly, may jeopardize the immediate passage of his bill, I feel it due to him to say that, on examining the law granting lands to the State of Ohio for the Maumee road, I find that it gives double the quantity which this bill proposes to grant to Michigan; for that law grants two entire miles in width, one on each side of a tract one hundred and twenty feet in width; whereas, the bill now before the Senate proposes to give only one mile, in alternate sections on either side of the road, thus making a grant of only one mile in width altogether.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. CLEMENS gave notice that he should, on the bill commonly known as the homestead bill coming before the Senate for consideration, offer an amendment enacting that all public lands of the United States, which shall have been in the market for ten, fifteen, twenty-five, and thirty years and upwards, prior to the time of application to enter the same under the provisions of this act, and still remaining unsold, shall be subject to sale, at the respective prices of one dollar, seventy-five cents, fifty cents, twenty-five cents, and twelve and a half cents per acre. He submitted his amendment informally for the purpose of having it printed.

NAUTICAL ALMANAC.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up from the table a resolution of inquiry relative to the Nautical Almanac. It is important that it should be passed, and I hope there will be no objection to the motion. It will not give rise to a minute's debate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to inform the Senate where and at what Observatory the observations and calculations for the "Nautical Almanac" are made?

Why the same are not made at the National Observatory at Washington?

What expenses are necessary therefor, except the pay of the Superintendent?

What progress has been made towards making a Nautical Almanac?

For how long a period of time the calculations of the first almanac are expected to extend?

Whether it is necessary to the perfection of the "Nautical Almanac" to make observations at more than one Observatory, and if so, are they made at two Observatories, and if so, at what two?

Whether any persons except the Superintendent have been paid for services in preparing the "Nautical Almanac," and if so, how many, and what compensation have they received?

When it is expected that a "Nautical Almanac" will be prepared for publication?

What improvement, if any, is it expected the American "Nautical Almanac," when published, will have over the English?

Is it expected that any errors of former astronomers or observers are to be corrected, or any new means suggested by which more precision is to be given to astronomical science?

After the first American "Nautical Almanac" is published, will the succeeding numbers probably cost as much, or more than the first?

Will the same time be necessary for the second and subsequent numbers respectively, as for the first?

Mr. MANGUM. This matter has already engaged, to a considerable extent, the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] as also of my colleague, [Mr. BADGER.] They have information peculiar to themselves on the subject.

I regret to hear this morning, for the first time, that my colleague is confined to his room by a severe attack of illness, which I hope, however, is only temporary. Under these circumstances, I think it would be only courteous, as this matter has been already discussed, and has excited considerable attention, to allow it to lie over for the present.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will allow it to lie over.

Mr. HALE. Will Senators allow me for a single moment? This is a simple resolution of inquiry. We have already expended upwards of $38,000 on this Nautical Almanac; we are now asked to spend $19,000 more this year on it; and I moved this resolution some days since, simply for the purpose of obtaining information. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] then said "let it lie over;" but I have had some conversation with him since, and I do not suppose that he would now have the slightest objection to it. I desire to have the information, because if we are to spend $19,000 more, I wish to know what it is to be spent for.

Mr. MANGUM. I have no objection to the resolution; but there are interrogatories contained in it which may be susceptible of an interpretation which may seem to convey a degree of censure, and perhaps my colleague would desire some modification of some part of the resolution; and I think that as he has taken apparently a very decided interest in this matter, it should lie over till he has an opportunity to be present. I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution till to-morrow.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the resolution may lie over. It is a mere act of courtesy which I think is due to the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER.] I have not the least possible objection to its passage, but I think it will be better that it should lie over till to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I surely could not be guilty of any want of courtesy to any one in this body, and especially to the Senator from North Carolina. Let it lie over.

The motion to postpone the further consideration of the resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM MONEY.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 440, for the relief of William Money. It is to enable him to refer his accounts to the Secretary of the Treasury for settlement. The case has been examined with great care by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] and he has reported a bill for the settlement of his accounts. That gentleman is in the city, and is in great want of a settlement of his accounts. I hope the bill will be taken up and passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall inquire into the alleged seizure of forty-five horses in California, by orders of General Kearny, said to be the property of William Money, and the value of the horses thus seized, and which were appropriated to the use of the army of the United States under the command of General Kearny, and pay to the said Money, out of any money in the Treasury, the value of each horse owned by him, and so seized and used.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the bill in the same manner that similar bills have sometimes been amended, by inserting in the proper place the words "without interest."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THOMAS FLANNAGAN.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I now move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Thomas Flannagan, which was reported from the Committee on Pensions this morning. The person to whom the bill grants relief is eighty-eight or eighty-nine years of age. He is very poor, and receives a pension of only forty dollars from the State of Pennsylvania. He has been three or four years urging the passage of this bill, which has passed the House of Representatives on two or three occasions, and has been reported favorably upon by committees in the Senate. I hope the Senate will not hesitate to pass this bill if they are satisfied that it ought to pass.

There being no objection, the motion to take up the bill was agreed to, and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Thomas Flannagan upon the list of invalid pensioners at the rate of eight dollars per month during his life, to commence on the fifth day of July, 1847. It was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HALE. I want to perform another act of courtesy toward the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] who is sick, and in his absence to move that when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senate will not pass over private bill day. It is very important that we should not lose that day, and I hope the motion will be postponed until to-morrow. The Private Calendar has got behind in consequence of the deficiency bill having taken the time that belonged to private bills for several weeks past. I hope we may have to-morrow for the consideration of private bills.

The question was taken, and, on a division, there were—ayes 20, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

LEVEE ACROSS THE RIVER SAN DIEGO.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 282. It is a bill to provide for building a levee across the mouth of the river San Diego, to divert it into False Bay. When this bill was up, some time since, it was postponed on my motion; I have since examined it, and I withdraw any objection that I may have had to it. With the consent of the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] I therefore move that it be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time. It enacts that the sum of $30,000 be appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, to build a levee across the mouth of the river San Diego, to turn it from the bay of San Diego into its former channel, in False Bay; provided, that no portion of the appropriation shall be expended for the object indicated, unless a contract can be made with responsible parties, giving ample security, to complete the entire work for the sum named.

The bill having been considered as in Committee of the Whole, was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I submitted a resolution a short time since, for the amendment of the rules of the Senate. If the Senate will act upon that now, I think they will find for the residue of term it will aid very much in the dispatch of business. I will merely state the object of amendment, which is to allow a motion to be made to lay an amendment to a bill or a resolution upon the table, without carrying the bill or resolution itself with it. If such an amendment is made to our rules, then the amendment which is proposed to a bill, and which might otherwise cause a discussion for weeks, and to which the Senate may be wholly averse, can be disposed of, and the Senate can go on with the consideration of the bill. It will be found, if we do not adopt some such amendment as this, that when the general appropriation bill comes up, we shall be engaged weeks in discussing amendments which, by such a rule as this, could be immediately disposed of.

Mr. CLEMENS. I would like to have the resolution read.

It was read accordingly, as follows:

"Resolved, That the thirtieth rule be amended by adding thereto the following:

"On motion, any amendment offered to a bill or resolution may be laid on the table without carrying the bill or resolution with it."

Mr. SEWARD. I hope that it will lie over.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on taking it up.

Mr. CLEMENS. I hope it will not be taken up. It seems to me it is not a good time to discuss our rules when there is barely a quorum present. I think we should not undertake to make or alter our rules until we have a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well; an objection is enough for me. I withdraw the motion.

DUPLICATE LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to postpone the prior orders, for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 301, reported by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS,] from the Committee on Private Land Claims. It is very brief; the title is, "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue duplicate land warrants in certain cases." It arose in this way: I presented to the Senate the petition of an individual who had the misfortune to lose his warrant. On examination, in committee, it was thought that the law under which that warrant was issued was an exception to the general rule, the Secretary of the Interior not having power to issue a duplicate warrant under it. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] reported, from the committee, this bill, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue duplicate warrants in certain cases. These are all the facts of the case; and as this bill will afford relief to the petitioner, I hope it will be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It enacts that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to issue duplicate land warrants in all cases in which the original land warrant shall have been lost or destroyed, upon due proof of such loss or destruction.

Mr. FELCH. I should like to know something about this bill. I do not understand that the Secretary of the Interior has the right, in ordinary cases, to issue duplicate land warrants in case of loss. I do not understand that to be the fact under the general law; but I am well aware that applications are frequently made to Congress in cases of loss, proof is adduced, and special laws are passed.

Mr. DAVIS. I have only to say, that the individual who has lost his warrant in this case applied to the Department, and they said they were satisfied they had no authority to issue a duplicate. He then came here by petition, and that petition was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and was taken up in that committee in my absence; and, as I understand, the committee have thought that it was better to pass a general law, in consequence of the omission in the old law granting the warrants, to provide for the case of the loss of any of them, so as to place these warrants on the same footing as others, than to pass a law upon each individual case. For that reason the Senator from Alabama was directed to report the bill which is before us.

Mr. FELCH. I would be glad to know if that bill was recommended by the Department?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know. The Senator from Alabama can say how that is. The business was done in the committee when I was not present.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in the clause "upon due proof of such loss or destruction," the word "due," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "satisfactory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS. I do not know that it is necessary to add anything to what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis] in relation to this matter. This bill was reported upon the petition of Lucretia Barton, who made proof to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that her land warrant had been lost. He decided that, under the law, in this particular case, he had no right to issue a duplicate. This bill was reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims for the purpose of saving Congress the necessity of passing a separate bill upon every similar case. It authorizes the Commissioner, upon satisfactory proof, to issue a duplicate land warrant, in cases where they have been lost. It is intended simply to save us from the necessity of passing a bill for every case of the kind which may arise. It leaves the issuing of the duplicates, as all other cases are left, to the discretion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon satisfactory proof being made.

Mr. FELCH. I think it would be better to allow this bill to lie over until we can look a little further into the matter. The bill applies to all bounty land warrants which have been issued under all the laws which have ever been passed.

Mr. CLEMENS. There is but one class to which the principle does not already apply.

Mr. FELCH. I think the Senator is under a misapprehension in regard to that. There is no class of cases in which the Department has the power which the bill proposes to confer; and the bill, in its terms, applies to all classes, and not merely to an isolated class of cases. The question here is, whether we will give to the Department, in the general language of the bill, the power to give duplicates in the cases of all land warrants which have been lost. It sometimes becomes a very nice question to decide whether a party who has had a land warrant is entitled to land; because, under the recent law, and under the law now, all land warrants become assignable, and it becomes frequently an important question, when a party cannot produce a warrant, to determine whether it has been lost or assigned, and is in the hands of another bona fide holder. I desire to look further into the matter before I shall be willing to adopt the principle in the full length to which this goes; and therefore I would prefer that the subject should be postponed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think my friend from Alabama had better permit the bill to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands for their examination.

Mr. CLEMENS. It has been reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it affects, as the Senator from Michigan has intimated, our general land system; and therefore I think it had better receive the examination of the Committee on Public Lands also.

Mr. CLEMENS. I will offer an amendment to obviate that objection. The bill arises from an application for a revolutionary land warrant. I have a letter from the Commissioner, in which he states that there is no law existing authorizing the issuing of duplicates in cases of revolutionary land warrants. Now I propose to amend the bill so as to confine it to those cases. I presume there can be no objection to that. I move to amend by inserting after the word "cases," the words "of revolutionary land warrants," so as to make it read that "the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized to issue duplicate land warrants in all cases of revolutionary land warrants in which the original warrants have been lost or destroyed."

Mr. DAVIS. Is this a revolutionary case?

Mr. CLEMENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FELCH. The same rule applies to all others.

Mr. CLEMENS. I do not see any necessity for restricting the bill, except for the objection made to it. I think it ought to apply to all such cases, and it would save us a great deal of trouble.

Mr. FELCH. Let it lie over.

Mr. CLEMENS. Very well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think my friend from Alabama had better modify the bill so as to make it relate only to the particular case.

Mr. CLEMENS. I have no authority to do it. I have reported it as instructed by the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Had it not better be recommittees, to see if it cannot be converted into a bill for the particular case? The bill as it stands would open inquiries into transactions fifty or sixty years ago, and how many could be, and how many might be, brought before the Department without looking through the revolutionary satisfactions for bounty land claims, nobody can tell; and how many frauds might be practiced, nobody can tell. I think, therefore, that it would have been much better to have made it for the individual case, than to open the investigations which might go from the beginning of the Government into those inquiries in regard to alleged losses so many years past. I should prefer that we should have a little more time to look into the matter.

Mr. CLEMENS. I have no objection to letting the bill lie over, but the objection made by the Senator from Kentucky amounts to none at all. This opens no case. It simply transfers the power of issuing the duplicates from Congress to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Petitioners come here, and upon less proof than the law requires, get their warrants passed every session. This is throwing a guard around the issuing of the warrants.

The proof that would be required at the Department is never required here. The claimants bring such proof here as satisfies the committee; the committee report on the case, and not one in twenty-five Senators, or members of the other House, know what the proof is. The object of this bill is to require strict proof in every case, and that proof under it will be stronger than that required when the individual cases come before Congress. I have no objection however to the bill's going over.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Here is the difficulty. It ought to be investigated and ascertained whether the warrants were originally assignable, and to ascertain also how the records of their assignability have been kept; showing the manner in which entries and grants have been made—whether in the name of the assignee, or of the original holder of the warrant. If we are to ascertain these things before we act—if there have not been proper records kept of these things—the idea which I wished to suggest to the Senator from Alabama, was, that at this late day, a claim might be brought forward upon allegation that the warrant was lost, and if the records have not been kept accurately, you may not, particularly after the burnings which we have had, be able to go back fifty or sixty years to ascertain whether the original warrant was satisfied, unless you go page by page over the patent-book to find the patent.

Mr. CLEMENS. I would inquire of the Senator, who is most competent to find out that information from the records, the Commissioner, who has them, or Congress, who never look at them and know nothing about them?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose it is the duty of Congress in every individual case, to satisfy itself that the warrant was lost. I should suppose that would be the duty of every committee that made the examination upon an individual application for the renewal of a warrant; and I should therefore say, that the particular examination of each individual case—if gentlemen do their duty, and the presumption is that they do—would be a great deal better than passing a general law where the records may be so defective from burnings, as I remarked, that you cannot read them through. All I want is, to ascertain how the matter stands before you legislate. I am not against giving this man a duplicate for his warrant, if he lost it, or passing a general law, if it can be properly guarded, to give it to everybody who has a just claim against the Government.

I will take this occasion to remark that I am told that there is among the Executive Departments a practice of keeping everything a secret that would give a good claim against the Government. I am against that, from the beginning to the end. I would make all the public records as open as the noon-day sun, and every just claim against the Government should be paid. I would not care in whose hands a claim might be found, it should be paid if the records of the Government would show that it was just. I would have no governmental secrets to cheat anybody out of his rights; but while I am for doing that, I am for guarding the Treasury, and the public lands also, against all improper claims. I hope, therefore, as the Senator has said he is willing to have this thing investigated, that the bill may lie over until we can have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to postpone the farther consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the vote is taken on that, I wish simply to say, that I believe the case which I have in my mind, which was presented to the consideration of the Senate, is free from the objections raised here. Perhaps what I am about to say, may not apply to the passage of a general law; but I wish to satisfy my friend from Kentucky that this is a just case. The land warrant was issued within the last three years—perhaps within a shorter time than that. It was addressed by the land office, or by whoever had charge of the matter, to a certain gentleman, who undertook to do this business for the lady in whose behalf, as an heiress, the warrant was granted. The warrant never came to her. She never has had it—never saw it. But somehow, in passing through the hands of this gentleman, it was lost, and has never been found. We have his deposition to that effect. He is as respectable a man as is in the United States, and there is not one of a higher moral character in the Union. He says that it has somehow got lost, and that he, after great search, has been wholly unable to find it. The consequence is, that the lady to whom I have referred cannot get the land. I wish to see a law made providing for the case; but I have no objection to the postponement of this bill for the present.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned until Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 4, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Tuesday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the call upon committees for reports.

Mr. SCUDDER, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of Thomas Macy and fifty others, citizens of Nantucket, Massachusetts, asking satisfaction for French spoliation committed upon their whaling-ships by France prior to the year 1800; which was laid on the table.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I believe there is not a quorum present. I move a call of the House to see whether there is.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House, on Tuesday, referred to the Committee of the Whole the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands, making further provision for the satisfaction of the Virginia military land warrants. I do not propose to ask that any action be had upon it at this time, nor perhaps at a very early day. My object is simply to keep the bill within the control of a majority of the House. I propose to call it up at some remote day—at some time when it will not interfere with any important business which may be before the House.

The SPEAKER. The motion, unless there be objection, will be entered upon the Journal. The question now before the House is upon the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] that there be a call of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman to allow me to submit a privileged motion. We see our thin condition, and therefore I move, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. JOHNSON's motion, and it was agreed to.

DEPOSITS WITH THE STATES.

Mr. STANLY, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced bill No. 277, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit with the several States the fourth installment of the public money directed to be made with said States by the act approved June 23d, 1836; which was read the first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

On motion by Mr. HASCALL, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House the papers in the case of Alanson Pool, for the purpose of reference to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Mary Bawry, and a bill for the relief of Mary Pearson; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, committed to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and, with the reports accompanying, ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is improper to attempt to do any business in this thin condition of the House. There are gentlemen who wish to make speeches in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and this is about as harmless business as any in which we can engage, [laughter,] except to adjourn and walk about the streets. I therefore hope that the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and proceed with these speeches.

Mr. BELL. I wish to refer some bills—

[Cries of "No! no!" "Question! question!"]

Mr. OUTLAW. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. It seems to me that we have not a quorum here. Are gentlemen here desirous of making speeches instead of going into committee for the purpose of hearing those speeches, they can pursue the course which has been followed before, and write them out and publish them. That privilege has been generally granted.

Mr. STANLEY. It requires a quorum to do business. It does not require a quorum to do nothing. [Laughter.] Speech-making is tantamount to doing nothing.

The question was then taken upon Mr. OUTLAW's motion to adjourn, and there were—yeas 26, noes 63.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is the pending question.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to Senate bill No. 3, entitled "An act granting the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State."]

The question then being upon the suspension of the rules,

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, demanded tellers; which were not ordered, only 23 gentlemen rising in the affirmative.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is perfectly evident, from the experiments we have made in counting, that there is not a quorum present. I am not willing, knowing that fact, that the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. If there is no quorum, we have no right to adjourn until Monday.

Mr. JONES. I ask for a division upon the question of the House resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 60, noes 27.

No quorum voting.

Mr. OUTLAW. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let us have the yeas and nays upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, and that will tell the House whether we have a quorum or not.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 24, nays 86.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, moved a call of the House, which was not agreed to.

Upon the motion of Mr. ORR, the House then adjourned till Monday next at twelve o'clock, m.

The title of the bill having been amended to read as above, it was read a third time and passed.

NAVIGATION OF THE UPPER MISSISSIPPI.

On the motion of Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to improve the navigation of the Upper Mississippi.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce. I make this motion because the Senate, the other day, decided in the case of the bill to repair the Cumberland dam, on the Ohio, introduced by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] that it would not act upon bills of this character unless they were reported upon by a committee. I feel a deep interest in the passage of this bill, and hope it will receive the early and favorable action of the Committee and Senate.

It was so referred.

DAM IN THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to suspend the prior orders, for the purpose of acting upon the bill to provide for the repair and improvement of the dam at the head of Cumberland Island, in the Ohio river.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHASE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "repair and improve," and inserting the word "remove." This bill contemplates an appropriation of $50,000 for the repair of the Cumberland dam, in the Ohio river, which is pretty well known to the navigators of that stream. I recollect very well, when this matter was under consideration a year or two ago, that the Senator from Mississippi, not now here, (Colonel Jefferson Davis,) stated, as the result of a personal examination of the position and construction of this dam, that its repair would prove a greater hindrance and obstruction of the navigation of that river than the entire removal of it would be. At the time this bill, or rather a similar proposition connected with the river and harbor bill, was first introduced, I was in favor of it; but since that period I have conversed a good deal with persons engaged in the navigation of that river, and am perfectly satisfied that the objections urged by the Senator from Mississippi were well founded, and that the existence of this dam in the river is a more serious obstruction than its removal would be. The dam was constructed under the authority of the General Government, and, having created an obstruction to the navigation, the Government ought to remove it. It should not be repaired. We ought not to attempt a work which is subject, in consequence of the peculiar circumstances of the river, to frequent and serious injury, and thus subject the Treasury to great expense for repairs, especially when, whenever any portion of it is swept away, an obstruction will be created altogether greater than the natural difficulties in the way of the navigation. It is for this reason that I have moved the amendment I have proposed, which I trust will meet with the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I doubt whether the honorable member from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] has made himself fully acquainted with all the facts in this case. It is true that this dam has been constructed by the Government, but it was not placed in the Ohio river without application from those who are engaged in navigating that river; it was not placed there without a supposition on the part of Congress that the work would be beneficial and useful to the navigation of the river. Well, this, of itself, proves that there was an obstruction at that spot to the navigation of the river; there was a want of water; the river spread itself out there to an unusual width, and there was an island near the spot where the Cumberland river unites with the Ohio. The dam was built from that island to the north shore, in order to turn the waters into the south channel of the river, and thus sweep away this bar which constituted the obstruction, and which had been formed by the accumulation of deposit from the Cumberland river. I believe that it answered this purpose very well until it gave way. Will the Senator observe that while I have not the particulars of an elaborate report precisely in my mind, yet I think I recollect sufficient of it to enable me to say, that, since the construction of that work, the obstacles originally complained of on that side of the river have increased; the water is shallower, and there is really more necessity for keeping the south channel open at this moment than there was originally, previous to the construction of the work.

If I recollect the substance of the report made on this subject by the Engineer Department, it is substantially this: that the only mode of restoring a convenient navigation, is to repair the dam. The gentleman seems to suppose that the Government is under some obligation to take this dam out of the river. It was placed there by the wish and request of those who navigated that river; but still, if it is an obstacle to the navigation, I have no particular objection to its removal at the expense of the Government. I apprehend that the member from Ohio is mistaken in his view of the subject, however, and that the people will come here as soon as that dam is removed and ask to have it replaced, because the depth of water is not sufficient for purposes of navigation. Now, by compressing the water of the Ohio into the south channel, which is the narrower one, that, uniting with the waters of the Cumberland river, which sweep through, carries the bar out of the way.

There is some formation below; but that must be dealt with as well as you can. Similar formations occur in almost all cases where there are obstructions of this sort. But I apprehend that if the Senator will read the report of the engineer, he will find that his mind was very clear on this subject, and that he stated that the best mode of removing the obstruction was to repair the old dam.

Mr. DOWNS. I entirely concur in the suggestion made by the honorable Senator from Ohio, that the proper mode of acting in this case is to remove the dam entirely. I think the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, had he seen the spot, had he passed over it, and viewed the channel; as many others have who have passed there, would come to the same conclusion. The truth is, that the purpose for which the dam was made has failed entirely; and the best way to get clear of the obstruction is to remove it. It has failed for this reason: The object was to throw sufficient water into the other channel to make it navigable for the boats. That has failed entirely, because it is so far stopped up as to become an infinitely worse channel than it formerly was. It is so much stopped up, both above and below the mouth of the Cumberland river, that I believe it has never been used at all. Above the mouth, the one at which the boats used to pass, even at low water, I believe now they never think of using it at low water at all; and it seems to me that, both above and below the mouth of the river, the channel is so much filled up that, even if you make the dam anew, the original object never can be obtained of making the channel around the other side. Nobody pretends at low water to pass through that channel. It is not used at all. The only remedy is, to remove the dam, so that the channel where the dam now is can be restored to what it was. Since that dam was made material changes have taken place in the channel on the other side of the river, which have lessened it materially, and it seems to be entirely filling up. Probably, if this obstruction were removed the main channel would be on the same side of the island where the dam now is. At any rate, I feel satisfied, so much has the channel filled up, that if the dam were repaired to make the channel on the other side, you would have to dig it up. I therefore think the proper course is to remove the dam entirely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I regret very much to differ from my friend from Louisiana. I am, to be sure, not a professional engineer; but I am inclined to think that, if I had been brought up to the business, I would have made a pretty good one.

Mr. CASS. Arithmetically?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Any little mathematical attainment which any gentleman has, would enable him to get along in that business tolerably well. But it has so happened that I have passed frequently, at low stages of water, by this dam, and my information differs entirely from that of my friend from Louisiana. I passed up on the Kentucky chute, as it is called, or the one on the south side of the river, and my information was, that that chute, at a time when the river was low, was better than the other. But, it so happens that we have professional information. I hold in my hand the report of Lieutenant Colonel Long, an engineer, who examined into the matter in February last; and I think that we ought, when gentlemen differ here, to allow experts to speak, and rely upon what they say upon the subject. But, sir, allow me, before I read some passages from this report, to state, that I know, from personal observation, that, at the lower end of the island, where the river is, perhaps, a mile and a half or two miles wide, it spreads out to a very great extent. The deposit from the Cumberland river has formed that island, and by the river spreading out as it does, you have at the lower end of the island, unless you concentrate the water, as shown by Lieutenant Colonel Long's report, a shallow. If you do not concentrate it, you will not be able to get up at any time when the water is low. He further states, what is the fact, that, unless you keep up this improvement, the best way to get into the Cumberland river will be to go up on the Illinois chute, pass round the head of Cumberland Island, and then go down two miles to get into the mouth of the Cumberland. The consequence would be, without this repair, to break up the direct navigation of the Cumberland river, and throw it over this circuitous route.

But I will not detain the Senate by giving the facts which have been proved to me satisfactorily by my own personal examination and knowledge. I rely upon what Colonel Long reports. The Senate will be kind enough to listen to it. He classifies his report under various heads. What I am about to read he classifies under the head of "Removal of the old dam, and its probable consequences." Here is what he says will result from that:

"From the facts adduced as above, it may be readily inferred that the removal of the dam will be attended by results of the following import, viz:

"1. Low-water navigation can only be had for boats bound either to Smithland or the Cumberland river, except by passing upward from the lower end of Cumberland, and between the same and the Kentucky shore, about two miles, to Smithland."

That will be one result. You will have to go round this island. The second result, which he states, is:

"The depth of the pool above the dam will be reduced to such an extent that the shoals, &c., at Stewart's Island, the Sisters Island, &c., (four to twelve miles above the dam,) which were formerly ranked among the most difficult shoals of the Ohio, will require extensive works, in order to render them navigable in low water."

You have, according to previous parts of this report, by this improvement obtained a head-water of about four feet. That is the statement. If you draw off these four feet of head-water, every gentleman will at once see the effect that will be produced upon the river by thus drawing it off, and forming shoals, as is stated, from four to twelve miles above the dam, which constituted, prior to this improvement, some of the greatest obstructions to the navigation of the river. That is the second effect which he says the removal of the dam will have. The third is:

"The shoals between Cumberland Island and the Illinois shore, which were exceedingly formidable prior to the erection of the dam, and still remain unimproved, will require works on a large and expensive scale, in order to render them passable for steamers in low stages of the river."

There is the very fact which I have already stated, that the shoals between the Illinois shore and the island unimproved, if you take this dam out, will reduce to low water, and you will not be able to pass over them. But you obviate that difficulty by concentrating the water in the Kentucky chute, which is narrow, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has said, and by concentrating it in that narrow chute you deepen it so as to avoid the shoal between the island and the Illinois shore. All that is so perfectly plain upon physical principles, that nobody can deny it. And here the effect is stated by the engineer. That is the third consequence of the removal of this dam. The fourth is:

"A low-water channel from the foot of Cumberland island, upward to the mouth of Cumberland river, must be provided for and kept open, in order to insure a navigable communication with this river in very low stages."

That is one of the other facts which I also stated; that, if you scatter the water over a mile and a half or two miles, you so diminish the depth that, as Lieutenant Long tells you, to get into the Cumberland river from below, you will have to expend a large sum of money for the purpose of opening the shoal. I hope that this report will be considered satisfactory in all its bearings, and if gentlemen desire the whole of it to be read, I hope it may be done. It is a very satisfactory report, and shows all the facts, and I think we ought to depend upon it. I am satisfied from local information—from letters which I have received—that it is a very important matter to improve the dam. I will further remark, that my information is, that it will take double, triple, perhaps quadruple more to remove it than it will to improve it. The reason why that will cost so much more is, that you do not have to "dive into the bottom of the deep

Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honor by the locks," but you have to dive after the stones at the bottom of the river; and everybody knows that the process of grappling with the rocks for the purpose of their removal will cost more than to bring rocks from the shore and put them into the gap formed by the breakage of the dam. If economy, therefore, is to be consulted on the subject, it will be vastly cheaper to fill up the gap than to attempt to take out the rocks which have been deposited and carry them to the shore.

Mr. CASS. It is very obvious to me that this whole discussion confirms yet more and more what has often been said here of the error of trying to administer, instead of legislating. Here are different statements made by gentlemen equally conversant with the state of things there; one affirming that the dam should be repaired, another, that it should be taken away. I appeal to the whole Senate, if we are competent to determine that question? I ask again, if it is not the office of the proper Department to do this? We ought to hold the Department responsible, and let it ascertain the facts. Our appropriation, in such a case as this, should be made general, holding the Secretary of War responsible, and he holding the officers of his Department responsible to take the correct course; to remove the dam, or repair the dam, as circumstances may require. We are not in a condition to administer; and this is a mere question of administration. Let us make the proper appropriation, and hold the proper Department responsible for the plan adopted, and the money expended. That is the course Congress ought to take, and that is the course I hope it will take.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not a particle of objection to that course; but we have the report of the engineer, which I have just read. The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, the other day, because of the want of that report. The committee have reported the bill back, with the engineer's report. But, if it will relieve the subject, and prevent a tedious discussion, I am perfectly willing to accede to a proposition to leave the question of removal or repair to the Department.

Mr. SHIELDS. The remarks of my honorable friend from Michigan are very forcible. The communications which I receive from my constituents, tell me that if this dam is removed, it will injure the channel in other parts of the river above, as well as below the island, and that, so far from being a benefit to the Ohio river, except in one particular point—the point to which one of the gentlemen who have spoken, alluded—it is destined to have a permanently injurious effect upon the navigation of the river both above and below. I am not prepared to make this statement of my own knowledge, but my constituents have given me this information.

I will ask the honorable Senator from Kentucky this question: What special reason is there for a special appropriation for this particular purpose? Why is not a general appropriation for the improvement of the river better? Why not wait for the general appropriation, and have it so applied as to accomplish all that the gentleman wants? I am not prepared to oppose this appropriation, but I am not prepared to vote for it now, because the information I have is of such a character as to satisfy me that the removal of this dam is destined to be injurious to the navigation of the Ohio river, and that the only object of it is to divert the channel from one side of the river to the other, or to attempt such diversion. Such an attempt was once made. This dam was erected for that purpose. It has failed to accomplish the purpose in view, but it has formed a new channel, as it were; and the whole object, I am told, is now to remove the dam, in order to change the channel to where it originally was. I must say that such legislation is very singular.

But I rose to ask that this measure should be postponed until we legislate generally on the question of western rivers. I see no special reason for urging this measure now. It ought to be included in the general bill, and not in this special and particular bill for this single purpose. Besides, if we legislate in this way, we anticipate the legislation of the other House on the bill which has been prepared there for the improvement of the Ohio river. I am a little afraid, that gentlemen who vote for this may, perchance, not aid us in carrying the other bill through this body, when it comes here. I intend to move to lay this bill on the table for the present, until we inquire more particularly into the subject; but, if the gentleman wishes to reply, I will not make the motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois wants to know, why this dam shall not be allowed to remain as it is, until its repair can be included in the general operation of the bill, which he anticipates, to provide for the improvement of the navigation of the whole river. Now I will tell him the reason why a special and particular bill has been introduced upon this subject.

It is very well known, Mr. President, that some of us believe that there is not power in the General Government to make appropriations for the improvement of streams generally—even such a stream as the Ohio river. All persons of that description, and who entertain opinions of that kind, will not vote for a general bill. But individuals entertaining opinions of that sort, according to the manifestations of sentiments heretofore given in this Chamber, have said that, as the Government put the dam in the river, the Government was chargeable for the obstruction, if it amounted to an obstruction; and the Government, therefore, should remedy its own act. They say, that if by the action of the Government, wrongful in its nature, (if it is so regarded,) an injury has been inflicted upon the navigation interests of the States interested in that river, the Government ought to repair that injury. It was to meet opinions of that class that this bill, separate and apart from the general appropriation bill, was introduced. It seems to me that this was a sufficient reason for a movement separate and apart from the general subject of appropriating money to improve rivers, and justifies the introduction of this bill just as it stands. It was in that view that a bill was passed some two or three years ago, when introduced by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL.] It was at that time that the sentiments, to which I have called the attention of the Senate, were promulgated. It was then said that this dam, or this improvement, constituted an exception which should stand upon its own merits, in consequence of the prior action of the Government. That, I hope, sufficiently answers the objection made by the Senator from Illinois.

Now, if we delay this bill until the general appropriation bill goes through, when is it expected that that will happen? Nobody can tell. Why, if it should take as long to pass the general appropriation bill as it has taken to pass the deficiency bill, we perhaps will see the end of the session before it gets through. If you postpone this appropriation until that time, I ask Senators what portion of the season will be left in which any work which will be beneficial to the river can be done? I am informed, and all of us may be informed if we look into our papers, that the river is now getting down. It will soon attain low-water mark. It will soon be in that position where this money can be most judiciously expended, if Congress intends to make the appropriation. The reason why I have urged it from time to time has been to set the Executive Departments of the Government at work making provisions to avail themselves of the low water which must soon take place. The river usually reduces itself by the last of this month, so that this money can then be most judiciously expended, if it is to be expended at all. This reason is conclusive upon the subject of immediate action, if you intend to do anything. If you do not pass this bill now, if you let it remain and wait for the general appropriation bill, the whole season will have gone by before the bill is passed. And then, when the appropriation is made, you will have cold weather and high water to encounter, and you can do nothing until next summer. These are conclusive reasons why, if you intend to do anything, now is the time. You ought not to postpone it, but act upon it, for these reasons, separate and apart from the general appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. BUTLER suggested that an Executive session would be desirable to him.

Mr. HALE said he had no desire to trespass now on the time of the Senate, and would therefore give way for an Executive session.

Mr. SHIELDS moved the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. RUSK suggested that it would be better to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD hoped the bill would not be postponed indefinitely. If it were postponed until to-morrow, or laid on the table temporarily, it could be taken up at any time; whereas an indefinite postponement would kill the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS said his only object was to ascertain what provision might be made by the House for this purpose. He therefore withdrew the motion to postpone indefinitely, and moved to lay the bill on the table, so that it could be taken up at any time.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business. I have received a communication from the State Department, which, perhaps, makes it absolutely necessary that I should submit that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

After some time spent in the consideration of Executive business, the doors were reopened—And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 7, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

INDIGENT INSANE.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 76, making a grant of land to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are various bills upon the Speaker's table reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in relation to the Territories. I propose to take them up and pass them, if there be no objection. If there be any objection, I intend to move a suspension of the rules upon each one of them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will recollect that we are now acting, for one hour at least, under a special order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it not in order to move a suspension of the rules at any time on Monday?

The SPEAKER. It is not, in the opinion of the Chair, so long as the House is acting upon a special order, growing out of a suspension of the rules. We must dispose of one suspension, before we can make another.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Chair or myself does not understand the question before the House. Is this a proposition which was introduced under a suspension of the rules, in its present stage?

The SPEAKER. It was admitted under a suspension of the rules, and was made a special order under that suspension.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the proposition under which it was introduced?

The SPEAKER. It is that one hour shall be devoted to the reception of reports from committees—one each morning until all the committees shall have been called through; and this was adopted on a resolution introduced and passed under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What becomes of the resolution of my colleague, [Mr. HARRIS,] proposing to fix the day for our final adjournment? Does that come in at the end of the hour?

The SPEAKER. That will be the first business in order at the end of the morning hour, and it will be the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES. When that is disposed of, will it be competent for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] to call up his territorial business?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. JONES. I wish to inquire if the bill which has been postponed until to-day, comes necessarily in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It belongs to the business of the morning hour. It was a report from the Committee on Public Lands, admitted under the special order assigning one hour for the reception of reports. Its consideration was, by unanimous consent, postponed until this morning, and a motion to recommit is now pending.

Mr. JONES. But suppose we had got through with the call of committees, it would not come in then. It was postponed to this day, and the postponement took it out of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the consideration of the bill should be confined to the morning hour. It would be a new proposition if the morning hour had been disposed of.

Mr. JONES. I think the postponement would certainly take it out of the morning hour, if we had passed on to other business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair replies again to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] that even if the special order in relation to the morning hour was exhausted, this bill being a report from a committee, and postponed until to-day, would be confined to the regular morning hour; and, under any view, the Chair states, as his opinion, that it belongs to the morning hour for this day.

Mr. ORR. Will it be in order to move to recommit this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The motion pending is to recommit it to the Committee on Public Lands. The motion, therefore, will be in order.

Mr. ORR. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANLY. I desire, at this stage of the proceedings, that some definite action upon the part of the House shall be taken in regard to this bill. It was so often discussed at the last Congress, and its character is so well known, that I do not purpose to consume the time of the House now in its discussion. The bill explains itself. It has been already sanctioned by a large majority of the American people, and I only desire now that the yeas and nays shall be taken as a test question. If it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, there will it rest for the remainder of the session. I will be satisfied with any action the House may take upon it; and I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk, upon looking to the pending motion, corrects his first belief, that it was to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands. The pending motion, when this question was last under consideration, was to recommit it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That is the first proposition to be voted upon by the House.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. In reply to what has been said by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] and which has been very often said by others during this session, that the committal of a bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, is the death of the bill, I wish to present a remark, and that is, if gentlemen pursue the course that is now being urged by my friend from North Carolina, the course which has been pursued by the Committee on Public Lands—to put all of their bills, as a matter of course, upon their passage, and thereby consume all of the time of the House—as a matter of course, then, all bills that are in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, will either have to remain there, or they will run a great hazard of not being reached. Why is it that the committal of a bill to that committee endangers its passage?

It is because we have so many speeches made upon the presidential election, and upon questions wholly irrelevant to the matter before us. It is because we do not come up to the work the country expects us to do, and do it in the manner in which it should be done. If we shall perform the labor we should perform—(and I do not say that the gentleman from North Carolina has failed to do it to a greater extent than others—my remarks are applicable to all of us as a body,)—if we attend to the public business as we ought to do, we shall reach all the bills on the various calendars, and accomplish all the necessary business before us, and we can easily do it in less than six weeks. It will no more endanger the passage of a bill, or interfere with its progress in the various stages through which it has to pass to become law, than if we should pass it on the report of the committee that brings it into the House. It is proper that we should understand this, and that the country should understand it. These measures should all take their proper course, and be examined and amended in committee, otherwise we had best abolish the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I do not wish to single out this or any other measure, and give it time which the rules say shall be given to the consideration of other bills or propositions.

Mr. POLK. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order for irrelevancy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will put into writing his question of order. [Laughter.] The question before the House, the Chair repeats, is to commit this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I intend to vote to refer this bill according to the rules of this House. I think we ought to do it, and then I intend voting, as I have endeavored to do during the whole of the session, to take up the Calendar until we transact the business of the country, and vote to bring these endless, irrelevant, and unprofitable debates to a conclusion at the earliest day; to confine the debates within proper, legitimate bounds; and if the House will sustain me, we will act upon all these bills, and then get away from here in less than six weeks. I hope the House will aid me in pressing forward the public business and go home. I do not believe, therefore, that we hazard the passage of this bill if we refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It does not hazard the passage of any bill to put it on that Calendar; and if it does, it is because we do not do our duty to the country.

Mr. BISSELL. Two weeks ago this bill was before the House. It had been before the House at two different times within the last two years in substantially the same form. It was the desire of the friends of the bill, at that time, to put it at once upon its passage, as it was considered, in the estimation of nearly all the friends of the bill, that to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was equivalent to its defeat. But as there were gentlemen who had not time to examine the bill since it had been reported by the Committee on Public Lands, it was suggested by them that it should be postponed for two weeks, in order that they might give it such examination. The two weeks have passed by, and the bill is again before us; and I trust now that it will be the pleasure of all those gentlemen who do not desire to defeat this most excellent measure, to vote to put it upon its passage; and in order that that may be done, I appeal to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to withdraw the motion he made to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in order that it may at once be put upon its passage.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw the motion I made to recommit this bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Missouri did not make the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BISSELL. Yes, he did.

Mr. JONES. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] to have made that motion.

Mr. STANLY. No, sir; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] made it.

Mr. BISSELL. Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I think I shall discharge my duty to the country, and do what is right towards this bill.

and towards its friends and enemies, too, by moving the previous question, which I design to do before I sit down. But, previous to that, I wish to have the bill read again from the Clerk's desk; and I ask all those gentlemen who have not given it the attention they desired, to listen to the reading of it; and when it has been read, I will ask for two minutes more, and then call for the previous question.

The bill was then read, as follows:

A Bill making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be granted to the several States for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, ten millions of acres of land, to be apportioned under the direction of the President of the United States, in the compound ratio of the geographical area and representation of said States in the House of Representatives according to the census of eighteen hundred and fifty: Provided, That the area of no State shall be computed at more than fifty thousand square miles.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the land aforesaid, after being surveyed, shall be apportioned to the several States in sections or subdivisions of sections; and whenever there are public lands (of suitable quality) in a State, the quantity to which said State shall be entitled shall be selected from such lands, and the quantity apportioned to any State in which there are no such lands, shall be located in the territory belonging to the United States to which the Indian title shall be extinguished, and it shall be the duty of the States to offer the said lands for sale immediately, and to complete the same at the earliest practicable day: Provided, That the said lands shall not be sold at a higher rate per acre than the present minimum price of the public lands, and that they be subject to the right of pre-emption, like the said public lands: Provided also, That the lands hereby granted shall be taken from such portion of the public lands as shall be subject to entry at private sale at the time of the passage of this act.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever the apportionment of said lands shall be completed, patents shall be issued to the several States for the portions which shall be allotted to them respectively; and thereupon the said States shall assume the management and sale of the lands thus apportioned to them.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all the expenses of management and superintendence of said lands previous to their sales, and all expenses incurred in the management and disbursement of the moneys which may be received therefrom, shall be paid by the States to which they may belong, out of the treasury of said States, so that the entire proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be applied without any diminution whatever to the purposes hereinafter mentioned.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid, by the States to which the lands are apportioned, shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the State, and that the moneys so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished, and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated to the comfortable maintenance and support of the curable and incurable indigent insane.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the grant of land hereby authorized shall be made on the conditions following, to which, as well as to the provisions hereinafter contained, the previous assent of the several States shall be signified by legislative acts:

First. If any portion of the fund invested as provided by the foregoing section, or any portion of the interest thereon, shall, by any action or contingency, be diminished or lost, it shall be replaced by the State to which it belongs; so that the capital of the fund shall remain forever undiminished, and the annual interest shall be regularly applied without diminution to the purposes mentioned in the fifth section of this act.

Second. The interest of said fund shall be faithfully applied to the maintenance and support of the curable and incurable indigent insane, who shall be placed in regularly organized State institutions, or in public incorporated institutions or hospitals for the exclusive care of the insane, or in public city hospitals for the sole care and treatment of the same, having full corps of officers charged with the management of said institutions, and resident physicians attached thereto; and in no case shall any part of the said fund, or the interest thereon, be applied permanently or temporarily to the maintenance or support of insane persons who may be kept or confined in jails, or in buildings connected with or attached to them, or in any work houses or poor-houses, or in any department of the same whatsoever, or in any private hospital, or in any general hospital not exclusively devoted to, and occupied for the remedial care of the insane.

Third. No portion of the said fund, or the interest thereon, shall be applied directly or indirectly, under any pretense whatever, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building for the reception or security of insane persons, or to the purchase of any site for such buildings, on any lands or grounds connected therewith; but the whole of said fund shall be kept inviolable, and the interest thereon shall be faithfully expended for the purposes mentioned in the fifth section of this act.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That if any State shall establish a public State institution for the maintenance and education of idiots, the deaf and dumb or blind, they may, at the discretion of each State, be permitted to participate in the benefits of this act, under the restrictions hereinafter specified, and in the ratio of their numbers relatively to the insane, for whose maintenance and support the interest of the fund belonging to such State shall be applied, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendments proposed by the Committee on Public Lands were then read, as follows:

In the first section, strike out all after the word "mentioned," and insert in lieu thereof the following, "public lands at the rate of 50,000 acres to each Representative in the House of Representatives, according to the census of 1850."

Strike out in the second section, fourth line, the words, "of suitable quality," and insert after the word "State," where it first occurs thereafter, the words, "worth $1 25 per acre, the value of said lands to be determined by the Governor of said State." Also insert at the end of the second section the following proviso:

Provided further, That if said lands be not sold within twenty years from and after the passage of this act, the lands remaining unsold at the end of that time shall revert to the United States.

Strike out the third section of the bill.

In section five, after the word "States," where it occurs the second time, insert the words, "or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than five per centum upon the par value of said stocks."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire if there can be more than one amendment pending to the bill at a time?

The SPEAKER. The amendments being read are those reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES. I should suppose, if the previous question is demanded, that it will cut off all but the first amendment, unless there should be an amendment to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regards all the amendments proposed by the committee as a report from the committee, which must be acted upon by the House.

Mr. SIBLEY. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not demand the previous question. I propose to offer the following:

Sec. 1. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the land hereinafter granted to those States, in which there is no public domain, there shall be issued to said States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, land scrip for an amount equal to the distributive share granted to such States respectively, under the provisions of this act, to be disposed of for the uses and purposes prescribed in the foregoing sections of this act.

Mr. BISSELL. The gentleman has already offered several amendments, which have been reported upon by the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, I think that he perhaps, is laboring under a mistake. When this bill was taken up this morning, there was a motion pending to recommit it to the Committee on Public Lands, made by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] and the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] also a member of that committee, obtained the floor, and moved to commit this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Missouri withdrew his motion, and the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, is now pending.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk first informed the Chair that the pending motion was to recommit to the Committee on Public Lands. The fact, however, was, that the motion was made at our last sitting by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that is the only proposition to commit which could be made.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The report from the Chair was, that the pending motion was to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. The gentleman from South Carolina, under that state of facts, moved its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; which motion was then entertained, and the other motion to commit being withdrawn, it should be still entertained.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk being under the impression that a motion to recommit was made when this bill was last up, so informed the Chair, and the Chair so stated to the House, upon which the gentleman from South Carolina moved to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Upon examination, however, the fact turns out to be that the motion was originally made by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; hence the other motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was, at the time, inadmissible.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit, then, to the gentleman, whether it is right, under the circumstances, to cut the House off from a motion to commit?

Mr. BISSELL. As I do not desire to consume three minutes of the time of the House this morning myself, and being desirous of getting a vote upon this bill, I am not inclined to let others consume time in motions, relative to points of order especially, when it has been decided by the Chair that there is nothing in those points. This bill, Mr. Speaker, has been before this House, under discussion here, and under discussion before the country, in various forms, for nearly three years, and I cannot suppose that there is any member in this House who takes the slightest interest in it, who is not tolerably well informed upon its merits. The bill, as reported back from the Committee on Public Lands, is not precisely as it was originally introduced; but it is substantially the same, and I call upon those gentlemen now who do not desire to see it defeated to stand up to-day and put it upon its passage, and either let it be defeated at once, or let there be an end of it by passing it.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Will the gentleman allow me a single moment? I wish to say to the members of this House, that unless we stand by this bill and pass it, the old States will not get a dollar from the public lands, certainly at this session of Congress. I do not myself like the amendments offered by the Committee on Public Lands, but this bill is the only one that looks to doing anything like justice to the old States; and, in addition to that, I wish to say that this is for a meritorious purpose. While we are going, and while it is the policy of the Government to give lands for the purposes of education and benevolent purposes, yet we have never received anything; the old States have never received the first acre for any purpose, and by the passage of this bill we shall get a part of what is our just due.

Mr. BISSELL. I put it upon higher grounds altogether. Justice to all the States, to the East and to the West, and justice to the people, who have long demanded the passage of this bill, and justice and humanity to the most unfortunate class of our fellow-citizens. While everybody else almost has been provided for—railroads to the extent of two and a quarter millions of acres; States to untold amounts; settlers, able and competent to gain a living by the labor of their own hands have one hundred and sixty acres each—this unfortunate class, provided for in this bill, has been alone forgotten by us. I place it upon higher grounds even than justice to the old States. Mr. Speaker, the friends of this bill, as I understand it, are against the adoption of all amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands, except the second, third, and fourth amendments. The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands should be rejected, in the opinion of the chairman of that committee, and in our opinion. The second amendment should be adopted, the third amendment should be concurred in, and the fourth; the balance of the amendments should be rejected if we would make the bill efficient for the purposes contemplated. Now, Mr. Speaker, begging pardon of all those gentlemen who may desire to make speeches on it, or who may desire to offer amendments, and asking them not to appeal to me for any such purpose, because when the door is once open there is no shutting it again, I move the previous question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. During the pendency of the demand for the previous question that motion is not in order.

Mr. ORR. Do I understand the Speaker to have decided that the motion which I made this morning to commit the bill was out of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided it was out of order, there being a motion then pending to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, made by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL,] which motion was subsequently withdrawn by him.

Mr. ORR. Then I make a motion, which is in order. If we are cut off from a reference of the bill, I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. CLEVELAND demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 115; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Boock, Buell, Busby, Caskey, Colecock, Curtis, Disney, Dunham, Durkee, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Freeman, Giddings, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hendricks, Hillyer, Holladay, Howard, Thomas Y. How,

Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Martin, McCorkle, McLanahan, McNair, Meade, Morriss, Murphy, Nabers, Newton, Orr, Powell, Riddle, Robbins, Ross, Seurry, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, George W. Thompson, Townshend, Wallace, Wilcox, and Wildrick—56.

YAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Chas. Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, J. Appleton, W. Appleton, Barrero, Bell, Bennett, Bilghaus, Bissell, Bowne, Jno. H. Boyd, Brazz, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Conger, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dean, Dinamick, Dockery, Doty, Dumeau, Fieldin, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Gorman, Hall, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Haven, Henn, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, John Johnson, George G. King, Rufus, Laundry, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, Meacham, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murray, Olds, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Pea-lee, Penn, Penniman, Polk, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robie, Robinson, Sackett, Selmerborn, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Smith, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stuart, Sweetser, Taylor, Thurston, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, and Yates—115.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

The question then recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BISSELL demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. BISSELL, and STEPHENS of Georgia, were appointed.

The question was then put, and tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 75.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. SIBLEY. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill:

Mr. DEAN. I would inquire of the Chair if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. DEAN. Then I call for the regular order of business.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] which was pending when the House adjourned last Monday.

Mr. SIBLEY. With the permission of the gentleman from New York, I will make a motion to refer this bill, just under consideration, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Unless objected to, the motion will be entertained.

Mr. BISSELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, (with the concurrence of the Senate,) That the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, close the present session of Congress by an adjournment of their respective houses on Monday, the 2d day of August next, at the hour of twelve, m.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am as desirous as anybody can be that Congress should adjourn at the earliest practicable moment, but I doubt if you can transact the public business in the time prescribed by the resolution. If, however, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means thinks he can pass all his bills in that time, I have no proposition to make. I think I can get through with all the business in which I have any interest. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the "second day," and inserting the "third Monday."

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. What day of the month is that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe it is the 16th.

Mr. HARRIS demanded the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON demanded tellers on the second; which were ordered, and Messrs. HARRIS of Tennessee and CLINGMAN were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 42.

So the previous question received a second; and the main question was ordered to be put.

[A message was here received from the Senate of the United States, by the hands of ASHUR DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, informing the House of the passage of several bills.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment to strike out the 2d and insert the 16th of August.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I would inquire if there was not another amendment offered, fixing the time for the 19th of July.

Mr. HOUSTON. It was suggested that the amendment I had proposed—the 19th July—would hazard the passage of the resolution. My great anxiety to fix the time for adjournment induced me, by the appeals of my friends, to withdraw it.

Mr. AVERETT demanded the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment; but they were not ordered.

Mr. ALLISON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, and STANTON, of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 62.

So the amendment was adopted.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution as amended, and being taken it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was put, and the latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I propose to introduce a resolution, and I hope no one will object to it. If objection be made, I shall move to suspend the rules. But I am sure every member will yield it his sanction. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Whereas this House has designated for itself a time for closing the present session of Congress, and whereas much business of importance to the nation and to the people requires definite action; therefore be it

Resolved, That when this House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock, a. m., until otherwise ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. COBB. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the resolution.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules; but they were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to suspend the rules.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution, adopted at a primary meeting in New York, for the purpose of having it referred to the appropriate committee:

Resolved, That the Representative in Congress from the twenty-fourth district of the State of New York—Hon. DANIEL T. JONES—be, and he is hereby, requested to urge upon Congress the passage of a law granting James F. Meagher the rights of citizenship under this Government without the formality of the present laws of naturalization.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. JONES, of New York. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which I have had the honor to present was passed at a large public meeting of the citizens of Syracuse, in the State of New York, called for the purpose of inviting the patriot Meagher, to visit that city. They ask that Congress would confer upon him the rights of citizenship without the delay of five years, made necessary by the naturalization laws of the country. They ask it as an expression of the high estimation with which his conduct is held by the people of the United States, during the late laudable but unfortunate effort of himself and his associates, to obtain greater freedom for his oppressed country, and thereby lessen the amount of misery under which that people are now groaning.

He is one of those creations of the times whom the universal struggle for a larger liberty now going on among the oppressed subjects of European despotism raises up, to lead in the great battle for freedom. With education, ability, an ardent temperament, and honesty of purpose, it is impossible for any such among them to be a passive spectator of the struggle. Many will fall, and many more will be driven from their country to seek refuge among us. Let them be received with open arms and a hearty welcome. The late Thomas Addis Emmet, for a like cause, was forced to flee to this country; where, by a special dispensation, he was admitted to the privileges of the courts of the State of New York, and of which he became one of its greatest ornaments.

It will cost us nothing, but confers on him that which is above all price. It will restore him to the world a freeman, and make him the peer of kings and emperors—a citizen of the United States. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to introduce it, and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. We have no constitutional power to pass any such law. Congress can only pass uniform laws upon the subject of naturalization. It is useless to suspend the rules.

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to suspend the rules for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEPHENS. But it is useless to suspend the rules to entertain what we cannot grant.

Mr. McLANAHAN. With all respect to my friend from New York, I will say that this question has already been decided by the Judiciary Committee. I think I am authorized to say that, in the opinion of that committee, the passage of such a law would be unconstitutional.

Mr. JONES. But still I see no objection to its reception and reference. That is all I ask.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to suspend the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the territorial bills now lying upon the Speaker's table.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

The question was taken, and upon a division 70 rose in the affirmative.

Mr. RICHARDSON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. RICHARDSON and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes not counted.

So the rules were suspended.

TERRITORIAL BILLS.

The question was then put on Mr. RICHARDSON's motion to proceed to the consideration of the territorial bills on the Speaker's table; and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is upon the engrossment of House bill No. 187, for the construction of military roads in Oregon Territory, which was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without amendment.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

Mr. BISSELL. I think I had the floor upon that bill, when it was last up, and I shall detain the House now only for the purpose of moving a single amendment. I move to strike out the words, "for the construction of a road from Catamount, or Oak Point, on the Columbia river, to 'Siliacomb, on Puget's Sound, $10,000.'"

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BROOKS. This is the same bill we had under consideration a few days since, and upon which there was a good deal of debate. The objection to it was, that there was no recommendation of any Department of the Government, for the making of these roads—that the bill was introduced solely upon the recommendation of the Delegate from Oregon, and upon no other; that it was the beginning of a system of internal improvements in Oregon, without any proper advisement, upon the part of the proper authorities of the Government, without any previous surveys, without any knowledge of the territory through which the roads are to pass, and without any idea of what the roads will cost. I voted for the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] to strike out the appropriation of $10,000, without hearing from him any particular reason why that item should be stricken out, any more than the others. I said the other day, what I repeat here, that this is but the beginning of a general system of appropriations in the Territory of Oregon. For the life of me, I am not able to see the difference between such like appropriations there, and appropriations in the other parts of the United States, unless they be for military roads; and in order to ascertain whether they are necessary for military roads or not, it is necessary to have some advisement from the proper authorities of the Government—some previous survey—some knowledge of the reasons why military roads should be constructed in that quarter. I say now, that if, with these facts before the House, the majority of the House choose to take the responsibility of this vote, appropriating public money for this like system of internal improvement, it is not for me, in the minority, to throw any extraordinary obstructions in the way; but it is for the majority, who have the charge of the business of this House, to take the responsibility upon them, with the understanding that the advisement, the recommendation, come from no proper Department of this Government, but is assumed by the House itself, without that advisement or recommendation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is, a portion of those roads over which our troops pass, and also emigrants going to Oregon. The particular road I do not now recollect, but it is one of those included in the bill; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] is mistaken in that respect. Wherever the Government has undertaken to make improvements inside of a State, it has been upon estimates and surveys. There has not been an instance in the legislation of the country, for several years, where estimates have been required to be made for such improvements in a Territory. The reason is a very obvious one. It will cost more to make your estimates and surveys in the Territories, than to make the improvements which are required for the passage of your munitions of war, your troops, and provisions for them. It was not required in regard to Iowa, it was not required in regard to Minnesota, and it was not required in regard to Wisconsin, that there should be any previous surveys, when similar appropriations were made for those Territories. The gentleman quotes an authority applicable only to the States, and Congress, in the discussion of these subjects, have always made a distinction between the States and Territories. I do not know that there is an absolute necessity to make but one appropriation. To make that, I admit there is a necessity; and if you mean that this improvement shall be of any advantage to your troops there, and to emigrants going to Oregon, it ought to be made now. It will take two or three years to make a survey, and that will cost more than it would cost to make the improvements, as they have to be made upon one or two places only along the route.

Mr. STUART. I do not propose to detain the House but a moment in the discussion of this question; but I undertake to say that there cannot be found in the history of this Government, any authority, that is entitled to any high degree of respect, against the power to pass such laws as this for the Territories. And, sir, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] cannot see any difference between the exercise of this power in the Territories, and in the States, then he cannot tell the difference between light and darkness. It is as clearly defined as any other proposition in the world.

I should like to, elaborate this question, but I will not consent to consume the time of the House in discussing that question now, but upon some future occasion I intend to do so.

Something was said the other day in regard to there being a previous survey, and that doctrine is resumed to-day. For what reason should there be a previous survey? Why, simply for ascertaining the cost. That is everything for which the survey can be valuable, for I take it for granted that nobody will, as to the propriety of the road, doubt that the information of the Delegate from Oregon is as reliable as that of any other man, or any other set of men, as to where the road ought to be made. All, then, that would be obtained by making a previous survey, would be to ascertain the expense of making the road. What would be the consequence of ordering a survey? Why, sir, you would lose a year, at least. You would consume a year of time by getting a previous survey; and what is worse than all that, you run the hazard of sacrificing a number of human lives. Now, sir, I know not what other gentlemen may think, but it seems to me that, for the mere purpose of ascertaining what it will cost to make this road, it is not best to proceed so slowly as to sacrifice the lives of men, women, and children, emigrating to the Territory of Oregon.

But, sir, reserving to myself the propriety of discussing this question in the main, upon some future day, which I intend to do upon a proper occasion, for the purpose of bringing the House to a vote upon this bill, and disposing of this question, and other territorial bills, I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BELL. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order while the previous question is pending.

Mr. MEADE. I hope the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] will be permitted to give us some explanation of this bill. I do not wish to vote for it unless I am satisfied that such a bill is absolutely necessary. I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] to withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. STUART. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question, holding the floor myself, to give the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] an opportunity to furnish the information which he gave the House the other day when, I presume, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] was not present.

Mr. MEADE. Before the gentleman from Oregon begins, I ask him to furnish to the House some information as to the length of the road, its probable cost—I do not suppose the gentleman can be very accurate in that respect—the time it will take to finish it, the necessity of having it as a military road, and in what way that necessity exists, and how it is to be used as such.

Mr. LANE. It will afford me pleasure to explain the reasons why I have asked an appropriation for roads in Oregon Territory, and to give the information desired by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] as nearly as I can do it.

I should have been glad to have removed the objection of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Bissell,] when he made the motion to strike out the appropriation of $10,000 for the construction of the road from Catalamett to Stilacomb, but the motion has been made, and that appropriation has been stricken out.

I ask for twenty thousand dollars for making a road from Stilacomb, on Puget's Sound, to Fort Walla-Walla, on the Columbia river. The main emigrant road from St. Joseph to Oregon touches the Columbia river near Fort Walla-Walla. A direct road from that point to Fort Stilacomb, on Puget Sound, can be conveniently made, and the distance will be about two hundred and fifty miles. Troops of the United States are now garrisoned at Fort Stilacomb, and all the country north of Walla-Walla, and east of Cascade mountains, is occupied only by Indians, who have given us a great deal of trouble, and seriously annoyed the emigrants traveling through their country.

There is now no route by which our troops may move from Fort Stilacomb to Walla-Walla, except by way of Portland or Oregon City, a distance of about four hundred miles greater than the direct route proposed in the establishment of this road. Now, in the event of our troops being required at Fort Walla-Walla whilst stationed at Stilacomb, without this direct line of communication we propose to establish, our troops would be compelled to perform a tedious march of near seven hundred miles. The road is, therefore, essentially and absolutely necessary for military purposes, and for this reason I feel myself compelled to insist upon the appropriation asked for by the bill before the House.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, to the great advantage it would afford the country in time of Indian troubles, or Indian hostilities, it would afford a safe and speedy transit to emigrants bound from the States to Puget's Sound; and would be, as I before remarked, a saving of four hundred miles, contrasted with the present route. Emigrants are now compelled to go from Walla-Walla by Oregon City. No emigrant can make the trips there in one season; two seasons will be required; so that it is placed beyond the power of emigrants to raise a crop within two years' time. For the accommodation, then, of the emigrants, aside from the consideration of its necessity for military purposes, the road ought to be built. Twenty thousand dollars will open the road so as to make it passable for wagons. I also ask, through the bill, the appropriation of $20,000 for the construction of a road from Myrtle creek to Rogue River valley. This road is as absolutely necessary as the first, to which I have made allusion; it is necessary for military purposes, and necessary for the safety and security of the people of Oregon Territory. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] that I am surprised at his opposition to everything I have asked for the benefit of the Territory I have the honor to represent here. We are compelled to look to Congress for our legislation as a Territory, and that Oregon should be met upon every occasion with non-action upon the part of this House, when we ask even less than has been bestowed upon other Territories, is strangely incomprehensible to me. But if this House is not inclined to do justice to Oregon, or is disposed to look with indifference upon her wants, let the responsibility rest upon the heads of those who oppose these appropriations.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish, with the gentleman's permission, to state to him that I have no hostility to Oregon. I voted, at the last session, to give donations of the public land to actual settlers in Oregon, under a bill proposed by his predecessor. I wish further to say, that the objection I have is not to his Territory—is upon his sole responsibility to the introduction of bills here, and the appropriating for them here $40,000 only, which will not make a survey of the road which must involve a much larger expenditure, I know nothing about them. If the proper authorities recommend them in the proper way—that they are military roads—I will vote for them.

Mr. LANE. That has not been the custom in similar cases of appropriation made for other Territories. Last Congress an appropriation was made for constructing a road in Minnesota, of which no survey had been made, and I expect it received the vote of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] If he did not, a majority of this House passed it into a law. I say to the gentleman, that I am not afraid of responsibility. These appropriations I ask upon my own responsibility, upon my own honor, and my knowledge of the country, the wants of its citizens, and the difficulties in the way of emigration thither. I ask only for what is right and just for Oregon Territory. I recollect when I requested—when I begged this House, some three or four months ago, to take such steps as were necessary to be taken to send out troops for the protection of emigrants to Oregon, that the gentleman from New York opposed the proposition. The measure was defeated, and the emigrants to Oregon this year get no protection. Before the first of October next you may hear of many of them falling victims to the scalping-knife and tomahawk of the merciless Indians. This, I fear, will be the case. Then I told you such would be the result of this indifference to the wants of our emigrants. With the tribes of Indians, and the country they inhabit, I am well acquainted. The emigrants have started out there, with the promise of the Secretary of War that troops should be sent there to afford them protection. This has not been done. I have no more to say; and will, therefore, yield the floor to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STUART. The Delegate from Oregon, I apprehend, has now furnished all the reliable information which could be obtained in a year on this question. The necessity for the passage of this bill must be obvious to every gentleman; and, sir, governed by the idea I advanced before, a disinclination to consume the time of the House in discussing this subject, I renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his call, that I may submit a word of explanation to the House in reply to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. STUART. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. MEADE. I desire to make only a few words of explanation in this matter, as I called upon the Delegate from Oregon [Mr. LANE] for information. Having reliance in the integrity of the man, I will state that, after all the responsibility he has assumed to himself, if I vote wrong, I will charge it to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. STUART. I renew my call for the previous question.

The question was then put upon seconding the call for the previous question, and there were—ayes 49.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand tellers on the seconding of the call for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. ROBINSON and CHANDLER were appointed.

The House was again divided, and the call for the previous question was seconded, the tellers having reported—ayes 72, noes not counted.

And the main question was then ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put on the engrossment of the bill, and it was agreed to—ayes 94, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Bell, Bissell, Bocoock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Briggs, Busby, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chapman, Churchill, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Colcock, Conger, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Doty, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Edgerton, Edmundson, Florence, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Green, Hammond, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Henna, Holladay, John W. Howe, Thos. M. Howe, Hunter, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Mason, McCorkle, McNair, Meade, Molony, Morrison, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Polk, Powell, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robie, Robinson, Ross, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard R. Stanton, Stone, St. Martin, Stuart, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Townshend, Walbridge, Ward, Watkins, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Barrere, Bennett, Bibbhausa, Bowne, Brenton, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Cobb, George T. Davis, Dimmick, Fowler, Goodenow, Harper, Isham G. Hendricks, Hillyer, Horsford, Houston, Thomas Y. How, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Martin, Meacham, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Orr, Outlaw, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Stanly, Thaddeus Stevens, Strother, Taylor, Toombs, Venable, Wallace, Welch, Wells, Alexander White, and Wildrick—52.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Previous to the announcement of the result of the above vote, Mr. INGERSOLL asked leave to vote, not having been within the bar when his name was called; but objection was made.

The bill having been engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled "An act to grant the right of way to the State of Missouri, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State;" which received the signature of the Speaker.

The House proceeded next to consider House bill No. 252, to authorize the legislative authority of the several Territories to control the appropriations to be made by Congress for the support of the government of said Territories.

The bill was read through.

Mr. SIBLEY. As this subject has been thoroughly discussed in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I move the previous question.

Mr. STUART. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his call until I can submit an amendment.

The call for the previous question was withdrawn.

Mr. STUART. As the object of that bill is to give the control of the funds appropriated for the Territories to the legislative authorities of the Territories, I think that, under the present circumstances, there ought to be an amendment excepting from its provisions the Territory of Utah. For that purpose I propose the following proviso, and call for the previous question upon its adoption:

Provided further, That the provision of this bill shall not apply to the Territory of Utah.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I will state to the gentleman, that the Delegate from Utah is not present.

Mr. STUART. I am aware of that. The proviso will leave, with regard to that Territory, the provisions of law as they now stand.

Mr. CLEVELAND. After all, it makes a distinction which may do more harm than good; and I therefore suggest the propriety of passing the bill by for the present.

The call for the previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER. Shall the main question be now put?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Why the distinction between Utah and the other Territories? I ask for a division on that question.

The question was then put on ordering the main question to be put; and on a division there were—ayes 55.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RICHARDSON and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was again put and carried in the affirmative; the tellers having reported—ayes 71, noes 46.

The question was then taken, and there were—ayes 81, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Averett, Bibbhausa, Bragg, Briggs, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Colcock, Conger, Cullom, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Durkee, Florence, Fowler, Gamble, Green, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Holladay, Howard, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kurtz, Lockhart, Mace, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McNair, Meade, Molony, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Polk, Powell, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, Savage, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Walbridge, Wallace, Welch, Alexander White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Williams, and Yates—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bowne, Brenton, Brooks, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Cleveland, Cobb, Curtis, Dockery, Duncan, Edmundson, Goodenow, Harper, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Hillyer, Horsford, Houston, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Martin, Meacham, Miller, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murphy, Nabers, Newton, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Phelps, Ross, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Stanly, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Taylor, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townshend, Venable, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, and Wells—65.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CLINGMAN moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

House bill No. 253, making appropriations for the completion of the public buildings in the Territory of Minnesota, being next in order, was then taken up and read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

Senate bill No. 175, relating to the salaries of the officers of the Territories of the United States, and to repeal the proviso in the act entitled "An act making an appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1852, and for other purposes," being next in order, was then taken up and read.

The SPEAKER. The committee have reported an amendment, in the nature of a substitute for this bill, which will be read by the Clerk.

The amendment having been read,

Mr. RICHARDSON moved the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question being first upon the amendment, it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was passed.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed was read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the motion by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

House bill No. 254, to run and establish the boundary between the State of Texas and the Territories of the United States, was next taken up and read.

The SPEAKER. The bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with an amendment. The question will be first upon the amendment, to insert in the 2d section, after the word "of," "$25,000."

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and, being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

House bill No. 255, making further appropriations for the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, was next taken up and read.

The SPEAKER. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with amendments. The question will be first upon the amendment, to add in the tenth line, after the words "Lake Superior" the words "by the most direct and convenient route between those points," so as to make it read, "for the construction of a road from Point Douglass, on the Mississippi river, to the falls or rapids of the St. Louis river, and Lake Superior, by the most direct and convenient route between those points, $20,000."

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The second amendment proposed by the committee is, to strike out of the twenty-first and twenty-second lines the words "Governor and Legislative Assembly of said Territory," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of War, pursuant to contracts to be made by him," so as to make it read, "the said roads to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War, pursuant to contracts to be made by him."

The question was then taken upon the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was read the third time.

Mr. STANLY. Will the chairman of the Committee on Territories inform me of the amount appropriated by that bill for internal improvements?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I stated the other day that these were bills which did not come from the Committee on Territories. They came from other committees of the House, and belong to territorial business. I have not the information asked for by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY.]

Mr. SIBLEY. If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] will permit me, I will answer him. This bill provides $45,000 for a continuation of roads which have been commenced after a survey by the Department of War. The amount is less than one half that estimated for.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from North Carolina will refer to the report of the proper bureau he will find the estimates for the completion of these roads, with the exception of one, which it is proposed to have surveyed, to be something about $100,000. I think that is about the amount, though it may be a little over.

Mr. STANLY. This internal-improvement bill should wait the general bill for that object. I do not think it is exactly fair, either for the Territories or for any one of the States, to force their bills through without adopting some general system which shall benefit the whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until better order is restored.

Mr. STANLY. I will not trouble the House further. They will not have order until after the nominations are over. [Laughter.] I ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire the ear of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] for a moment. There are two or three bills behind this to which there will be no objection. If this can be passed over informally until I can get them passed, I shall be much obliged to the House.

Mr. STANLY. Certainly; I have no objection to that. There are two hundred and sixty miles of this road provided for, and five hundred to complete it, and no one can tell what it will cost in the end. I hope the bill will be passed over informally.

Mr. SIBLEY. I hope the bill will not be passed over informally.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will allow the bill to be passed over for the present; and as soon as the others are passed, it will come directly up. I only made the suggestion in order to facilitate the passage of the other bills.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Will it be in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the House agrees to pass it over informally.

Mr. SIBLEY. The bill is precisely like the one passed for the Territory of Oregon, with the exception that it comes more strongly indorsed, for it comes under the requisition of the Secretary of War.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will withdraw my proposition to pass over.

The SPEAKER. Then the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. MOREHEAD] is in order.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question was put, and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. SIBLEY. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

The question now being upon the passage of the bill,

Mr. STANLY demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. Goodenow and Briggs were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to; and

The House adjourned till twelve o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. BELL gave notice that he would on to-morrow, or some subsequent day of the session, ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of George Hobbs, deceased.

INDUSTRIAL CONGRESS.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a memorial from the Industrial Congress, which recently held a session in this city. Without pledging myself to all the views of that body, I may be permitted to say, that it represents, probably, a hundred thousand persons, most of whom are mechanics and working men of industrious habits and respectable standing. The object of the memorial is, to lay the views of the Industrial Congress, and of those associations which that body represents, before the Congress of the United States, and to respectfully urge the passage of the homestead bill. I ask that it may be read.

The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 4, 1852.

The undersigned, Committee of the "National Industrial Congress," now in session in this city, with due respect to your honorable bodies, represent, that they were sent hither by a large constituency of the industrial interests of society, to press upon your attention and that of the world at large, the great features of reform and good government, which have animated their deliberations and those of six anterior annual sessions.

The measures most prominent among their deliberations have ever been propositions for the creation of laws that shall foster and perpetuate the love of home, and a desire for independence of position in the heart of every inhabitant upon the American soil—to secure which, they propose, first: The exemption of the homestead from alienation for debt. Second, The freedom of the public land to actual settlers, under limitations preventive of monopoly of the soil and the establishment of a commercial landocracy, so destructive of republican institutions, and the democratic instincts of the people. We claim these measures as just and practicable, and aside from man's abstract, natural and individual right to the soil of his country, bold, that he, politically and socially, is as much entitled to a home upon the earth as to the exercise of suffrage, freedom of speech, and of opinion, to life itself, or to any other of the recognized rights of civilized man.

In view of these truths, we crave of your honorable bodies the passage of the "homestead bill," now before you.

WILLIAM J. YOUNG, N. Y.,
A. H. ROSENHEIM, Penn., } Committee.
E. W. CAPRON, R. I.,

W. J. MULLEN, of Penn., President.
E. W. CAPRON, of R. I., Secretary.

Heard, praying indemnity for property destroyed during the late war with Great Britain, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of John Duff, asking that a suit brought against him for an alleged violation of contract in the delivery of stone, may be discontinued, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

the Secretary of the Treasury to ratify and confirm an exchange of lands between the United States and Charles Reynolds, of the city of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, reported it back without amendment; and, on his motion, it was considered as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being offered, it was read a third time and passed.

BILL PASSED.

The engrossed bill to authorize the correction of erroneous locations of military bounty land warrants, by actual settlers, in certain cases, was read a third time and passed.

HISTORICAL PAINTINGS FOR CONGRESS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. COOPER, on the 8th of April, respecting the employment of Leutze and Healy to execute certain paintings for Congress; and, having been amended, it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be and it is hereby instructed to inquire into the expediency of employing Mr. Leutze to repaint for Congress his painting representing Washington crossing the Delaware, together with a fellow to it representing Washington rallying the American troops at the battle of Monmouth; also, of employing Mr. Healy to paint two pictures, one representing the throwing overboard of the tea in Boston harbor, the other, the battle of Bunker Hill; also, Mr. Rothermel to execute two paintings, the subjects likewise to be drawn from American revolutionary history.

CHEAP OCEAN POSTAGE.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Whereas, the inland postage on a letter for a distance within three thousand miles is three cents when paid, and five cents when unpaid, while the ocean postage on a similar letter is twenty-four cents, being a burdensome tax, amounting often to a prohibition of foreign correspondence; and yet letters can be carried at less cost on sea than on land:

And whereas, by increasing correspondence, and also by bringing into the mails mailable matter, now often clandestinely conveyed, cheap ocean postage would become self-supporting:

And whereas, cheap ocean postage would tend to quicken commerce; to promote the intercourse of families and friends separated by the ocean; to multiply the bonds of peace and good-will among men and nations; and thus, while important to every citizen, it would become an active ally, especially of the merchant, the emigrant, and the philanthropist: therefore,

Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to open negotiations with the European Powers, particularly with the Governments of Great Britain and France, for the establishment of cheap ocean postage.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That it be laid on the table.

A motion to print the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CATLIN'S COLLECTION OF INDIAN SCENES.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Library Committee be requested to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill for the purchase of Mr. George Catlin's collection of Indian Scenes and Portraits, which are in danger of being sold and lost to this country.

SAFETY OF PASSENGERS ON STEAMBOATS.

Mr. DAVIS. Yesterday I gave notice of my intention to ask the Senate to consider the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam." I now move that the prior orders be postponed for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I regret very much to oppose any motion coming from my friend from Massachusetts, but I think it is a bad plan to go partially through a subject, and then pass it over. Such is the condition of the bill to provide for the repair and improvement of the dam at the head of Cumberland Island, in the Ohio river. That bill was partially considered yesterday, and would it not be better to take it up again and finally dispose of it? I presume it will give rise to no more debate, for I am willing to acquiesce in an amendment which was yesterday suggested, to leave the execution of the work to the Executive Department. If, however, we proceed to the consideration of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts, we may enter upon a discussion that may occupy a week. I trust that the Cumberland dam bill may have precedence, and if it shall give rise to discussion, I promise to abandon it.

Mr. BORLAND. I will suggest to the Senator from Kentucky, that the proper disposition of the bill which he asks the Senate to consider, is to lay it upon the table, where it should continue to lie until it comes up in a general bill. All such subjects should be acted upon, and live or die together.

Mr. ATCHISON. I beg to remind the Senate that the Minnesota treaties have been acted upon in Executive session, and it is very important that the Senate should again proceed to their consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I yesterday gave notice of the motion which I have now made to take up the bill which I have designated, and I hoped the Senate would indulge me with its consideration. If, however, the Senate is not disposed to do so, I will withdraw my motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

DAM IN THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now move the postponement of all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the Cumberland dam bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ATCHISON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. BRADBURY. Before that motion is agreed to, I desire to say that I hope the Senate will first devote a short time to the transaction of other ordinary business. I wish to call up a small bill that can soon be disposed of; but if it should occupy half an hour, I promise to move that it be passed over for the purpose of proceeding to Executive business.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have pressed the motion which I have now made frequently for several weeks. The Senate is aware of the necessity of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business, which I think the Senate can dispose of to-day, if we proceed to it at once, and to-morrow may be devoted to the business which Senators now urge upon the attention of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the residue of the day was devoted to Executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 8, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. McCORKLE, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolutions from the Legislature of California; which were disposed of as indicated below:

1. A resolution in favor of the immediate enactment, by Congress, of a law providing compensation for services rendered by volunteers in California during the Mexican war, and for property lost, although said volunteers may not have been enlisted in strict conformity to law; and also for the extension to said volunteers of the full benefits of all the existing laws of Congress relative to persons engaged in the United States military service.

Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2. Resolution in favor of the rigid enforcement of the existing laws in reference to emigrant vessels, and, if necessary, of the passage of such laws as shall guard against the grievous abuses now existing, and secure to those traveling in said vessels, protection to their health and lives.

Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

3. Resolution in favor of the passage of a law by Congress authorizing the proper Department to enter into contract with Lafayette Maynard and John Parrot, for the semi-monthly transportation of mails between Panama and San Francisco, or between New York and San Francisco, as they may prefer, upon terms equally liberal with the contracts now existing upon this route; this additional contract to provide for the transmission of the mails in the weeks intervening between those fixed for the arrival of the mails, and against the further extension of the contracts heretofore made with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

4. Resolution in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the relief of Elias Waldo, of California, for money expended by him and for his diligence in relieving the destitute, suffering, starving, and sick, among the overland emigrants to California in the year 1850.

Referred to the Committee on Territories.

5. Resolution in favor of a change of the election laws so as to authorize the meeting of the electors in the State of California on the third Wednesday of December.

Referred to the Committee on Elections.

6. Resolution in favor of the establishment of a branch Mint of the United States in the State of California at the earliest possible moment.

Referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCORKLE. I desire to say something upon the question of printing the last resolution. I believe that question is debatable.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has already been referred and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCORKLE. I wished to address the House upon the subject of this resolution, but I am not very desirous to do so now, and I will trouble the House no further.

Mr. BISSELL. I rise to a question of privilege—

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield the floor to enable me to ask a question.

Mr. BISSELL. I will do so for that purpose.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask the Chair if the question was put upon the motion to refer and print this resolution?

The SPEAKER. It was. The order was made by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for the Committee on Ways and Means to report a Senate bill which has lain before that committee since the third day of the meeting of the present Congress—a bill for the establishment of a branch Mint in California. It is a bill to which I believe not a single man in this House has an objection to urge, and one of immense and vital importance to that class which my colleague [Mr. McCORKLE] and myself peculiarly represent. I beg the ear of the House while I say half a dozen words that ought to be heard and ought to be understood. It is believed in this House, and in the country, that gold is worth $17 per ounce in California. But that is not the fact. From the hand of the laborer, it is turned into the market at $16 per ounce. Now, this gold is worth about $17 50 abroad. I believe the average is near $18. The produce being half an ounce a day, each mining laborer in California pays upon his day's labor a tax greater than the entire wages of the same class of laborers in any other part of the United States. This is an outrage which we have long and patiently suffered—against which we have expostulated often temperately, and which has resulted in the loss of $20,000,000, to this peculiar class of laborers in California since the discovery of the mines. I ask the consent of the House for that committee to report this bill, and I hope no one will object.

Mr. STANLY. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not know of any rule which admits of a parenthesis within a parenthesis. I come in a parenthesis myself, and I do not yield the floor to anybody.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the unanimous consent of the House to be given to the gentleman from California to make a few remarks in reference to the California Mint bill.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. MARSHALL. I want to speak for some time, as it will require more than an hour to explain fully this matter to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, under the consent given by the House to the gentleman from California, he must necessarily confine himself to a very few remarks.

Mr. BISSELL. But the gentleman from California [Mr. MARSHALL] now announces to me that he desires to speak a long time. If that announcement had been made at first, I would not have yielded him the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL. I will not speak for a long time. I understand that I have the consent of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] to ask the unanimous consent of the House—if it requires unanimous consent—that the Committee on Ways and Means may report the California Mint bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks the unanimous consent of the House to submit a few remarks in regard to the California Mint bill. Is there any objection?

Mr. OLDS. I should like to know if this interferes with the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. MEACHAM. I object.

Mr. MARSHALL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] has never withdrawn from me the assent which he granted me of occupying the floor.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CARTER. Is it not too late at this time to rescind the common consent given to the gentleman from California?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the unanimous consent of the House was given to the gentleman to make a few remarks in regard to the bill referred to by him. Some remarks were submitted by the gentleman, and the question now is whether he may continue them. The Chair thinks not, without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. MARSHALL. I have no desire to consume one moment of the time of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is well aware of that.

Mr. MARSHALL. All I desire in the world is simply that the House should have a sufficiently active sense of justice now, when there is at last an opportunity, after six or seven months' delay, to do a thing which all the country and all the world knows is right, and ought to be done. There is a chance now to bring up the bill. The Committee on Ways and Means, after seven months, are active at last; and this bill can be now presented, and I do want it done. The House consented to hear me; but now, instead of hearing me for an hour—which I should think they would be polite enough to do, for they hear everybody on a point of order finer than the seven hundredth point of a needle—they waste an hour of time upon a point of order which will be enough to pass this bill, because there is no difficulty about its passage. It came down from the Senate, I believe, unanimously, or nearly so. It is what every one knows ought to be done, and to which no one objects. The Committee of Ways and Means itself is ready to report it, and that certainly removes all doubt about the character of the bill; and I do now beg, as a personal—a political favor—that the House will take up the bill, when they have a chance to escape from under the pressure of their own rules, as an act of common justice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks the unanimous consent of the House to take up the bill indicated by him, before proceeding to the execution of the special order.

Mr. BISSELL. I object.

Mr. McCORKLE. I then move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, except on Mondays, under the express rules of the House. What proposition does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] make to the House?

Mr. BISSELL. I give up the floor.

Mr. KING, of New York. I ask that the regular order be proceeded with.

The SPEAKER. The objection to the proposition of the gentleman from California is withdrawn.

Mr. MARTIN. I renew it.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is necessary to rise in one's place before objection can be made here.

Mr. BISSELL. I did not object. Objection was made on the other side of the House. But it is of no avail that I give way to the gentleman, for the moment I yield, objection is made.

Mr. MARSHALL. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BISSELL. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California rises to a question of order, which has precedence.

Mr. MARSHALL. In a very close and careful examination of the rules of this House, Mr. Speaker, I went as far as the 2d rule, [laughter,] but in attending closely to the debates of the House, I found that at about the 133d rule, all business absolutely stopped in transitu, I was discouraged, and did not go any further. I do not pretend to any very high authority upon a question of order, but this much I think I do know, that when a gentleman objects, he is obliged, at least, to rise in his seat to make that objection, with that ordinary respect and formality observed in Congress, as well as everywhere else.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN] rose in his place, addressed the Chair, and objected, while others were crying in their seats "I object!" "I object!"

Mr. MARSHALL. That question of fact being settled, the difficulty as to the point of order raised by me is removed. I did not hear or see him. I expected that much from New York, and New York will profit by it. I advise New York to proceed in that way, and I promise her she will make something by it.

Mr. BISSELL. I call the gentleman from California to order.

Mr. MARSHALL. You will have to call him out of the House.

Mr. BISSELL. That is what a man gets for being clever. I have almost a mind to say I will never attempt to be clever again at the expense of what I conceive to be justice to the House.

I move, Mr. Speaker, that the vote, by which the House on yesterday refused to lay the bill making an appropriation of land for the benefit of the insane, upon the table, be reconsidered. My object is, of course, to bring the bill before the House for action this morning in that way.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. BISSELL. I trust that the motion will not be laid upon the table, if gentlemen desire the bill to be acted upon.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire, as this is not a debatable question, what effect the vote will have, if it is reconsidered? I ask the Speaker another question. There was subsequent action upon this bill—for instance, the proposition to sustain the previous question, and it was voted down. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] obtained the floor, and while he was upon the floor, the orders of the day were called for. Now, sir, if a reconsideration of this vote brings the bill back before the House, of course it brings back the motion to lay upon the table. What becomes, then, of the subsequently-acquired right of the gentleman from Minnesota to the floor? Will it cut him off? And if it does cut him off, can it bring the bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide those questions when they arise.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] upon the table.

Mr. STANLY. Upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit, as a question of order to the Chair, that the motion to lay upon the table having failed—thus leaving the bill before the House, it is not in order to reconsider it. It is like a motion to adjourn, sir, and it can be renewed at any moment, and is not one that can be reconsidered. If it had been laid on the table, then the motion to reconsider would be in order; but having failed, it is like a motion to adjourn, which can be renewed at any moment, and which cannot, therefore, be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has looked with some little care to this question. The motion to reconsider is a privileged motion, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] understands very well. A vote was taken to lay the bill upon the table, and the House rejected the motion. A motion is now made to reconsider that vote. Under the rule, the Chair does not see how he could decide that the motion to reconsider is out of order, it being one of those privileged questions laid down so plainly by our rules. Although the Chair admits there is force in the position taken by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] yet he is inclined to decide that the motion is in order, and that it brings the bill before the House.

Mr. JONES. Suppose the House should refuse to adjourn, would it be in order to move to reconsider that vote?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. JONES. This is like a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Before the question is put I want to understand the precise point we are voting on. Now, if we shall reconsider the vote, then the question will be again, "Shall the bill be laid upon the table?"

The SPEAKER. That will be the question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I take it we shall be in the same condition that we are now in. The bill is now before the House, and any one may move to lay it upon the table; and why should we be obliged to go back, and reconsider the motion to lay upon the table when we make no progress by it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state, that there is some doubt in his mind in regard to this question of order; that he is inclined to the opinion that it is proper for the motion to be submitted to the House; and that the motion to reconsider brings the bill before the House, which would otherwise take its place upon the table of the Speaker.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether this was not the pending matter when the morning hour expired on yesterday, and whether it will not come up to-morrow as such?

The SPEAKER. It was the pending matter; but, under the rules, the House having left it in that condition—there being no pending motion to commit—according to the practice of my predecessor, it would have gone upon the Speaker's table with the orders of the day.

Mr. ORR. I have great respect for the opinion of the Chair upon the question of order, but I am thoroughly satisfied in my own mind that the motion to reconsider cannot, at the present stage of the matter, be entertained by the House. The gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. SIBLEY,] as was stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] obtained the floor. He has a right, therefore, to be heard on the bill when it next comes up. Well, the reconsideration by the House simply restores the bill to the point it was at when the House refused to lay it on the table. You make no progress at all, but you interfere with rights subsequently acquired. I therefore respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair entertaining the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BISSELL. I will make a suggestion which I trust will obviate the whole difficulty in the way. If it is the pleasure of the House to make this bill the special order for Friday or Saturday next week, I will withdraw the motion I have submitted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to that.

Mr. STUART. I desire to submit a statement on this point, but I understand that it is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable; but the Chair trusts that the House will allow the gentleman to submit his statement, confessing that he has some doubts in regard to the point of order.

Mr. STUART. One statement is incorrect in its effect. If the motion to reconsider shall prevail, the effect of it will be to bring the bill before the House. Now, when the bill is brought before the House, it must stand where it stood when the motion to lay on the table was put; and it no more follows that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] has lost the floor by its effect than if it were not submitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair discovers at a glance the difficulty to which the gentleman refers. When the bill was up, a motion was made to lay it on the table. That motion failed. The bill was further considered, until the expiration of the morning hour, when the House passed from its consideration—the gentleman from Minnesota occupying the floor. A motion is now made to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to lay the bill on the table. If that vote were reconsidered, and the vote taken upon the motion to lay on the table and carried, the gentleman from Minnesota would be deprived of the right which belongs to him under the rules. The Chair reconsiders his decision, and now decides that the motion to reconsider is not in order.

Mr. STUART. I desire to present a point of order, and it is this: That the gentleman from Minnesota being upon the floor, and having expressed his desire to make a motion in reference to that bill, and the special order had expired, the floor could be taken from him for the purpose of proceeding to other business in the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. STUART. I trust that I may be allowed to proceed first in the statement of my point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. For a moment. I want to know before we get away from the point of order the condition in which the matter stands. The consequences of a matter is one thing, and the right another thing. Do I understand the Chair to decide, as a question of order, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] can move to reconsider the vote upon any proposition, except on a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. When this question shall again come before the body, the gentleman from Minnesota will be entitled to the floor upon it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is true.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to lay the bill upon the table were entertained, it would bring up the proposition—"Shall the bill be laid on the table?" The House might vote, to lay it on the table, and thereby destroy the right of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Chair looks to consequences, and not to the right for the decision. If it is right in a decision to take into consideration its probable effect against some member, every proposition to reconsider would be decided to be out of order. That is the question I wish to get at.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen looking to the practice under the rules must look to the consequences which may result; so that both may harmonize.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly; but we cannot look to the consequences after the rules have been determined. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STUART. An appeal cannot be taken while I am upon the floor stating a question of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I will take an appeal when opportunity is afforded me.

Mr. STUART. I will beg the ear of the Chair while I state my point of order. The point I make is this: That the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] was upon the floor on this bill proceeding to make a speech. He announced his determination before he set down to make a motion to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Now, sir, under the rules which we established, governing the special order, it was within the power of any gentleman to take the floor and move to proceed to the orders of the day, because the morning hour had expired. Supposing the gentleman from Minnesota had spoken twenty minutes, having the right to speak an hour, this right of another member to interfere with him would still obtain, and the floor could be taken from him. For what purpose? Why, to proceed to the orders of the day. Now, when, on the next day, the special order again comes before the House, would not the gentleman from Minnesota be entitled to the floor to continue to the close of his speech?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the bill is not before the House, and that, therefore, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] is not entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] may be laboring under some mistake with regard to the facts of the case, and the Chair will briefly state them. The gentleman from Minnesota was upon the floor. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] arose and inquired whether the morning hour had not expired. The Chair responded that it had. The gentleman from New York then demanded that the House should proceed to other business. The gentleman from Minnesota then, and not until then, and after a considerable pause, proposed to submit a motion to commit. The Chair said that it could only be done by unanimous consent.

There was objection, and the Chair decided the gentleman's motion was cut off.

Mr. STUART. The point I make is this: The gentleman had announced his intention to submit his motion to commit at the close of his speech. He was upon the floor making a speech, which he had the right to do for an hour, but at the same time, any other member could take the floor from him. If they did take it from him under that right, my point is, that he still retains the right, when the subject again comes up, to go on and finish his speech.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing in the rules and practice of this body which carries to the Speaker's table business which was left unfinished by passing from the morning hour that sustains the gentleman's point. The Chair decides that there is no such proposition pending; that the gentleman from Minnesota is not entitled to the floor; and that this bill is upon the Speaker's table.

ROADS IN MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order, is the consideration of House bill No. 255, making appropriations for the construction of certain roads in the Territory of Minnesota. When the bill was last under consideration, the demand for the previous question on the engrossment of the bill had been seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put. The question now is: "Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time?"

The question was put, and there were, on a division—ayes 59, noes 35.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MOORE, of Louisiana, and STANTON, of Tennessee, were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This matter is being proceeded with to the exclusion of the business of the morning hour, which is the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was misled at the moment, supposing this to be a bill reported from one of the committees during the morning hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is now too late to object to its consideration. We have had action upon it.

The SPEAKER. It will certainly make no great material difference in the business of the House. The Chair would suggest, that as a matter of accommodation, the House take the vote upon this bill—the main question having been put—before proceeding to the execution of the business of the morning hour.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

The question was then taken upon the engrossment of the bill, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 78, noes 40.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and having been engrossed, was read the third time.

The question being, "Shall the bill pass?"—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it in order to say a word upon this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. STANLEY. I wish to call the attention of the House to one of these roads, for which there is an appropriation of $5,000 made, for surveying and laying out a road from Mendota to the mouth of Big Sioux river, on the Mississippi. It will take some $200,000 instead of $5,000 to complete that road. We have had no survey of the road by any officer of the Government, and no one knows what the cost of the road will be. The appropriation for the survey and laying out this road was reported from the Committee on Roads and Canals to the House. Whether it was sanctioned by that committee or not, I do not know. It was reported, I presume, as an act of courtesy and kindness to the Delegate from that district.

Mr. SIBLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to make an explanation?

Mr. STANLEY. I shall be glad to hear some explanation about it.

Mr. SIBLEY. I wish to state to the House, that at the first session of the last Congress, $5,000 was appropriated for the survey of the road to which the gentleman alludes. Since that time there has been a report made by the engineer who is in charge of that road under the War Department, stating that the sum of $5,000 additional will be required to enable him to complete the survey. The report of that gentleman has been made to the Department of the Engineer Bureau; and upon my request, and upon the resolution which I introduced, and which was adopted by the House, the whole document relating thereto was laid before the House at the beginning of the session; and if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLEY] had had his attention drawn to that subject, he would have found it exactly as I stated to him, that this $5,000 is asked for by the War Department.

Mr. STANLEY. What is the length of that road?

Mr. SIBLEY. It is between two hundred and fifty and two hundred and sixty miles long. I beg leave to state further to the gentleman, that the greater part of this road is through a prairie country, and very little is required to make it. It is not like a road running through a timbered country.

Mr. STANLEY. In regard to these roads, we should not spend a great deal in attempting to do what the Territory itself can do. I object to this one-sided, partial way of making appropriations for internal improvements. We have had pending before the Committee on Commerce, since the early part of the session, a bill making appropriations for improvements in canals and navigable rivers, and upon lake coasts, in the interior, which are much more wanted than these roads; and we are not to set an example, and take up one bill from one Territory, appropriating there, nobody knows how much—I think in this bill alone, some $45,000—and discarding all the other and necessary improvements throughout the United States. It is not fair. Let there be a general bill reported for all these Territories, and for such States as require internal improvements within their borders. A general system is what I desire—a system which will give fair play to all parts of this territory of ours. Let the Territories stand on the same footing with the States; and when they do that we will have justice done to all the States and Territories, and not before. I hope, then, that we shall not set the bad example of partial legislation, by taking up one or two bills like the present, and appropriating unlimited sums of money, and that, too, through an act of courtesy. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SIBLEY] is entitled to all we can give him as a Delegate—he deserves it—but the Territories should not receive such appropriations before the adoption of a general system which would do justice to all of the States. Unless the old States put a stop to this system of voting to the Western country all the money they want, we shall have no harbors improved, no tariff, and no fortifications upon our sea-coast. If we take up these things by piecemeal, this new State and that new State will get their railroads, (as some of them have already got them,) and the interests of the old States will be entirely overlooked and neglected. Such is the operation of the present system, if it can be called a system. The present mode of legislating upon this subject is partial and unjust in its character. I hope it will be abandoned, and that we will wait until we get some fair and general plan, which will do justice to all the States. Then I will cheerfully vote to give the Delegates of Territories all they want. I am willing to give them everything reasonable, and everything in the way of internal improvements, and in other matters, which they ought to have; but until we have justice done to the old States, I trust that the House will pause in their career; that it will not pursue a policy that gives to one portion of the country lavish appropriations for internal improvements, and denies it to the others.

Mr. SIBLEY. I am not about to detain the House with any remarks at this stage of the proceedings, as to the abstract right of Congress to make appropriations of money for constructing roads in Territories. I take it for granted that every gentleman here is well aware that such has been the practice which obtained at the beginning of the Government, and has been continued from that time down to the present. I beg leave to state to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLEY] that the Territory of Minnesota has never received one acre of land, and never asked for one acre of land, except what was given her for educational purposes. She has never asked for anything which is unreasonable; and the amount of money expended there has been limited indeed. We have no light-houses. We have never asked for the improvement of rivers; but all that we have asked of this Congress is, that you will give us a small amount of money to enable us to build a road, by which we may be enabled to pass from one part of the Territory to another. With this statement, and knowing that the House will not, under any circumstances, confound the system of internal improvements in the States with these small territorial appropriations, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the bill, and there were—yeas 85; nays 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, John Appleton, Bell, Ribbhaus, Bowie, Branton, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chastain, Clark, Cleveland, Conger, John G. Thompson, Toombs, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Wilcox, and Wildrick—83.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA MINT BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. As there was objection to the Committee on Ways and Means reporting the California Mint bill, and at the time it seemed to be based upon the fact that it would interfere with the business of the morning hour, I desire now to ask the permission of the House that the committee be allowed to report that bill. I will state a fact or two in regard to this matter—and I think it due to the committee that I should state it—that this bill has been acted upon by the Committee on Ways and Means, and they have been ready to report it, I believe, some three or four months at least. If the bill is to be passed at all, it seems now to be proper that it should be reported to the House.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOCSTON,] which I hope he will answer before he takes his seat. I wish to inquire of him whether the committee of which he is chairman had under consideration also the question of a Mint at the city of New York, and whether they are not ready to report a bill favorable to that application? And if so, I ask of him that he would make the report at the same time he makes this in regard to California.

Mr. HOUSTON. In reply to the question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEYMOUR,] I will state, that the Committee on Ways and Means have also ordered a bill to be reported, establishing a Mint in the city of New York. That bill, I believe, is in the hands of another member of the committee, and not in mine. This bill was acted upon first, and I am willing, under the restrictions of the two bills, to vote for both of them. But this is a bill intended more directly and immediately to reach and relieve the distresses which exist in California than any other bill, and should be disposed of at once. The New York bill, it is true, is one demanded by the commercial interests of that city and the country, and I expect to support it. This bill, however, goes to sustain and protect against loss the gold diggers—the workers—the men who do not traffic in their own labor, except when forced to do so under circumstances such as exist now in California. They are now forced into a state of traffic by which they lose largely. This bill is intended for the relief of gold diggers and laborers, and hence it is that I make the appeal directly to the House to allow it to be reported. I do not propose, and I think the gentlemen who are in favor of both of these bills should not desire to fasten them together with the view that the one may carry the other. We should allow the two bills to come before the House upon their merits; and if they have merits such as will recommend them to the consideration of Congress, we should let them pass; but do not blend them together. Let them stand untrammelled one by the other. I do not desire that one shall be carried through by the influence of the other.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to say a word or two in this connection. It is not the desire of any gentleman—

Mr. TOOMBS. I rise to a point of order. Has the gentleman from Alabama a right to the floor himself?

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask permission to report this bill to the House.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I object to it, and that will settle it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The morning hour, I understand, has expired.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not yet been consumed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I ask for the regular order of business.

Mr. GORMAN. There is a motion pending which I think has precedence at this time, which I ask to have considered. Some three weeks since this House ordered a bill—No. 239, to supply a deficiency to the State of Indiana of lands granted to a university in said State—to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] moved to reconsider the vote making the reference. I desire that that motion may be considered now. I submit to the Chair whether it has not preference?

The SPEAKER. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana, the Chair states that it is not in order to call up that proposition until the morning hour has expired.

Mr. GORMAN. I thought the morning hour had expired.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not commenced yet.

FLORIDA RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. The bill reported by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] from the Committee on Public Lands, in relation to the Florida railroad, is the first bill in order. The gentleman from Florida has possession of the bill, so the Clerk informs the Speaker.

Mr. HALL. Is not the Iowa bill the first bill in order this morning? What has become of it?

The SPEAKER. There is a proposition to reconsider the motion to lay that bill upon the table. If that motion is called up, the Chair will rule that it is in order.

Mr. HALL. I do not wish to call it up now.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, stating that that body had passed a joint resolution, and bill of the House, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to ratify and confirm an exchange of lands between the United States and Charles Reynolds, of the city Natchez, in the State of Mississippi; also, an act to change the name of an American-built vessel named Amelia, and to grant a register in her name; and an act to authorize the correction of erroneous location of military bounty land warrants by actual settlers on the public lands.]

Mr. DEAN. I ask if any one has a right to call up that motion to reconsider except the gentleman from Missouri, who made it?

The SPEAKER. Not while the gentleman from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. ORR. I understand the Florida railroad bill is the first business in order.

The SPEAKER. The Florida bill is the first business in order.

Mr. ORR. The bill was ordered to be printed a week ago, when it was postponed until this day. I understand that it is in the hands of the printer, and not yet returned. I therefore move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I move, sir, if it be in order, as I think it is, that the Committee on Ways and Means be allowed to report back the bill for the establishment of a branch Mint in California.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I object.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

GRANTS OF LAND FOR RAILROADS.

Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill making grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. B. I desire to put that bill upon its passage. I do not want to debate it, but I wish to have the vote of the House upon it.

Mr. COBB. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York what bill it is?

The SPEAKER. It is the bill this moment reported.

Mr. BENNETT. I should like to have the bill read.

The Clerk then read the first and second sections of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there is hereby severally granted to the States named herein, the following amounts of public land, respectively, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, viz:

To Missouri, three million acres; to Alabama, two million five hundred thousand acres; to Iowa, three million acres; to Michigan, two million five hundred thousand acres; to Wisconsin, two million five hundred thousand acres; to Louisiana, two million five hundred thousand acres; to Mississippi, two million acres; to Florida, two million acres; to Arkansas, three million acres; to California, three million acres; to Illinois, one million acres; to Indiana, all the public lands not sold, located, or reserved, lying within her limits, and one million acres in addition thereto; to Ohio, all the public land not sold, located, or reserved, lying within her limits, and two million acres in addition thereto; and to each of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee, at the rate of one hundred and fifty thousand acres, for each Senator and Representative in the Thirty-second Congress, from said States, respectively. And to each of the organized Territories, and the District of Columbia, one hundred and fifty thousand acres.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the eleven States, in the preceding section first named, are authorized to apply the proceeds of the lands, hereby severally granted to them, to aid in the construction of railroads in the States respectively. And a right of way through the public lands is hereby severally granted to the said States, and they are severally authorized to take necessary materials of earth, stone, and timber, for the construction of the said railroads, respectively, from the public lands adjacent thereto. And in locating each of the said railroads, and assigning the limits thereto, no more land shall be taken from the United States than is necessary for the convenient construction and use of each of said railroads, respectively, including stations, and the public buildings of all kinds, connected with said roads, turnouts, and such other appurtenances as are necessary or usually enjoyed by railroad companies. And a copy of the location of said several roads, respectively, made under the direction of the Legislature of each State, in which said roads are made, shall be forwarded to the proper local land offices, and the General Land Office at Washington city, within ninety days after the same are completed, respectively, and shall be duly recorded. And there is hereby severally granted to each of the eleven States, in the preceding section first named, respectively, the amount of land therein specified, for the purpose of making railroads therein respectively, as aforesaid, to be taken along the entire length of the line or route of said several railroads, so far as the United States own lands on the line of said several roads, in manner following, viz: every alternate section of land designated by even numbers for six miles in width on each side of said several railroads. But in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the lines or routes of any of said roads are definitely fixed in the manner and by the authority aforesaid, sold any section, or any part thereof, granted aforesaid, or that the right of preemption has attached to the same, then it shall be lawful for any agent or agents to be appointed by the Governor of each of said States, respectively, to select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from the lands of the United States most contiguous to the tiers or sections above specified, so much land in alternate sections or parts of sections as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold, or to which the right of preemption has attached as aforesaid, which lands (thus selected in lieu of those sold or to which preemption rights have attached as aforesaid, together with the sections and parts of sections designated by even numbers, as aforesaid, and appropriated (as aforesaid,) shall be held by each of the said eleven States first named, respectively, to the amount in the preceding section named for each of said several States, for the uses and purposes aforesaid. But the lands to be so located and selected for, and on account of, each of said roads, shall in no case be more than six sections of land for each mile of said road: Provided, That the lands hereby granted to the said eleven first-named States, shall be exclusively applied to construct, or aid in the construction of, railroads in said States, respectively, and shall be sold and disposed of only as the work progresses, and in proportion to the length of railroad completed upon each of said roads, and the same shall be applied to no other purpose: And provided, also, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by an act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatever, shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of said railroads through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be and is hereby granted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) I wish to inquire how this bill is before the House. The SPEAKER. It was reported a few moments since from the Committee on Public Lands. Mr. JONES. That is the very point I desire to ascertain.

Mr. HALL. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee. A petition was filed under a rule of this House, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, praying Congress to pass this bill.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to know how the gentleman gets the floor.

The SPEAKER. He is raising a question of order.

Mr. HALL, (resuming.) The petition came up before the Committee on Public Lands, and they directed that bill to be reported back to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. JONES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the question of order that it is not a report from the committee. That committee having a petition referred to them, and the majority thereof having voted adverse to the prayer of the petition, the bill reported to the House with a recommendation that it be rejected is a minority report, and does not come properly before the House.

Mr. HALL. I will state that this bill, as I understand, was made a part of the petition, and in that way the Committee on Public Lands took cognizance of it. Being made part of the petition we supposed that it was properly before us, and therefore recommended that it do not pass.

Mr. JONES. The prayer of the petition, if I understood the gentleman, was to pass a bill similar to the bill being now read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri states that the bill itself was a part of the memorial, which memorial the committee ordered to be reported with a recommendation that the bill do not pass.

Mr. JONES. It never came into this House as a bill. It never was introduced under the rule of the House as a bill and referred to that committee. It went to that committee, if I understand the gentleman, under the rule, as a petition, and not as a bill. It cannot, therefore, be got before the House for action in this manner. It is a report of a minority of the committee, and consequently not a report at all.

Mr. HALL. It is a report of the majority of the committee, because the committee decided that a report should be made recommending that the bill should not pass.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair is, that if the bill were embodied and formed part of a memorial, and the committee directed that memorial to be reported back, or made an adverse report upon it, it cannot come in in the shape of a bill to be acted upon and passed by the House.

Mr. JONES. We have a rule here that notice shall be given of intention to introduce a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the view taken by the gentleman from Tennessee, according to the facts stated by him. The Chair, however, wishes to be corrected if he is misled in regard to the statement of facts.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to make this statement. A memorial was presented to the Committee on Public Lands, asking the passage of a bill similar to the one now presented. The bill did not accompany that memorial. I presented the bill, and upon its presentation a majority of the committee were unwilling to vote for the bill; but the committee, I believe with one exception, directed me to report the bill accompanied by the recommendation that it do not pass, which I intend to take the sense of the House upon as soon as I can get the bill read, by moving the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That being the state of facts, the Chair decides that the bill is before the House.

Mr. BENNETT. That is the fact; but I do not desire to spend any time on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York states that the bill was ordered to be reported by the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With a recommendation that it be rejected.

The SPEAKER. Then it is a majority report against the prayer of the petition. It is the report by the committee that a bill be reported to the House.

Mr. JONES. But it never was referred to the committee; and if this practice is to prevail, when a member cannot get the consent of the House to introduce a bill, all he will have to do will be just to give a caption to it by way of petition, put the bill at the end, file it, and have it referred to a committee, and the committee can report it back to the House.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the facts they are, that a petition was sent to the Committee on Public Lands; that the Committee on Public Lands, basing their action upon that petition, directed this bill to be reported to the House.

Mr. JONES. Is it in the history of legislative proceedings that a committee have originated a bill, reported it to the House, and recommended that it did not pass? Where a bill is referred to a committee then it is the duty of the committee to report it back.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, the Chair supposes, will not controvert the proposition, that a committee have the right to originate a bill and report it to the House for its action.

Mr. JONES. I deny the right of any committee to originate a bill and report it here with a recommendation that it do not pass, because it is not a report of the committee, but the minority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot go beyond the report of the committee, which is that this bill be reported to the House. The Chair had heard nothing of the recommendation that it do not pass. That report was not made to the Chair at all.

Mr. JONES. The chairman of the committee states that it was ordered to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. HALL. The gentleman from New York does not pretend that he was directed to report this bill, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The chair is informed that there is a written report of the committee, embracing a recommendation that the bill do not pass.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask that that report may be read.

The report was then read by the Clerk, as follows:

"The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of George W. Sumner and others, asking that grants of land, for railroad and school purposes, may be made equally to all the States, on some fair and just principle of apportionment, accompanied by a bill for that purpose, have, according to order, had the same under consideration, and report the said bill, without amendment, to the House; a majority of said committee direct that said report be made, accompanied by a recommendation that said bill do not pass."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the bill is regularly before the body.

Mr. SWEETSER. Is it in order to move to lay that bill and report upon the table?

The SPEAKER. Not while the gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair. If that is to be the practice of the House, that bills can be got in in this way, let the House say so.

Mr. TOOMBS. The bill is before the House, as well with one recommendation as another.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reports a bill from the Committee on Public Lands, accompanied with a recommendation that the bill do not pass. The Chair thinks the report is properly before this body. From this decision of the Chair the gentleman from Tennessee takes an appeal. "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of this body?"

Mr. STUART. I understand the report to state the fact which the Speaker decided but a short time ago would make it an adverse report. That report states that this is the very bill which was referred with the memorial. Now, I understood the Chair to say, that if that was the fact, the bill was not properly before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated, that if a bill was embodied in a memorial, and that memorial was reported with an adverse report from the committee, that then it could not be considered in the form of a bill. But the Chair understands the report of the committee in this case to be precisely this: that the bill now being read by the Clerk should be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass. It is for the House to determine whether it will follow that recommendation or not.

Mr. STUART. I call the attention of the Chair to the report of the committee. The Chair will see that it states that the memorial, together with the bill, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would not alter the proposition at all, and that the bill is properly before the House.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Our rules declare how bills can be brought before this House. This bill has not come in in pursuance of those rules. The fact that the committee reported back this bill does not make any exception, because they were bound to report it back.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does not.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then how can this bill get into the House?

The SPEAKER. It was reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEPHENS. They were obliged to report back what was sent to them. They could not destroy the paper. They were obliged to report it back because it was a part of the memorial.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it was not a part of the memorial. It is a bill which the committee have ordered to be reported, basing their action upon the memorial.

Mr. STEPHENS. I did not understand it so. I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to say that the bill was a part of the memorial.

The SPEAKER. That statement has been corrected. The Chair will again state the facts, and begs the committee to correct him if he is in error.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, a petition or memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Basing their action upon that memorial, the committee have reported a bill, with a recommendation, to be sure, that the bill do not pass. But the committee having directed the bill to be reported, the Chair is of the opinion that it is properly before the House, and it is for the House to determine whether they will follow the recommendation of the committee or not. That being the decision of the Chair, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] takes an appeal. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JOHNSON] moves to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I merely wish to say this: that the committee has no right to originate a bill, report it to the House, and recommend its rejection.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The question was then taken on Mr. JOHNSON'S motion, and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 90, noes 41.

So the appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the House.

Mr. OLDS. Has the bill received its second reading?

The SPEAKER. It has, and is being read for the information of the House. After the bill was, in the ordinary way, read a second time by its title, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] said it was his wish to put it upon its passage, and asked that the bill might be read for information. The Clerk was in the act of reading it, when he was interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MEADE. Is it too late to make a motion to reject the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I certainly did not understand that the bill was passing its readings. It was on the point of being reported from the committee, and it was upon that point the gentleman was making his speech.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states that the bill was read by its title a first and second time, without objection. The gentleman from New York then specified his desire to have the bill put upon its passage, and asked that it might be read. The Clerk was in the act of reading the bill, when he was arrested by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. There is a mistake, if I am correct, in regard to a matter of fact. I understand the fact to be, that this is not a bill originated by the committee upon a petition, but a bill that accompanied the petition to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand it.

Mr. STUART. That is the very point I made, and I ask the Chair to turn his attention to the report. It is expressly stated there—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his question of order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] to say that this was not a bill originated by the committee upon a petition, but a bill that accompanied a petition to the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. The gentleman is mistaken as to the facts. The memorial was sent up to the Clerk's desk, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. There was no bill with it. I presented the bill to the committee, and they directed me to report it to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass. But the bill was not filed at the desk.

Mr. HARRIS. Was this bill originated by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, sir; I am a member of that committee.

Mr. STUART. I ask to have the report read again, and I make the point of order that this bill, as stated by the committee, was sent to the committee with a memorial, and is not a bill which they originated.

The SPEAKER. And for that reason, the gentleman takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. STUART. I take an appeal for the reason that the question now is whether the report of the committee shall be adopted, and not whether the bill shall be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. For the information of the Chair and of the House, the report accompanying the bill will again be read. The Chair desires to act understandingly in regard to this matter.

The Clerk again read the report.

Mr. STUART. My point of order is this, that the question on that report is, Shall the report of the committee be concurred in?—that this bill is a part of the memorial, and that the report is adverse to the prayer of the petitioners.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it was the direction of the committee that the bill be reported to the House. It is true that there is a recommendation that the bill do not pass.

Mr. STUART. What is the question, then, before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is, first, upon the reading of the bill, and then upon its engrossment.

Mr. STUART. What becomes of the recommendation of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It is to be followed, or not, as the House thinks proper. The gentleman, the Chair supposes, would hardly take up a report and consider it instead of the bill accompanying the report.

Mr. STUART. Is not the very recommendation of the committee that the bill be rejected?

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states to the House, that, as he understands it, the Committee on Public Lands have directed—and have done so distinctly—the gentleman from New York, a member of that committee, to report this bill for the consideration of the House. It is true they have submitted a short report, in which they recommend to the House that the bill do not pass. The Chair again decides that the bill is before this body, and that it is for the House to follow, or not, as it may see fit, the recommendation of the committee, aside from the bill.

Mr. STUART. Will the Speaker allow me to ask this question: Is there any distinction between—[Loud cries of "Order!"]—I take it that I have a right to state my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to state his point of order, and take an appeal.

Mr. STUART. Is there any distinction between a report from the Committee on Public Lands and a report from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? A report being made to the House, with a recommendation that the bill be rejected, is not the question, in either instance, on concurring in the report of the committee?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. STUART. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman again proposes to appeal from the decision of the Chair on a point which has already been determined by the House. The Chair thinks it is hardly competent for him to do so.

Mr. STUART. I do not think it is the same point. I make the point that the first question, and the only question that can be first put, is upon concurring upon the report.

The SPEAKER. What would the gentleman do if the committee only recommended the passage of the bill? Would he take up the report and act upon it, or would he act upon the bill?

Mr. STUART. If the committee recommended the passage of the bill, then the question is on the ordinary stages for that purpose. But, suppose the House adopts the report of the committee in this case, that settles the question; if they reject the report of the committee, then the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to a point of order, which lies back of all this. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] reported this bill and proposed to put it upon its passage. He then requested that it might be read for information. The Speaker asked if there was objection, no objection was made, and the reading proceeded. Now I hold that it is out of order to interrupt the reading until it is through.

The SPEAKER. For that reason, as well as for the reasons given by the Chair, the Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. STUART. Under the circumstances, I take an appeal from the decision.

Mr. FOWLER. And I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. STUART. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. FOWLER'S motion, and it was agreed to. So the appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair was sustained, as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I submit this question of order, that this bill was not originated by the Committee on Public Lands; that it never was introduced into this House and referred to that committee. It seems to have been reported back by the committee upon the supposition that it was introduced and properly referred to them, and they felt it to be their duty to report it back to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass. If the Clerk will refer to the Journal, we can ascertain whether it was introduced and so referred. I hold in my hand the written report of the committee, which is in these words: "The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of George W. Sumner and others, asking that grants of land, for railroad and school purposes, may be made equally to all the States upon some fair and just principle of apportionment, accompanied by a bill for that purpose, [the memorial accompanied by a bill!] have had the same under consideration," and so forth.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the great difficulty results from a misapprehension of the facts of the case. The bill was drawn by myself, and the committee agreed, with but one dissenting voice, to report it to the House for consideration. But a majority of that committee were not willing to vote for the bill, and therefore they voted to report it to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.] The reason stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FOWLER] would be conclusive if there were no other reason. But this bill was reported by the Committee on Public Lands, was received without objection, and was read a first and second time. It is therefore too late now for the gentleman to raise his point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no disposition to appeal. I desire, however, to say to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] that if I have misconceived the facts, I was misled by the written report of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. POLK. I desire to inquire if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. FOWLER. I insist the reading of the bill shall be concluded.

The remainder of the bill was then read.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That of the lands granted by this act to the said first-named eleven States, a portion thereof shall be applied in conformity with the foregoing provisions, to aid in the construction of the railroads already commenced by said States respectively, or for which said States have made appropriations, or pledged the credit of said States respectively, and the remainder of the land hereby granted to each of said several States, to be applied in the manner aforesaid, to aid in the construction of such other railroads as the Legislatures of said several States may respectively designate.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the nineteen States in said first section of this act last named, and said Territories and District, are severally authorized to apply the proceeds of the lands hereby severally granted to each of said States, Territories, and District to the support of schools. And the Commissioner of Public Lands, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall issue to each of said nineteen States, said Territories, and District, respectively, land warrants to the amount in all to which each of said nineteen States, and said Territories and District, are respectively entitled under this act, (except so far as the lands granted to Ohio and Indiana are situated within the limits of said States.)

And said nineteen States, and said Territories and District, are severally authorized to sell and dispose of said land warrants, and the same are to be valid and effectual in the hands of any owner or holder thereof, and may be located by such owner or holder, upon any public lands subject to private entry, in the same manner as land warrants for military services are authorized by law to be located. And the title of the land so located by any owner or holder of said land warrants, shall be secured and perfected to such owner or holder, in the same manner as other land warrants issued by the United States.

Said land warrants shall be so engraved and printed as to prevent deception and counterfeiting; shall be signed by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the Public Lands, or for them by such other persons as the Secretary may direct, and countersigned by the Governor of each State receiving the same, or by such other officers as the said nineteen States, Territories, and District, may respectively designate for that purpose; and said land warrants shall be for not less than eighty, nor over one hundred and sixty acres each: Provided, That no State, Territory, or District, shall be authorized to locate any warrants in its own name or for its own benefit; and that no warrant issued under the provisions of this act, shall be located upon any lands to which there shall be a preemption right, or on which there shall be an actual settlement and cultivation, except by the person holding such preemption right, or by such settler and cultivator.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That each and all of the railroads in any State in the Union, made either wholly, or in part, from the proceeds of the lands granted by this act, are hereby made and declared post-roads, and shall forever hereafter, at all times, transport the mails, military stores, forces, and property of the United States, under the direction of the proper officers thereof, and Congress may by law fix the rate of compensation to be allowed for such services.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all mineral lands are hereby reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except such as are by law subject to private entry by individuals.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That all the land granted (by any other act) during the present session of Congress, to any State to aid in the construction of any railroad therein, shall be deducted from the amount granted by this act to said State.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to debate this bill, but to explain its provisions. It is intended as a general bill, in lieu of the various railroad bills urged upon the consideration of Congress; and to grant to each of the land States an amount of public lands sufficient for railroad purposes, placing them all under the provisions of a general law, and upon as nearly an equal footing as possible, taking into the account the situation and extent of each State, their condition as to navigable rivers, &c., and the amount of grants already made to each State—some having had more and some less. It has been carefully examined by members from the different States, and we have endeavored to get it as near what will be equally just to the several land States, all things considered, as it is possible to do.

It is one recommendation to this bill that it prevents partial and special legislation, and grants to all the land States land for railroads by a single act, and upon the same terms, and upon principles of fairness and equality. But it bears a still stronger claim to support, from its granting to the other States also a share of the public lands for the support of schools. Thus giving to all the States some benefit of the public lands, and not bestowing these grants exclusively upon only a part.

The second section provides the manner in which the land shall be taken, which is the same as those contained in the Iowa railroad bill, which was prepared with great care in the Senate. This is applied to all the lands granted for railroads.

I wish to call the attention of Western gentlemen to two important advantages to them which this bill has over their special bills even, if they could pass them. The first is, all these separate bills double the price of the alternate sections, to make up to the Government the loss of the land given to these roads. And this bill grants for roads to the land States over thirty millions of acres in all, which at the Government price would amount to some $40,000,000. This bill does not double the price, and will save that amount to the land States;—enough to pay for all the land granted by this bill to the old States, and about $7,000,000 more! The other is, that their bills all limit the land to be taken within fifteen miles of the road. This only limits it to six sections for each mile of the road. In both these respects this bill is decidedly more favorable to the land States than their own bills, which they urge so strenuously.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to inquire if the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, in order to show with how much liberality I mean to treat the land States, I will say that there has been already granted to those States every sixteenth section for schools. This bill proposes to grant to the old States, land to the amount of 150,000 acres to each Senator and Representative, for school purposes; yet it will not give to them so much in proportion to population as has been already granted to the land States; and it proposes to give to the land States, for roads, about five million acres more than is granted to the old States for schools, although the latter are double in population, and should have—according to population—double the amount of land, yet by this bill, they will receive less than the land States do. Upon the score of liberality, the land States stand in this position: They have lands granted them both for schools and roads, while the old States have lands granted them for schools only. And gentlemen ought not to be so illiberal as to refuse to vote an appropriation, under these circumstances, for schools to the old States, when they get both, for schools and for roads also.

Mr. COBB. I wish to make one inquiry. The gentleman from New York knows my feeling in relation to the objects of this bill. He is aware that I voted against it in committee. I am the exception he alludes to, who voted against reporting this bill to the House. I never agree to report what I cannot vote for afterwards. But supposing there was a probability the bill might pass, I had a conference with the gentleman from New York, and he agreed that the bill should be so amended, as to allow the various land States to locate their lands in a solid body, and not requiring them to locate them in alternate sections. Inasmuch as I contended that the old States, in locating their lands, would take them in a solid body, I asked, if the bill passed, that the new ones should be allowed to take theirs in a solid body, contiguous to the line of the railroad, and not be required to take alternate sections. The gentleman from New York acceded to the proposition, and I suppose he is willing still to have the bill so amended.

Mr. BENNETT. I could not do so without the consent of the committee that authorized it to be reported. And beside, I think such an amendment would render the bill much less acceptable on all hands. This bill gives them a larger grant of land than is given to the old States, for this very reason. By the present system, they were limited to take the land within fifteen miles of the road. In this they are not. They are required to take it, as near as they can conveniently, to the line of the road; but they are allowed to take six sections to each mile of the road. So this bill is better than gentlemen's individual propositions.

Mr. COBB. In Alabama, if you take alternate sections, you cannot get land enough within forty miles of the road to make the six sections to the mile.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the Clerk to read what I send to his desk. But, in the first place, I will move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands. I ask the Clerk to read this statement, showing how much land by this bill would be granted to the land States, and how much to the other States.

The following is the amount of lands granted by this bill to the land States for railroad purposes, to wit:

	Acres.		Acres.
Iowa.....	3,000,000	Alabama.....	2,500,000
Michigan.....	2,500,000	Louisiana.....	2,500,000

Missouri.....	3,000,000	Mississippi.....	2,000,000
Arkansas.....	3,000,000	California.....	3,000,000
Illinois.....	1,000,000	and has before had.....	2,700,000

Mr. BENNETT. I have had these tables read for the purpose of showing the amount of lands granted by this bill. By these tables every one can see how much is granted by it to each State precisely.

This bill will grant some five millions of acres more to the land States than to the other States, including the Central Railroad, and there had been before granted to them for railroads and canals about twelve millions of acres. The land States, if they do not double the price of the alternate sections, will be the gainer by several millions of dollars by this bill. It is better for the country if these railroad bills are to pass one or two at a session, and it is right and just that this public property should be used for school purposes in the old States, as well as for road purposes in the new. There is no other purpose in the world which benefits the entire community as much as these grants for schools. The increasing population of the old States, and the increasing number of children, require an increased school fund, and I do not know where we can ask for it better than to have it taken out of the public lands, when they are being so liberally disposed of for every other purpose. The following resolutions on this subject, from the Legislature of New York, were presented and read on a previous day:

IN SENATE, April 10, 1852.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That the public land of the Federal Government, having been obtained by grants from individual States, or by conquests, or by purchase, are, by the terms of said grants, and the nature of said purchases and conquests, the joint and common property of the States, and held in trust by the General Government as a common fund for the use and benefit of all the States, and should be faithfully and fairly disposed of for that purpose.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That while we approve of the policy that has been adopted of liberal grants to the new States, for the purposes of education and internal improvements, we deem it just for the old States to share also in these grants of land, for the same public purposes. And we claim for New York her just and rightful share of the domain, acquired by the blood and treasure of all the States.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That in consideration of the grants made to the new States, at the time of, and since their admission into the Union, and of the many applications now made for still further appropriations for railroads and internal improvements, our Senators and Representatives be requested to urge upon that body the propriety of making grants of land upon some equal and just principle of apportionment to all the States for the purpose of education, and for other useful public purposes, having due regard to the grants already made, and the population of the respective States.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That the Governor of this State be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to each of the Senators and members of Congress from New York, with a request that they be submitted to the consideration of Congress, and that our Senators and Representatives use their influence for the passage of such an act. By order, IRA P. BARNES, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY, April 17, 1852.

Resolved, That the Assembly do concur in the foregoing resolutions.

By order, RICHARD U. SHERMAN, Clerk.

Mr. POLK. I believe the morning hour has expired.

Mr. BENNETT. Is my motion entered to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. The motion is entered.

Mr. COBB. I now move that the House proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table; and I will say to the friends of the bill granting land for the benefit of the insane, that we can get at that bill in that way.

Mr. GORMAN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has; and a motion is made to proceed with the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GORMAN] has the floor; he rose and was recognized by the Speaker.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to inquire if I have the floor to-morrow upon the bill upon which I have been speaking?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be entitled to the floor.

LANDS FOR THE UNIVERSITY IN INDIANA.

Mr. GORMAN. I this day submitted a suggestion to the Chair, whether the motion to reconsider a vote by which a bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union two or three weeks since, would not now be properly in order first. I ask the opinion of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right, under the rules, to call up the consideration of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CLARK. Will it not be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It will not, while the gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands some four weeks ago, and upon some gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state the character of the bill to which he alludes?

Mr. GORMAN. Upon some gentleman's motion, it was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without the character of the bill being known, and without the delegation from Indiana being advised of the motion pending at the time. The bill provided for refunding to the State of Indiana, for the use of the State University, a deficiency of land found to be due the State under the original grant in 1816. There was granted to the Western States two entire townships of land for the benefit of the State Seminary of learning. When the State of Indiana received hers, it fell short of the amount designed in the law by about four thousand six hundred and twenty-six acres. The State of Indiana has never received that deficiency; and this bill, reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands, is intended to supply that deficiency. I desire the House to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union, because it is the only bill in which the State is directly interested, and one against which there is no possible objection, and about which there can be no possible debate.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana give the House the title of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. It is House bill No. 239, entitled "An act to supply a deficiency to the State of Indiana in a township of land granted to said State for the use of a State University, by an act of Congress, approved 19th of April, 1816." The bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] moved that the vote by which the bill was so committed be reconsidered, pending which motion the House adjourned. I ask the House to reconsider the vote referring the bill, for every gentleman here must know that if it goes there, at this advanced stage of the session, it cannot possibly be reached. As the bill meets with no objection from any quarter, and as it is a matter of right that the deficiency thus found to be due to the State by the original grant made in 1816, should be supplied, I hope it will be done. If the bill is not now taken up it will not, probably, pass during this session of Congress. I have been trying ever since I have been in Congress to get this bill through. It was stopped and delayed by other business during the last Congress. It was delayed during the first session of the last Congress, by a protracted discussion upon other important matters. It has been delayed this session by reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it comes up now upon this motion to reconsider. If there were any objection to it, I would not now urge it. I will briefly say, that the State of Indiana proceeded to sell the land for the benefit of the University, as provided for in the law, when she found that the General Government had sold out of one of the townships four thousand six hundred and twenty-six acres, the proceeds of which has gone into the National Treasury. The State of Indiana only asks you to make up the deficiency of four thousand six hundred and twenty-six acres you sold and put into your own coffers. When she came to receive that donation, she expected to receive two entire townships. That you should supply this deficiency, is the only thing the State asks directly, and the only thing that we have asked directly, or that I expect to ask, for the immediate benefit of my constituents. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the House, that the vote by which the bill was committed may be reconsidered, and that the bill may be passed.

The question was then put upon the motion to reconsider, and it was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the motion to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GORMAN. Upon that motion I move the previous question.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. GORMAN. If that motion is not necessary, I withdraw it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I withdraw the motion to commit the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. DUNCAN. I ask that the bill may be read.

The bill was accordingly read by the Clerk.

The question then being upon ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, it was put and agreed to.

The bill having been engrossed, it was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. I would inquire of the Chair what becomes of my motion to proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into committee is a privileged one, as well as that to go to the business on the Speaker's table. If it fails, the question then will be upon the gentleman's motion.

Mr. STUART. I rise to a question of order. The Chair decided but the other day that the question to go to the business on the Speaker's table must be first put and decided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair still adheres to that decision.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the first business in order, in passing from the morning hour. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa is a privileged motion, and was first made. The House has already passed from the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The motions are equally privileged, in the opinion of the Chair. According to our rules, the motion first in order is the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.]

Mr. POLK. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not desire to interfere improperly with anybody's business; but my understanding of the rule has been that it is the proper and only motion when you are passing from the morning hour. If the point is not made, and you pass from the morning hour, it is not then a privileged motion. Its privilege comes immediately after the morning hour. When you pass from the morning hour, without that motion being made, to go to other business, the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is a privileged one, and is to be first put.

The SPEAKER. At the expiration of the morning hour, as the gentleman from Alabama has stated, the motion is in order to go to the business upon the Speaker's table. That is the motion pending.

Mr. POLK. I withdraw my motion to lay upon the table.

The question was then put upon the motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I now renew my motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if it is in order.

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion for a single moment, for it is important at this particular juncture that the California branch Mint bill should be reported.

Mr. CLARK. I do not withdraw my motion.

The question was then taken to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was disagreed to.

BRANCH MINTS AGAIN.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for the Committee on Ways and Means to report the bill for the establishment of a branch Mint in the State of California; and if it were possible, sir, to make a single remark in connection with the motion, I would simply say, we have just about time enough to pass this bill—a bill which will pass without any discussion, upon which everybody's mind has been long ago made up. And I hope the House will appropriate to one single point of real business and real importance one of the thousand half hours which have been and which probably will be continued to be sacrificed.

Mr. BRIGGS. While I am not opposed to the proposition of the gentleman to establish a branch Mint in California, I would still feel myself rather recreant to the interests of my constituency were I to permit that measure to take precedence of a bill, now in the hands of the Committee on Ways and Means, for the establishment of a branch Mint in the city of New York. It does not, I think, require any new professions on my part to the members of this, who were members of the last Congress, of my faithful and earnest support of the proposition for the establishment of a branch Mint in California.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order. If the gentleman objects, that is sufficient; if he does not, debate is not in order.

Mr. BRIGGS. I was merely going to make a suggestion to the House.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order. Is objection made to the proposition of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN. I object.

Mr. POLK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, that the Committee on Ways and Means be permitted to report both the New York and California bills for the establishment of branch Mints.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to that.

Mr. POLK. I will only say to the gentleman from New York that we will never pass his bill in the world.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK] is entitled to the floor, has a part of his speech made, and he is anxious to get the last half out after the first.

The SPEAKER. No business has intervened between the voting down of the same motion a few moments ago and its renewal now.

Mr. HOUSTON. There were two propositions made.

The SPEAKER. No regular business has intervened.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Iowa is exceedingly anxious to conclude the speech he has commenced.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, inclosing a letter from the Director of the Mint at Philadelphia, suggesting that so much of the act of 18th January, 1837, which obliges the Mint to purchase copper planchets prepared for the copper coinage, be so far modified as to authorize the preparation in the Mint of said planchets from copper bullion; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLARK moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; which motion was agreed to—ayes 96, noes not counted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the bill making appropriations for the support of the Indian Department, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CLARK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLARK concluded the remarks commenced when the House was last in committee, in favor of the Iowa railroad bill. [Mr. C.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. MOREHEAD next obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. CAMPELL, of Ohio, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. RICHARDSON] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 43, and had come to no resolution thereon.

On motion by Mr. CLINGMAN,
The House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 9, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Johnson, and his associates, proposing to construct a railroad and line of telegraph from New Orleans to San Francisco, and to carry the mails, in four-horse coaches, from the head of steamboat navigation, on the Red river, via El Paso and the Rio Gila, to San Francisco, upon certain conditions; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, the memorial of Sanforth Kidder, praying the appointment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners appointed for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. SOULE presented the memorial of Auguste Métaïf, asking Congress to allow him compensation for services rendered in the customhouse at New Orleans; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the memorial of Thayer & Co., of New Orleans, praying for the grant of certain lands, to effect a communication, by railroad and steamboat, from the Mississippi river to Grand Terre, on the Gulf of Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CLEMENS presented a petition of citizens of New Mexico, praying an appropriation of money in lieu of the land reserved for schools in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DOUGLAS presented two petitions of citizens of Illinois, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the homestead bill, may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a memorial of John Shaw and others, proposing a railroad, commencing at the most southern shore of Lake Michigan; thence, if practicable, due west to the Pacific; and remonstrating against the proposed Whitney's railroad to the Pacific; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a petition of Charles Burris and others, praying that land may be granted to certain residents of the United States, and to those who employed substitutes to perform military service for them; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have received a memorial, not stating the particular place from which it comes, signed by a large number of persons, in regard to the assumption by the Federal Government of State debts, and referring particularly to the State debt of Illinois, and suggesting a mode by which that debt might be discharged.

I will present the memorial, simply repeating my unyielding opposition to the object for which it prays. I move that the memorial be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of the heir of Captain Richard Shubrick, deceased, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Rufus Van Brunt, praying relief for losses incurred by him in consequence of the occupation of his property, in 1814, by troops raised for the defense of the city of New York, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion to print the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. SUMNER, relative to cheap ocean postage, reported in favor of printing the same; which was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the memorial of Benjamin Chapman, and resolutions of the Legislature of California, for the relief of Nathaniel McManafee, Captain William Waldo, Charles N. Hall, and J. J. Petrie, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the memorial of William A. Seely, praying the interposition of the United States to enable him to obtain from Holland the reward offered by that Government for the recovery of certain jewels, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions, and that the last-named be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to:

The petition of newspaper agents in New York and Boston; and

The petition of Henry S. Foote and other citizens of Mississippi.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the joint resolution from the House of Representatives changing the name of the St. Peter's river, in Minnesota Territory, have directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its immediate passage. The fact of the case is simply this: This river is sometimes known as the St. Peter's, and sometimes as the Minnesota river; some acts of Congress designate it by the one name, and some by the other; this produces confusion; the Legislature of the Territory of Minnesota have asked us to fix the name of the river by law. I ask that the joint resolution be acted on now. There can be no possible objection to it.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides, that the river heretofore known as the St. Peter's river shall hereafter be known and designated on the public records as the Minnesota river. No amendment being offered, it was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. FELCH. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the bill to extend the provisions of an act approved March 3d, 1847, and an act approved February 26th, 1849, carrying into effect the existing compacts with the States of Alabama and Mississippi, in relation to the five per cent. fund and the school reservation. A bill was reported by the committee some time since, and is now upon the Calendar, which is of precisely the same import as this bill. I therefore move that this bill be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FELCH also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of John James Flournoy, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

REGISTERS OF VESSELS.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the resolution of the Senate directing an inquiry into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue registers to vessels in certain cases, have instructed me to report a bill.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. HAMLIN. That bill embodies principles which have met the approbation of the Government from its foundation. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register to a vessel built in a foreign country, and which has been wrecked in the United States, and purchased by an American citizen, or citizens, in all cases where the cost of repairs equals three fourths of the value of the vessel repaired. We have had numerous applications for the granting of registers of that character, and they have uniformly been granted. The Committee on Commerce have, therefore, deemed it proper to pass a general bill; and inasmuch as the bill is passed on a principle which has been uniformly recognized, and will prevent frequent and vexatious special legislation on the subject, I hope it may be considered now and passed. I move, therefore, that we proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no amendment proposed, it was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. Subsequently it was read a third time and passed.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, reported a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved July 4th, 1836; and also "An act to provide additional examiners in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," approved May 27th, 1848.

The bill was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire, and such is the unanimous desire of the committee, that this bill should be put upon its passage immediately. It is merely to supply what is considered by some an omission in former acts. By the act of 1836, it was enacted that the chief clerk of the Patent Office "in all cases during the necessary absence of the Commissioner, or when the said principal office shall become vacant, shall have the charge and custody of the seal, and of the records, books, papers, machines, models, and all other things belonging to the said office, and shall perform the duties of Commissioner during such vacancy." It has been construed that the latter clause, with regard to performing the duties of the Commissioner, does not apply to the temporary absence of the Commissioner, although by the law, I think that the chief clerk is authorized during such temporary absence, and also in cases of vacancy created by death or resignation, to act in his place. It has been suggested to the committee to remove this difficulty, to add the other words in that bill, "during the temporary absence of the Commissioner." That is the sole object of the bill, and it is absolutely necessary to avoid the difficulty in which patentees may be involved in consequence of the existing laws being construed in two ways. For my own part, I thought the word "vacancy" applied to absence temporarily, as well as to a vacancy created by resignation or death; but, for the purpose of making the thing plain, the committee are of the opinion that we should make this verbal alteration in the law.

The bill was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It declares, that whereas, under the second section of the act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved July 4th, 1836, the chief clerk of the Patent Office has, during the necessary absence of the Commissioner of Patents, performed the duties of that office; and whereas, under the first section of the act entitled "An act to provide additional examiners in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," approved May 27th, 1848, the Commissioner of Patents did assume jurisdiction of, and decided cases pending before the board in the place of which he was substituted by the act; and whereas doubts have arisen whether, by a strict construction of such section, the chief clerk of the Patent Office had authority to act as Commissioner, except in cases of an actual vacancy, and whether the Commissioner of Patents, under the act of May 27th, 1848, took any jurisdiction over cases pending before the board abolished by said act, therefore, in order to remove such doubts, it is enacted that all such acts of the chief clerk of the Patent Office, and of the Commissioner of Patents, shall be held and deemed valid and effectual in law: Provided, however, That this act shall not be construed to deprive any person of any other defense under such acts which by law may be made. It also enacts that hereafter the chief clerk of the Patent Office shall in all cases during the necessary absence of the Commissioner of Patents, perform the duties of the Commissioner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

WILLIAM S. PAYNE.

Mr. HUNTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report back House bill for the relief of William S. Payne, with the recommendation that it pass, and to ask that it may be taken up and acted on now. It is a small bill, involving the sum of $50, which was a fine paid by mistake.

No objection was made, and the bill was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It enacts that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to William S. Payne, of the State of Virginia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $50, being the amount of a fine imposed on him, and by him paid to the collector at Tappahannock, for neglecting to renew the license of the vessel William Page, in 1849.

This was a sum paid by mistake. The Secretary of the Treasury had ordered it to be refunded, but it had been paid into the Treasury, and therefore requires a law to provide for refunding it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be read a third time; and, being read a third time, was passed.

REPORT ON MARINE CONDENSERS.

Mr. PRATT submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to the Senate the report on marine condensers, of a board constituted under the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1851, approved 28th September, 1850, together with any conclusions and recommendations of the Navy Department on the same.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills:

An act to run and establish the boundary between the State of Texas and the Territories of the United States;

An act making an appropriation for the completion of the public buildings in the Territory of Minnesota;

An act making further appropriations for the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota;

An act to authorize the legislative authorities of the several Territories to control the appropriations to be made by Congress for the support of the Government of said Territories;

An act to supply a deficiency to the State of Indiana in a township of land granted to said State for the use of a State university, by an act of Congress, approved April 19, 1816; and

An act for the construction of military roads in Oregon Territory.

The above-named bills were severally read a first and second time by their titles and referred—the four first to the Committee on Territories, the fifth to the Committee on Public Lands, and the sixth to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by the hands of Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, communicating the fact that the House had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, (with the concurrence of the Senate,) That the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, close the present session of Congress by an adjournment of their respective Houses on Monday, the 16th day of August next, at the hour of twelve, m.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it would be better to lay the resolution on the table for the present. It is impossible for us to say how far the public business will have progressed at the period fixed by it. I should be as well pleased as any other Senator, if it were possible for us to adjourn at that time, but there is yet much to do. We have only passed two appropriation bills as yet, and all the general appropriation bills—I mean the appropriation bills for the next fiscal year—are yet to come up. It seems to me, that it would be premature to pass this resolution to-day; for, although as anxious as other Senators to get away as soon as possible, I cannot forget that the public duty must be discharged. I move, therefore, that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

The PRESIDENT. Senate bill No. 175 has been returned with amendments from the House of Representatives, which will be read and taken up, if such is the pleasure of the Senate. It is a bill relating to the salaries of officers of the Territories of the United States, and to repeal the proviso in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1852, and for other purposes," approved March 3d, 1851.

The amendments proposed are, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following sections:

Sec. 1. That whenever any officer of either of the Territories of the United States shall be absent therefrom, and from the duties of his office, no salary shall be paid him during the year in which such absence shall occur, unless good cause therefor shall be shown to the President of the United States, who shall officially certify his opinion of such leave to the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, to be filed in his office.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the proviso contained in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1851, relating to the officers of the Territories of the United States," be and the same is hereby so modified, as to authorize the payment of the salary of any officer therein named, notwithstanding such officer may have been absent from such Territory and his official duties for more than sixty days: Provided, The President of the United States shall certify officially his opinion that the absence of such officer has been for good and sufficient cause.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That nothing in the said proviso, or in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the payment of the salaries of the chief justice, associate justices, and the Secretary of State of the Territory of Utah, who have withdrawn from the said Territory for reasons set forth in their report to the President of the United States.

Strike out all after the words "United States" in the title, so that it shall read: "An act relating to the salaries of officers of the Territories of the United States."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Would it not be better to refer that bill with the amendments to the Committee on the Judiciary? I move that it be so referred in order that the committee may have an opportunity of considering and reporting upon these amendments.

Mr. CLEMENS. I hope that reference will not be made. These amendments were made in the House of Representatives by the concurrence, I believe, of almost every member. They are satisfactory everywhere. The bill, as it is amended, seems to me to be right. It requires no further investigation, and I hope the amendments will be concurred in.

Mr. GEYER. I apprehend there is no material alteration in substance of the bill. The alterations are merely in the phraseology. There are some minor details that are somewhat different from those in the bill as it went from the Senate; but generally, the features of the bill are the same.

Several SENATORS. Let the bill pass.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky withdraw his motion to refer?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to the withdrawal of the motion to refer. No gentleman makes any objection, and if Senators are satisfied I am. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move now that the amendments of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw that motion, in order that we may take up the general Calendar. The first business upon the Calendar is a joint resolution authorizing the completion of a war steamer for harbor defense. It has already been under consideration. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] has addressed the Senate upon the subject, and I am sure that we can get through with the resolution in a short time, and then I shall be willing to go into Executive session.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have no objection to that course, if there shall be no debate on the resolution.

Mr. GWIN. I have nothing to say upon it. It has been debated by the Senator from New Jersey, and I presume it can be acted upon without debate.

Mr. ATCHISON. Then I withdraw my motion.

WAR STEAMER FOR HARBOR DEFENSE.

Mr. GWIN. I move to take up the first general order, being a joint resolution authorizing the completion of a war steamer for harbor defense.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the resolution. It requires the Secretary of the Navy to have completed, without unnecessary delay, the war steamer contracted for with Mr. Robert L. Stevens, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed April 14, 1842.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to hear that act of Congress read.

The Secretary read the act, as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby authorized to enter into contract with Robert L. Stevens, for the construction of a war steamer, shot and shell-proof, to be built principally of iron, upon the plan of the said Stevens: Provided, The whole cost, including the hull, armament, engines, boilers, and equipment in all respects complete for service, shall not exceed the average cost of the steamers Missouri and Mississippi.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $200,000 be and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, towards carrying this law into effect."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask whether a contract has been made under the act? I presume the Senator from New Jersey can state the facts.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I can hardly expect the Senate to listen to another speech from me on the subject of a floating steam battery; but at the request of my friend from Kentucky, I will state the facts of this case. Under the act of Congress, which has been read, a contract was entered into by the Navy Department with Mr. Stevens, for the construction of a steam vessel, shot and shell-proof. He proceeded in good faith to fulfill his part of the contract, and a considerable sum of money has been expended under that contract, part of which Mr. Stevens received from the Treasury. But in his anxiety to fulfill his contract, and to hasten its completion, he has been in advance to the Government from thirty to forty thousand dollars, which, I believe, has not yet been reimbursed to him. A former Secretary of the Navy, (Mr. Preston,) however, became somewhat dissatisfied with Mr. Stevens, under the pretense, as I understand it, that Mr. Stevens would not submit his plans to him, and because of the delay attending the completion of the vessel. Now, sir, the delay was caused by views and motives which he ought to have approved instead of disapproved. It was occasioned by the great anxiety of Mr. Stevens to see that all was right before he proceeded to the accomplishment of his purpose. During the period of this delay, of which complaint has been made, Mr. Stevens was employed in making extensive and expensive experiments, (for which he paid himself,) to ascertain whether the principles upon which he intended to proceed were, beyond all kind of doubt, practical as well as new and irresistible. Sir, I believe that Mr. Stevens has fulfilled his part of that contract with great fidelity; and that he has not been treated with that degree of respect with which a man of his character and standing, and services ought to have been treated, and therefore I have been prompted to take some interest in this matter, and to give my poor aid to do him justice, and preserve the honor of fair dealing.

Mr. President, I believe that this is the most important proposition that has been presented to Congress for many years. This matter of defense was understood by the immortal Jefferson better perhaps than by almost any other man; and it is high time that the people of the United States were brought to the consideration of the subject of the proper defenses of the country. Everybody who knows anything of our people must feel perfectly satisfied that they never will incur the expense necessary to send fleets abroad for the purpose of contending with the large fleets of other nations; and therefore it is very important (whilst it is not possible for us to get a Navy equal to the navies of foreign nations) that we should take care of our defenses at home. This was the view which Mr. Jefferson took of it; and that much-derided policy of his—the gun-boat system—was, and is, in my opinion, the very system best calculated for the defense of our harbors and sea-coast. If he had had such a man as Mr. Stevens to carry out his policy, our harbors would have been before this time impregnable. Mr. Jefferson's principles were no doubt correct; but he had neither the science nor practical means of carrying them out.

My desire now is to have one such vessel built, and my judgment is, that when this vessel is constructed, there will soon be a similar one built for every one of our important harbors on the coast. As I said the other day, I do not expect these vessels to supersede entirely permanent fortifications; but they will be important auxiliaries—indispensable auxiliaries; because, whilst they have all the impregnability of stone and mortar fortifications, they have also the advantages of the locomotion of a ship. If we should have one of these vessels in each of our principal sea-ports, we might undertake to express our sentiments in regard to, and enforce the laws of nations, and care but little about what other Powers might think of it. But the country, at this time, is not in a proper state of defense; and if an unexpected war should happen, my opinion is, that in thirty days every city on our coast would be a heap of smoking ruins. My conviction is, that one such vessel will defend the harbor of New York from any force that can be sent against it which could probably be able to pass the forts; and if it succeeds, it will be the cheapest and most efficient plan for the defense of our coast, and then we may indeed defy the nations of the earth.

Mr. President, I ask the passage of this resolution now; first, because I consider it indispensable to the proper defense of the country; secondly, because an act of Congress has been passed, and by a unanimous vote of the Senate, for that purpose—including the vote of the lamented Calhoun; and thirdly, because the contractor has performed his duty with fidelity and ability, and because he has not received, in my judgment, from a former Administration of this Government, fair play, or even the respectful consideration which his eminent ability and patriotism deserved.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from New Jersey has called up the joint resolution at this time. It is a matter to which my attention was called some days since. I had examined the subject somewhat, and I had lying upon my desk a report made by the Secretary of the Navy in relation to it; but it has been mislaid. I have it not now before me. But it occurred to me at the time of investigating it that there was one very serious objection to this measure.

I will concur with the honorable Senator from New Jersey in adopting any system of national defense that shall be effective and economical. If I am not mistaken in my recollection—and if I am, I presume the Senator from New Jersey will correct me—Mr. Stevens originally made the proposition to the Government to construct this vessel for harbor defense; but, after having been called upon by the Department, up to this hour he has never furnished to it, although requested, any plan, or any description of the vessel which he proposed to construct. It would seem, then, that this is an amount of money which is to be placed at his disposal, to be used as he shall see fit, without knowing in what way and for what kind of ship it is to be expended. Now, if I am right in my recollection of the facts as they are presented by the report of the Secretary of the Navy, it does seem to me that before we expend money on any system of harbor or national defense, the work should be examined by some competent authority. If this money is to be expended, it certainly ought to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and be expended in such way and in such manner as he shall direct. There are undoubtedly various modes of defense, and if each individual who may deem his own plan the better one shall be allowed an appropriation for that purpose, without the mode and manner being prescribed by any authority, we may have as many modes of defense as there are individuals who may seek to enter into them.

If I am right in my conjecture, I think most assuredly the joint resolution is objectionable. I think that the Secretary of the Navy, in the same report to which I have referred, if he does not state directly that it is inexpedient to pursue this course, certainly does not recommend it. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will allow this joint resolution to lie over, at least until to-morrow morning, that I may examine the report, so that I may be able to state clearly and distinctly what are the views presented by the Secretary in relation to this matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the act of 1842 declares that "The Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby authorized to enter into contract with Robert L. Stevens for the construction of a war steamer, shot and shell-proof, to be built principally of iron, upon the plan of the said Stevens." Now, I presume that before the contract could have been entered into, according to this act of Congress, Mr. Stevens must necessarily have exhibited his plan. The Secretary, then, has acted, it seems to me, very improperly. The act of Congress authorized a contract to be made for the construction of a steamer according to the plan of Mr. Stevens. It was the duty of the Secretary to see what that plan was before the contract was entered into. He had no authority to make a contract except upon the exhibition of the plan. That plan constituted a necessary ingredient in the execution of the act of Congress, and must have been embraced by the contract.

This act was passed in 1842. It is the act, the reading of which I called for; and I then asked of the gentleman from New Jersey the question whether the contract had been made? He replied in the affirmative. Now, here is the act. If the contract has been made in pursuance of the act, it seems to me that good faith requires the execution of the contract, and Mr. Stevens must necessarily have exhibited the plan before the contract was entered into. I am, however, always in favor of investigation. I have no objection to accommodate the gentleman from Maine, and I think it would be very proper to let him look into the subject, and let us have all the facts. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will not object to this course.

Mr. HALE. There is one question, in regard to which I want to make an inquiry of some of the gentlemen composing the Naval Committee. If I recollect aright, in the speech that was made on this subject a few days since by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, he pronounced our large vessels-of-war, our ships-of-the-line, entirely useless for purposes of naval warfare. I do not know that I have stated his words exactly, but certainly the idea was, that our large ships-of-the-line and our frigates were useless in naval warfare. Now, by an amendment which we have already adopted to the deficiency bill, we have made provision for five war steamers, or steamers that may be converted into vessels-of-war at any moment. This is practically an addition to our steam marine. We now propose to erect a gun-bow on a large scale for the defense of harbors. My inquiry is this: If, while the Naval Committee are recommending (for it was on their recommendation that the amendment to the deficiency bill was adopted) great additions to the steam marine, which is really useful and beneficial in various aspects of the case, they propose to withdraw any of those large hulks, which the honorable Senator from New Jersey says are entirely useless for naval warfare? In other words, are these to be additions to the useful part of the Navy? Or are they to be substitutes, and are the useless vessels to be withdrawn? I would like to hear from the Committee on Naval Affairs upon that subject before I vote upon this question.

Mr. ATCHISON. I trust this resolution will be postponed until to-morrow, or some other day. I gave way with the understanding that there would be no debate upon this subject, or, if there was, that the resolution might, by consent, go over.

Mr. STOCKTON. I wish to say but a few words, and then I will give way. I shall not willingly yield to the request of my friend from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] because this bill has been for some time before the Senate. A report from the Naval Committee, in this case, and a memorial has been for some time before the Senate, and it is very evident that the gentleman has not yet read them. I made a speech which I supposed would have made some impression in regard to this subject—but it seems it has not. I do not think that Senators ought to postpone the examination of any subject pending in the Senate, until it is brought up for final action, or to depend for the necessary information which they may glean from the speeches which may be made in reference to it. It seems to me, sir, that it is the proper duty of Senators to acquaint themselves in regard to matters before the Senate, by at least reading the reports of the committees. I shall therefore object, not only in this case, but in all others, to such a course. I am aware that it is sometimes the practice of lawyers to wait till they get into court, to ascertain the merits of their cause without the trouble of any previous investigation. That is not the manner which I desire should prevail in regard to any question before this body coming from the Naval Committee. If the gentleman will look at the report from that committee—of the truth of which there can be no doubt—he will find the following:

"Yet, at this very time, the Department was in possession of the plans of Mr. Stevens, furnished when the original contract was first made, and a further statement of his plan furnished in November, 1844."

Now, surely we cannot postpone the resolution for that. The plans have been presented to the Department. The plans have been considered. If the gentleman would look further, he would find that, year after year, the contracts have been renewed and reaffirmed, and no question made with regard to Mr. Stevens's plans not having been presented to the Department. I hope, therefore, that my friend will be satisfied. I will not, however, go further into the subject, as my friend from Missouri desires an Executive session.

Mr. ATCHISON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 3, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved. The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order, the consideration of the bill granting lands to the State of Florida, for the construction of railroads therein.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is a bill lying on your table to secure preemption to the settlers on the Illinois central roads. It ought to be passed or defeated. The Committee on Public Lands have recommended its passage. Unless it is passed in a few days, it will do no good. I apprehend there is no objection to the bill, and it will take but a moment to pass it. I ask that it may be read for information, and then I shall ask the unanimous consent of the House that it may be taken up and put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir, it is upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. COBB. It is in precisely the same condition as the bill granting the right of way and alternate sections of the public lands to the Selma and Gunter's Landing Railroad. If we go to the business on the Speaker's table, we shall reach all these bills; but if we take them up in this way, one by one, we shall never act upon them all. I intend to vote for the gentleman's bill when it comes up in its order, but I must object to its being taken up now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not object. The bill must be passed now or it will be of no use at all.

Mr. COBB. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then let it pass now.

Mr. COBB. Well, I will withdraw my objection.

The objection was renewed by several gentlemen.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. HALL. Is not the Iowa railroad bill first in order this morning?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider be called up, it is.

Mr. HALL. I ask that that motion may be taken up.

Mr. JONES. Does that bill come up in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it may come up in the morning hour.

Mr. JONES. Has it not passed out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It was at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the Chair decided the other day that that bill came up in the morning hour.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back as correctly enrolled the following bills and joint resolutions, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker: An act to change the name of the American-built vessel named the Amelia, and to grant a register in her name;

An act to authorize the issuing of a register to the schooner Caroline, of Barnstable;

An act giving the assent of Congress to the State of Missouri to impose a tax or taxes upon all lands hereafter sold by the United States therein, on and after the day of such sale; and

A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to ratify and confirm an exchange of lands between the United States and Charles Reynolds, of the city of Natchez, and State of Mississippi.

IOWA RAILROAD BILL.

The SPEAKER stated the question to be upon reconsidering the vote by which the following bill was laid upon the table, viz:

Senate bill No. 1. An act granting the right of way and making a grant of lands to the State of Iowa, in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to occupy about two minutes in making an explanation before this vote is taken.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. We do not want any speeches.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not going to make a speech. I ask but two minutes for explanation.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When the vote was taken upon this bill which laid it upon the table, I was compelled to give what, at that time, and at all times, was a very painful vote to me. This bill includes three roads in the State of Iowa. Two of those roads cross the State of Iowa in an east and west direction. Those two roads, as I stated in a speech which I made here some days since, should receive my cordial and enthusiastic support. But I was opposed to the road called the Keokuck and Dubuque road, running north and south, because it is opposed to the interests of the district which I represent. If I could have had an opportunity of voting for the other two roads without, at the same time, voting for the Keokuck and Dubuque road, I would most cheerfully have done so. I regret the necessity which compels me to vote against measures which I believe, in my conscience, to be right, because they are inseparably linked with other measures which I believe, in my conscience, to be wrong, and which no association can ever compel me to support. When this bill was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, he moved the previous question upon its passage. I appended to him to withdraw the previous question for the purpose of enabling me to offer an amendment to strike out the Keokuck and Dubuque road. He refused to do so, and under those circumstances I was compelled to vote in favor of the motion to lay the whole bill upon the table. I shall vote now for the motion to reconsider, with the understanding that when the bill is relieved from the pressure of the previous question, I will have an opportunity of offering the amendment which I have indicated.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to know what is the question now before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Iowa railroad bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. HALL. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. HAMILTON's motion, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 77, nays 81: as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Bennett, Bocoock, John H. Boyd, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Caldwell, Carter, Caskey, Chapman, Churchwell, Cleveland, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Fowler, Giddings, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Culom, John G. Davis, Disney, Doty, Durkee, Evans, Ficklin, Florence, Henry M. Stevens, St. Martin, Stuart, Taylor, Tombs, Townsend, Walsh, Ward, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—81.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Messrs. EASTMAN and BISSELL, who were without the bar when their names were called, asked leave to record their votes in the negative; but objection was made.

The question recurred upon the motion submitted by Mr. HALL, to reconsider the vote by which the Iowa railroad bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. HALL demanded the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. AVERETT. Is a motion that there be a call of the House in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. AVERETT. Then I make that motion.

The question was taken on Mr. AVERETT's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 70, nays 67.

So it was ordered that there be a call of the House.

The roll was accordingly called, and 181 gentlemen answered to their names.

Mr. STUART moved that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. HALL's motion, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 82, nays 95; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Bissell, Branton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, George T. Davis, John G. Seymour, Smart, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Stuart, G. W. Thompson, Townsend, Venable, Wallace, and Wilcox—82.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bocoock, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Caldwell, Carter, Caskey, Churchwell, Cleveland, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Dockery, Duncan, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fowler, Gamble, Giddings, Goodenow, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hibbard, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, Ives, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J.

Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Martin, McDonald, McAnahan, McNair, Meacham, Millson, Morehead, Murphy, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Price, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Smart, Stanly, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Sutherland, Sweetser, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Venable, Wallace, Watkins, Welch, and Wildrick—93.

So the House refused to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would inquire of the Chair if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

CONTENDED ELECTION.

Mr. ROBBINS. I rise, then, to a question of privilege. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Elections if he is ready to proceed with the Pennsylvania contested election case?

[A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, esq., its Secretary, announcing that the Senate had passed sundry bills.]

Mr. ORR. I desire to ask if it is necessary to move to postpone the consideration of the Florida railroad bill until to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It is not. That bill will come up to-morrow as the first business in order.

Mr. ASHE. The House seems very anxious to dispose of the Pennsylvania contested-election case, and as the morning hour has expired, I move to take up the report of the Committee on Elections on that case.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were—yeas 82, nays 76.

Mr. CABELL demanded tellers; but they were not ordered.

Mr. HAMILTON demanded the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is very apparent that it is the disposition of the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I would suggest that it would be better to postpone this contested-election case until after next week. There is a minority report, and if we were to take up the case now, it is probable that we should not get through with it this week. It would be better to take it up ten days hence, and proceed with the business before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union now.

Mr. ORR. Is it in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The pending motion has precedence.

The question was then taken on Mr. ASHE's motion, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 93, nays 95, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett, Bacoock, David J. Bailey, Bissell, Bocoock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, Buell, Bu-by, Caskey, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Faulkner, Ficklin, Florence, Freeman, Gamble, Gilmore, Green, Hamilton, Hammond, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Lockhart, Mace, Mason, McDonald, McAnahan, McNair, Meade, Millson, Molony, Morrison, Murray, Nabers, Olds, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Powell, Rantoul, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Savage, Scurry, David L. So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COBB. Is it in order to move to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. COBB. Then I make that motion.

Mr. ORR. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.] If that fails, the question will then be upon the motion submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

Mr. STUART demanded tellers; but they were not ordered.

And the question being put upon Mr. COBB's motion, it was disagreed to.

The question recurring upon Mr. ORR's motion, it was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the bill making appropriations for the support of the Indian Department, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. MOREHEAD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to yield the floor for a moment.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. LETCHER said: I have desired to address the committee upon a matter of local interest to my constituents in Western Virginia; and not knowing whether I should have an opportunity to do so, I have prepared my remarks, and will print them, in order that they may go in with the debates of this House.

Mr. Chairman, the people of the western district of Virginia have long been satisfied that the salary of their judge is grossly inadequate, considering the amount of his labors and the extent of travel which has been devolved upon him. Hence they have petitioned Congress year after year for the past twelve years, asking that his salary should be increased; and those petitions have in every instance received the favorable consideration of the Judiciary Committee of this House and the Senate. On two occasions bills have passed the Senate increasing the salary to $2,500, and each of them increasing the length of the terms of the several courts. On one occasion one of those bills was taken up in this House; and after a very brief discussion, was defeated upon the express ground that it was designed to revise the laws on this subject, and to equalize the salaries of this class of officers throughout the United States.

I am not aware that any member in this or the other House has, at any time, maintained that this salary furnished an adequate compensation for the important and onerous labors imposed upon the judge of this district. On the contrary, I believe it has been uniformly admitted that the labors of this judge, including his annual travel and court duties, are far greater than those devolved upon most other judges, while his compensation is less than in many other cases. Under these circumstances it is that the petitioners from many portions of the district prefer their appeal to this Congress for an increase of the salary.

During the present session, the Senate have passed a bill lengthening the terms of all the courts in the district, and increasing the salary from $1,600 to $2,500. That the action of the Senate is fully justified by sound and weighty reasons, sufficient, in my view, to induce corresponding action here, I shall endeavor to demonstrate, by reference to facts existing at the time of the creation of the western district of Virginia, and others of subsequent occurrence.

The western district of Virginia was created in the year 1819, and embraced the territory lying on the west side of the Alleghany mountains. The entire population embraced within the limits of this district, was (by the census of 1820) ascertained to be 147,540. The act creating the district directed that courts should be held twice a year at Clarksburg, Lewisburg, and Wytheville, and fixed the salary at $1,600 per annum, being about the salary which Virginia, at that time, paid to her circuit judges. The annual travel of the judge was one thousand miles.

The territory lying between the Alleghany and Blue Ridge of mountains, and known as the Valley division in our State, was then connected with and formed a part of the eastern judicial district. This connection continued until 1824, when, by act of Congress, the Valley was transferred from the eastern to the western judicial district, and the judge of the western district was directed to hold two terms of his court annually at the town of Staunton. The Valley counties, according to the census of 1820, contained a population of 154,162, being a population greater than was contained in the trans-Alleghany region by 6,622 persons. By this addition to the western judicial district, the population of the district was more than doubled, its territorial extent greatly enlarged, and the amount of court business and his annual travel more than doubled, while his annual compensation remained the same. Can it be, or will it be contended, that $1,600 was more than a fair compensation in 1819, when the district was created; when the judge's travel was only one thousand miles, and when six courts only were to be held in each year? If this will not be contended for, then I apprehend the conclusion is irresistible, that the salary is grossly inadequate now, when the district has been nearly doubled in territorial extent; when the population has been more than doubled; when the travel has been increased from 1,040 miles to 2,280 miles annually, and when the court business has been more than quadrupled.

Such are the facts, as they existed in 1824, and prior to that time; and I think I have demonstrated that, even upon those facts, this House ought not to hesitate a moment in yielding its sanction to the bill sent to us from the Senate, and now before the Judiciary Committee of this body. But if any doubt still, let me solicit his attention to the other important facts which I am now about to present, and which, if impartially and carefully considered, must be regarded as conclusive of the justice and propriety of the passage of the measure.

I have thus shown, that by the acts of 1819 and 1824, eight terms of this court were to be held every year. But, by acts passed in the years 1842 and 1843, in addition to those heretofore mentioned, the judge of this district was directed to hold courts twice a year at the city of Wheeling, and in the town of Charleston, still retaining the circuit court to be held once a year at the town of Lewisburg. It is thus shown that the labors of the judge have been augmented to a most extraordinary extent, by Congressional legislation. In 1819, this officer was required to hold six courts a year, and traveled only one thousand and forty miles. In 1852 his courts have been increased to eleven per year, and his annual travel increased to two thousand two hundred and eighty miles. In 1819 the expenses of the judge, in making his circuit, were about $200—leaving him a salary equal to $1,400 per annum. In 1852, by an account accurately kept by the judge, his traveling and court expenses amount to $400—leaving his salary equal only to $1,200 per annum. We have, therefore, the result, that the judge performing double duty, at double the expense, now actually receives a salary of only $1,200 clear of expenses, while his predecessor in 1819, who performed not one half of the present judge's labor, and at only half the expense, received $1,400. There is neither justice nor equity in this. A system that operates such injustice ought to be reformed.

When this judicial district was created, Congress, in fixing the salary, designed to place the judge on a footing of equality with the circuit judges in Virginia. Those judges received a fixed salary of $1,500 per annum, and $3 for every twenty miles of travel. At that time, we had fifteen circuit judges, whose salary and mileage averaged about $1,600 to each. The chancery court system was at that time in existence in our State, and each chancellor received an annual salary of $1,666. These facts are presented in order to show that Congress must have had these facts in view in fixing the salary of the judge for the western district, and designed to place him in as favorable a position as that occupied by our chancellors and circuit judges.

If this was a just rule by which to regulate the salary in 1819, is it not just as sound a rule in 1852, by which to test the merits of the proposition now pending in this House? I maintain that it is a perfectly fair rule, and I insist upon its application in the present case. Under the new constitution in our State, we pay to our circuit judges (twenty in number) an annual salary of $2,000, and twenty cents a mile for travel; which will make their compensation equal to $2,300 per year on an average. The judges of our supreme court receive a salary of $3,000 each, and mileage at the same rate with the circuit judges; which will make their annual compensation about $3,300.

The bill passed by the Senate, and which we will soon be called to act upon, fixes the salary at $2,500, without mileage. The Judiciary Committee of this House will report the bill back, with an amendment reducing the salary to $2,000. To this amendment I am opposed, unless you allow mileage at the same rate that is paid to our State judges. The salary at $2,000, and 2,280 miles travel, at twenty cents per mile, would make his compensation equal to $2,460—within a small fraction of $40 of the sum fixed in the Senate bill. Why not, then, take the Senate bill without amendment, and thus do justice to a judge in one of the heaviest and most laborious districts in the Union?

The judges of Massachusetts, of the southern district of New York, of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, of Maryland, and of Georgia, who have no travel to perform, receive salaries ranging from $2,000 to $3,500, and not one of them holds as many courts (except the New York judge) as the judge of the western district of Virginia. No one of the others holds more than four courts during the year, while Judge Brockenbrough holds eleven, and travels two thousand two hundred and eighty miles besides, on horseback, over an exceedingly mountainous country. Eleven other judges, viz: the judges of Maine, the northern district of New York, the western district of Pennsylvania, the eastern district of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, who have far less travel, and who do not hold half as many courts in the year, receive much higher salaries, ranging from $1,800 to $2,500 per year. These judges, with two exceptions, (Boston and New York,) perform far less labor than the judge of the western district of Virginia, and yet all of them receive higher salaries. I frankly confess my inability to understand upon what principle this can be justified. It cannot be that it rests upon any principle of justice, and I am therefore forced to the conclusion, that the facts have never been brought to the attention of Congress or the country, or this outrageous inequality would have been corrected years ago.

But some gentlemen may object to the proposed bill, upon the ground that the salaries of other judges are not equalized, and that legislation, such as is now proposed, is special in its character and object. Such an objection is, in my view, without force, and is intemperate to the slightest weight in the consideration and decision of this question. If I have succeeded in showing the inadequacy of the salary, it follows necessarily that it ought to be increased. If I have shown that the compensation now paid to the judge for his services, is not a just equivalent for the time and labor which he devotes to the judicial business of the district, then it follows that the compensation should be augmented. If I have made out such a case as appeals to Congress, and will justify relief, the next question that arises is as to the mode in which that relief shall be granted to this judicial officer. We have waited year after year for the action of Congress in the equalization of judicial salaries, but no such measure has as yet been brought to the attention of either House, in a practical shape. I have no reason now to suppose that any such measure will be proposed at the present session, at least. I have no alternative, therefore, but to press upon the attention of the House the bill that has passed the Senate, and urge its favorable consideration here. The mode proposed is by no means unusual. It has been adopted on many occasions in the history of our legislation. Indeed, special acts have uniformly been resorted to, as the only means of remedying such evils as are now complained of. It is sufficient for my purpose on this point, to refer to our legislation in 1845, when the salaries of the judges of Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, and Florida were increased, without even an allegation (so far as I am advised) that their districts had been territorially enlarged, or that their travel had been increased, or that the number of their courts multiplied, or that additional duties or labors were imposed upon the judges by the acts increasing their compensation. I am, therefore, furnished with a precedent that covers the whole ground I now occupy, in presenting the application of the judge of the western district of Virginia for increased compensation.

At the time the western judicial district was created, it contained a white population of 133,112, while the eastern district of Virginia contained a white population of 470,269. By the act of 1824, the western judicial district was so enlarged, that it contained a white population of 254,208, leaving in the eastern district a white population of 349,173. Eight terms of court were held annually in the western district, and four terms held annually in the eastern district. The judge of the western district then traveled annually about 1,400 miles, while the annual travel of the judge of the eastern district was only 640 miles. How stands the white population in the two districts now? By the census of 1850, the western district contains a white population of 494,763, while the eastern district contains a white population of 402,771. Eleven terms of the court are now annually held in the western district, and only four terms are annually held in the eastern district. The judge of the western district now travels annually 2,280 miles on horseback, and the judge of the eastern district annually travels 640 miles in steamboats. The former receives an annual salary of $1,600, the latter an annual salary of $1,800. The North Carolina judge, who holds six courts a year, receives a salary of $2,000; the South Carolina judge, who holds five courts a year, receives a salary of $2,500. The Alabama judge, who holds six courts a year, receives a salary of $2,500. The Arkansas judge, who holds two courts a year, receives an annual salary of $2,000; and the Florida judge, who holds three courts a year, receives a like sum.

Now, sir, I do not mean to intimate that either of these judges receives a higher salary than his services are worth; but I refer to them for the purpose of showing the salary which each receives. The judge in the western district of Virginia performs equally as much, if not more, service than either of them, and should, therefore, receive as high a salary as any of them. The salaries paid in each of these cases is, in my view, only a fair compensation for the services performed, while the salary paid to the judges of the western judicial district of Virginia is below, far below, the standard of a just compensation.

Sound policy requires that judicial officers should receive such salaries as will furnish the means of a decent and comfortable, but by no means extravagant support, for themselves and families. The salary of the judge of this district, after the payment of traveling expenses, is inadequate to this end. Every man who has had experience is aware of the fact, that $1,200 is a very small sum upon which to rely for the maintenance and education of a family. The object of man's struggles and exertions in this world is not merely for the bread that sustains him, and the clothes that cover him. He looks forward with hope and anxiety and confidence to the acquisition of the means upon which he is to rely when the winter of old age shall come, when his energies are paralyzed, and when the power of physical and intellectual exertion is gone.

The judicial position, in this country one of the most important. Every man is deeply interested in having these positions filled by men of high character, undoubted integrity, and the best professional ability. The rights of personal security, the protection of the rights of property, the life and liberty and reputation of the citizen, are all dependent upon the purity and integrity and ability of our judiciary, and it becomes us, therefore, to see that such compensation is allowed, as will secure the proper incumbents in these distinguished positions of public trust and usefulness.

Such being the character and importance of the office, it should receive the undivided attention of the man who is called upon to fill it. The compensation should be sufficient to withdraw his attention from all other pursuits, and concentrate his mind and his energies upon his appropriate judicial duties. The salary in this instance is too small to secure this desirable result, and the consequence is, that the judge has been compelled to open a law school, in order to make out a comfortable support. His law school, which has now been in operation for three years, has succeeded well, and when the proceeds arising from this source are added to his salary, he realizes an annual income of about $2,400. With this school, he can get along comfortably, but experience has shown, that the terms are too short, under the present arrangement, to enable him to dispose of all the business, and if the terms are lengthened, he must give up his school. The public interest, therefore, requires that the terms should be extended, so as to give him an additional month in the spring, and the like time in the fall. Hence the measure proposed—a measure imperatively demanded by a due regard for the public interest, as well as the private interest of the suitors in his court. If things remain as at present, the judge will, in the mode indicated, receive a compensation equal in amount to the sum proposed in the Senate bill. In the event of the change now recommended, he has, therefore, no pecuniary interest; and so far as his personal interest and comfort are concerned, they would be best advanced by leaving the present arrangement undisturbed.

The bill now pending is twofold in its character and objects. First, the extension of the terms of all the courts, (and by consequence the increase of the expenses of the judge;) and second, an addition of $900 to his salary.

Without an extension of the terms of the court, it is utterly impossible to cut down the docket, and dispose of the causes as rapidly as they accumulate. The jurisdiction of the district courts of this district is peculiar. There is no appellate circuit court within the district court, and appeals from the decisions of the court, lie directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. The want of an intermediate circuit court, to revise the decisions of the district court, adds very greatly to the responsibility of the judicial office, in this particular district. The law expressly invests the court with full circuit court jurisdiction—civil and criminal. The civil jurisdiction extends to all suits by citizens of other States and aliens, in which the amount in controversy exceeds $500, to all land suits brought by such plaintiffs to recover the possession of lands lying within the district, and to all suits brought by patentees, their assigns or grantees, for an infringement of their patent-rights. Many suits of each description are now depending in most of the courts of the district, especially those held at Clarksburg and Staunton. In those two courts alone, there are now depending and undecided, (as I am informed,) not less than one hundred land controversies. The land titles in Western Virginia, (as any one at all familiar with the subject well knows,) are in a very unsettled state; the great complexity of our land laws, and the pertinacity with which such suits are always contested, is equally well known to all my colleagues from that portion of the State. These causes produce a mass of litigation of the most important and expensive character, which can only be satisfactorily disposed of by the most patient and assiduous labor. It never can be disposed of under the existing arrangement of the courts. What, then, is the consequence? Counsel are deterred from making preparation for the trial of their causes, because of the shortness of the terms, and costs (much heavier than in similar causes in the State courts) are constantly accumulating, to the great grievance and oppression of the parties, large numbers of whom are residents of other States.

A large number of suits are brought in these courts for an infringement of patents; very recently twenty-odd suits of this kind have been brought in one of these courts, and many are now depending and undecided. These suits, as every lawyer well knows, involve the important inquiry as to the originality of the invention, and the consequent validity or invalidity of the patents, and they are always most zealously contested.

Now, sir, a word or two as to the criminal jurisdiction of these courts. This extends to all offenses, created by acts of Congress, and they are of various descriptions. A most important branch of this jurisdiction arises under the laws passed for the suppression of the offense of counterfeiting and passing counterfeit coin. Unhappily, these offenses are of constant occurrence in the western portion of this district, and prosecutions for them have been very numerous within the last eight or ten years. Within the same period offenses against the Post Office laws and regulations have been frequent subjects of prosecution and punishment. The criminal courts of this district exercise a final jurisdiction. No appeal lies from their decisions, and the jurisdiction is therefore absolutely final. In all other districts a circuit court is also established, which exercises appellate criminal jurisdiction. If the two judges composing the circuit court differ as to any legal question, arising in a criminal case, they may refer it to the Supreme Court for its decision; and this is the only mode in which such questions can reach the Supreme Court. There being but one judge in this district, whatever difficulties may beset him, he must decide every question, as it arises, without the benefit of a conference with a justice of the Supreme Court; and his judgment, when rendered, is (as I before said) absolutely final. How greatly does this consideration increase the responsibility attached to the judicial office in this district! How painfully must that responsibility be felt in the many important criminal cases constantly arising!

Making the proper allowance for the time necessarily consumed in traveling over this immense district—a district of "magnificent distances," as it has been called—the term of the court at Clarksburg must be limited to six days; at Wheeling, to four days; at Charleston, to three days; and at Wytheville, to four days. The term at Staunton being the last in the series, is therefore unlimited. The bill now before the House, if it shall become a law, will double the length of the terms at Clarksburg, Wheeling, Charleston, and Wytheville, and this extension, it is believed, will be entirely sufficient to enable the judge to reduce the dockets, and to keep them down.

These facts appeal loudly to us for a remedy, and that remedy will be found in the simple measure of extending the time allowed for each of the courts at the four places mentioned.

One word more as to the compensation of the judge. The judge is the worst-paid officer connected with the court. The compensation of the marshal is, perhaps, three or four times as large as that received by the judge. The compensation of the district attorney, within late years, exceeds the compensation of the judge, by perhaps fifty per cent., while it cannot be pretended that his responsibility and labors are at all comparable with those of the judge. And, besides, the attorney has the privilege of engaging in general practice, not only in the district, but, also, in the State courts; whilst the judge is expressly prohibited by law from practicing in any court. Why, sir, the receipts of the clerk, arising from fees and salary, average something like $2,000 per annum. Is it necessary to say more, with the view of showing the propriety of passing the bill sent to us by the Senate?

Such are the facts by which this application is sustained, and the attention of the House is invited to them, in the confident hope and belief, that if considered as they deserve, this bill cannot fail of success.

Mr. MOREHEAD then addressed the committee an hour, principally in reviewing the proceedings of the Whig Congressional caucus, and the conduct of the Southern Whigs who withdrew from and protested against the action of that caucus. He maintained that it was the duty of the seceders to have remained in that caucus, and with him endeavored to sustain the Northern Whigs there who were true to the Constitution and the South. As for himself, he was in favor of the compromise measures—he was elected as a compromise Whig—but was opposed to that caucus doing anything but that for which they legitimately met—the fixing of the time and place for the meeting of the convention. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. ORR spoke at length on political subjects, and in favor of the nominees of the Democratic National Convention. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. MEACHAM next obtained the floor, and addressed the committee in regard to the present tariff and its depressing effects upon the general interests of the country; without concluding he yielded the floor to

Mr. SCHOONMAKER, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 43, and had come to no resolution thereon.

On motion of Mr. DUNCAN, the House then adjourned.

PETITION.

The following petition was presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. ROBE: The petition of Andrew S. Hart, deputy postmaster at Belvidere, Allegheny county, New York, for increase of compensation.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 10, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a memorial of the officers of the volunteer companies in the District of Columbia, praying the aid of Congress in the erection of an armory in a central location in the city of Washington, for the safe-keeping of the arms furnished them by Government, to be used in common by all the volunteer corps in that city; also, in the appointment of an armorer, the memorialists proposing to establish an efficient volunteer regiment, complete in all its appointments, of eight hundred men; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GWIN presented the petition of Mary Woodward, widow of an officer of the United States revenue service, who was drowned while in the discharge of his duty, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a petition of citizens of Beaver county, Pennsylvania, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEWARD presented a resolution adopted at a regular meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, in favor of an appropriation for the removal of the bars at the mouth of the Mississippi; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

A motion by Mr. SEWARD to print the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Also, resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York approving of the memorial addressed to Congress for the purpose of providing a cemetery for seamen. From the memorial, it appears that a large number of that useful class die in the city of New York every year; that up to the present time, although provision has been made by the United States Treasury Department for the expense of conveying their bodies to the grave, yet there has been no place provided for the interment of those seamen who die at the New York hospital; and that they have been heretofore buried in Potter's Field, in the city of New York, with paupers and criminals, and in such a manner as is revolting to the feelings. That a number of the friends of seamen in that city, in order to remedy this evil, have concluded arrangements for the purchase of a proper plot of ground, in some one of the large cemeteries near to that city, for the perpetual use of seamen, and they therefore pray Congress to grant them $5,000 for that purpose. The memorial is signed by the collector of the port of New York, the president of the American Seamen's Friend Society, the President of the Board of Underwriters, the president of the Marine Society, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, and the president of the Board of Governors of the New York hospital. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of S. L. Cole and others, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of citizens of Ontario county, New York, remonstrating against the renewal of C. H. McCormick's patent for a reaping machine; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying that pensions and extra pay may be allowed to private physicians employed for the volunteers during the late war with Mexico. The petitioners state that the force of the United States employed against Mexico, was composed principally of volunteers from the different States of the Union, the colonels of which force were instructed to employ private physicians, agreeably to army regulations, which was accordingly done. The physicians so employed were subjected to great labor in a sickly country, many were wounded in action, and many more contracted lingering dis-cases, returning to their homes with scant pay and broken-down constitutions for their reward. They cannot, under the existing laws, avail themselves of the benefit of pensions or extra pay, not having rank in the Army. The petitioners therefore pray that a remedy be provided by Congress, and that worthy cases may receive the benefits of the invalid pension laws, and the laws regulating extra pay now in force. The petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a petition of citizens of West Carlisle, Ohio, praying the adoption of measures for the amicable adjustment of international controversies; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CASS presented three petitions of citizens of Michigan, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly called the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of the present and late officers of the land office at Ionia, Iowa, praying to be allowed compensation for locating military bounty land warrants; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ATCHISON presented a memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, praying that William Waldo may be remunerated for his services and expenses in affording relief to overland emigrants to California; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Frederick Parsons, praying to be allowed bounty land for services during the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of Sarah A. Hunt and Ann M. Bonnycastle, praying the payment of Texas bonds, of which they are the holders; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRATT presented the memorial of Francis Meyer, praying a revision of the decision of the Board of Commissioners appointed for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico, in his case; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I present the memorial of the widow of Captain A. Drane, deceased, formerly of the Fifth Regiment of Infantry, asking for a pension. The circumstances of the case are peculiar. Her husband was tried by a court-martial on a charge of drunkenness while on duty, and cashiered. In consequence of that sentence she has been deprived of a pension. It is proved very clearly, by testimony contained in the memorial, that her husband died of paralysis, produced by hardship and exposure in the destructive climate of the Rio Grande, and the widow hopes that justice will be done to his memory by some suitable provision for his widow and children, which shall recognize his proper rank in the Army. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

It was so referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, correcting a clerical error in his communication of May 3d, in answer to a resolution passed April 21st, containing a statement received from the Governor of New Mexico, of salaries due to civil officers of that Territory while it was under a military government. In that communication it was stated that, of the whole amount, $36,603 67, claimed from the United States, the sum of $12,098 64 was due to the treasury of the Territory, for so much paid to those officers; whereas the whole amount of $36,603 67, according to the statement, is due to the officers themselves.

The communication was ordered to be printed in connection with the report of the Secretary of War communicated to the Senate the 5th instant.

BILLS PASSED.

The engrossed bill to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of useful arts, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved July 4, 1836; and also "An act to provide additional examiners in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1848, were read a third time and passed.

CATLIN'S INDIAN SCENES.

Mr. SEWARD. If there be no objection, I hope the Senate will take up a resolution which I offered the other day. It is merely a resolution of inquiry, relative to the propriety of purchasing Mr. George Catlin's collection of pictures and Indian curiosities.

The resolution was accordingly taken up and read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be requested to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill for the purchase of Mr. George Catlin's Indian Scenes and Portraits, which are in danger of being sold and lost to this country."

Mr. SEWARD. I will not say one word in favor of the object of the resolution, but barely state that I have consulted with some members of the Senate on the subject, and have ascertained that it would be more acceptable to refer this inquiry to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I think it would be more appropriate that the resolution should have that reference, and therefore I move to amend it, by striking out the reference to the "Committee on the Library," and inserting the "Committee on Indian Affairs."

The PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified, if such is the pleasure of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution will be so modified.

Mr. BRADBURY. It occurs to me that this resolution ought to go to the Committee on the Library. If there is no choice in the matter, it seems to me that a resolution of this kind ought to go to that committee. They have various subjects of a similar kind before them, and there would seem to be no particular reason why they should not be called upon to consider this one also.

Mr. SEWARD. I will only say, in reply to the honorable Senator from Maine, that the suggestion to make this alteration came from the Committee on the Library, who are taxed with other inquiries; and I believe, also, that the Committee on Indian Affairs are prepared to take it up and examine it, and decide upon the value of the collection.

Mr. BRADBURY. It occurs to me that the Committee on the Library, having other objects of the same character before them, will be better prepared to report upon this matter. They will know much better what are the wants of the Library, and what other works of the same kind they propose to purchase. If we were to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary all propositions to purchase law books, and to the Committee on Public Lands propositions to purchase all books on that subject, our Library would be probably filled with a greater collection than we need. It seems to me, therefore, that this question should with great propriety be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. PEARCE. I hope the resolution will be adopted as it is. The subject is one that, I think, does not properly belong to the Committee on the Library. That committee is charged with the purchase and collection of books, but not of curiosities, which, if purchased, would not be placed in the Library. I know that the Committee on the Library are desirous that this reference should be made to the Indian Committee. We are already overburdened with work. It is but too frequently the case, that subjects which do not properly belong to them, as in the present instance, are saddled on the Library Committee.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. As I understand that resolution, it does not relate to a matter which should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I think the proposition does not admit of question, that the Committee on the Library is the proper committee to which it should be referred. It is true that it does not relate to the purchase of books, or to a subject which technically is exactly appropriate to the business of the Committee on the Library; but it is evidently entirely foreign to those subjects which usually come before the Committee on Indian Affairs. They merely have to deal with matters relating to Indian appropriations, and to legislation for the purpose of carrying out the administration of the Indian Department. The mere fact that a gallery of portraits of Indian chiefs has been collected, with which it is perhaps desired to enrich the gallery of the Smithsonian Institution, or that of the Patent Office, constitutes no reason for referring the resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Although the resolution does not relate to a collection of books, yet by analogy, the purchase of a collection of portraits, connects itself with matters belonging to the appropriate business of the Committee on the Library.

I will mention that when the subject of the purchase of an Indian book, the production of several years' labor on the part of an eminently scientific man, Mr. Schoolcraft, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, they were so sensible of the propriety of having the matter investigated by the Committee on the Library, that they simply passed a resolution by which it was referred to that committee, and they took the initiative, and have followed up the publication of the book ever since. The Committee on Indian Affairs, in that case, which appealed to them even more strongly than this does, wiped their hands of the whole matter. We all know the eminent qualifications of the chairman of the Committee on the Library [Mr. PEARCE] to act upon this question. The Committee on Indian Affairs make no pretension to deal with literature or the fine arts, and, therefore, I hope that the resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Library; and for the purpose of attaining that object, I move to strike out the words "Committee on Indian Affairs," and insert the words "Committee on the Library."

Mr. PEARCE. I wish merely to say that it is usual on questions of this sort, to have the matter referred to a committee which is presumed to be favorable to the thing proposed to be done. But I rather think the Committee on the Library would be somewhat opposed to it. I therefore think the resolution would be better as it is.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that none of the suggestions which have been made for the reference of this question, meet the merits of the case. I think the introduction of this resolution suggests to the Senate, very forcibly, the fact, that in the establishment and arrangement of the committees for the transaction of business, a very important interest, or, what seems likely to become an important interest, in the estimation of many gentlemen, is omitted. If the Senate is to become, theoretically and practically, by its legislation here, the patron of the professors of the fine arts, I think that, as this resolution would seem to suggest, it is time we should have a committee of the fine arts. We have a Committee on the Library, to which all questions involving the purchase of books are referred. We have a Committee on Printing, which decides when it is necessary to have any printing done; and why not have a Committee on Painting, or on the fine arts in general? If the Senate should not choose to go to work and supply this omission now, and establish this committee on the fine arts, and on painting especially, I think that the Committee on Indian Affairs is, of all others, that one to which the consideration of the subject should be referred. The honorable chairman of that committee, [Mr. ARTHURSON], as is well known, and, as he stated here on a former occasion, is familiar with Indian character. He lives on the frontier, and has lived there for many years, where he has had many opportunities of becoming acquainted with the Indians, and is better calculated than any other gentleman among us to judge of the merits of these paintings, and whether they truly represent Indian character or not.

We know very well that, because we have not had the benefit of the judgment of gentlemen so thoroughly acquainted as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. ARTHURSON] with Indian characteristics, we have now in the Rotunda a painting in which Indians are delineated, and in which there are figures representing anything in the world but Indians. Any one who knows what an Indian looks like could not select from that painting a single figure representing an Indian at all. That could only have happened because the subject was not referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, or to a committee composed of gentlemen acquainted with the appearance and characteristics of Indians.

I believe that the Library Committee is not at present composed of gentlemen who have lived on the frontier, and who could thus become familiar with the Indians, and with their appearance and characteristics; I wish, therefore, to have this resolution submitted to a practical test. I know that my colleague, [Mr. SEBASTIAN], though he wishes to avoid the proposed reference, is well acquainted with the subject. His modesty may have caused him to wish that it should not be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and to yield the decision on this point to the distinguished gentlemen composing the Library Committee; but with the knowledge which I know my colleague to possess on this subject, from his practical acquaintance with it; with the eminent qualifications of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ARTHURSON]; with the large experience of the Senator from Texas, [Mr. RUSK], who, as we all know, has had the most extensive observations of Indian character, I feel that we could obtain from this committee an enlightened and practical judgment, such as we could not expect, with equal confidence, from any other source. I shall be perfectly satisfied with that judgment, not only in regard to the policy of purchasing these paintings, but, also, in regard to the special merits of these portraits themselves.

I hope that the resolution will take the direction which the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD], who introduced it, proposed to give it.

Mr. BUTLER. My objection is not whether this resolution should be referred to this committee, or to that committee; but I have observed that legislative patronage of the fine arts comes up too often from individual members of the Senate. I understand that the Committee on the Library is at liberty to purchase such books, manuscripts, paintings, and other matters, as they may deem necessary and suitable for a Congressional Library; and when a recommendation for any purchase comes from that committee, it meets with my consideration. But I must confess, that when an obligation is sought to be imposed upon the committee to purchase this book, or that painting, and the proposition, coming too, not from a committee, but from an individual of this body, it has not the same force with me. I object to matters of this sort coming up before the Senate, and would oppose its reference to any committee. If, however, it is to go to any committee at all, I should say that it ought to go to the Committee on the Library, because it is a committee composed of gentlemen of taste, not only with regard to literature, but also with regard to the fine arts. I must say, however, that I totally object to this mode of introducing subjects of this kind to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I did not hear the resolution read, but if I understand it, it is one of instructions; and if that is the case, I would propose that the committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of removing that thing in the east yard, called "Greenough's Washington;" and also those other matters which so disfigure the eastern portico, where strangers from all parts of the country assemble on inauguration day. I hope that before the next inauguration day shall come, let which party may succeed, those dreadful-looking images which deface what would otherwise be a beautiful building, and mar the prospect, may be removed. I hope, therefore, that if this resolution is referred to any committee, the instructions may be so extended as to cause these things to be removed.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from New York moved to amend the resolution so as to change the reference from the Committee on the Library to that committee; and the Chair, hearing no objection, declared such to be the will of the Senate. If, however, there be any objection to that reference, a motion can be made to reconsider.

Mr. SEWARD. I would barely say that this matter was recommended to me by the consideration that there is some considerable merit acknowledged in the artist who has produced these works; and there is a large class of the community who attach considerable importance to the preservation of the memorials of the Indian races, who are fast passing away from before us. But that which more particularly commends this matter to me, is the fact that the artist is in London, in a situation of great embarrassment; that his numerous friends and patrons in this country have seconded an appeal which he himself has made to Congress, to entertain once more the question whether they will not purchase them. As an act of kindness to one of our countrymen abroad, in a very destitute condition, I have thought it was not unbecoming to ask that the proper committee, if it could be ascertained which committee that is, would allow me to submit the question whether they would give any response to the proposition to purchase these paintings.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "Committee on Indian Affairs," and inserting "Committee on the Library."

The PRESIDENT. That motion will not be in order, inasmuch as the words "Committee on the Library" were stricken out, and the words "Committee on Indian Affairs" inserted. The object of the Senator from Arkansas can only be attained now by a motion to reconsider the vote by which the change was made.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Then I move to reconsider that vote.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ATCHISON. I trust, then, that the resolution will be rejected. The Committee on Indian Affairs have now a rather unenviable reputation for extravagance. There are constant complaints in relation to propositions for appropriations asked for by that committee. If this subject is referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, it will be the first time in the history of that committee, that they were ever called upon to exercise their judgment or their taste in relation to paintings, or any thing having any connection with the fine arts. We have our hands full of matters of substance.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator from Missouri will indulge me with one word, I will say that, as both committees seem to be unwilling to take charge of the subject, and inasmuch as compromise is the order of the day, I hope I may be allowed to strike out the reference proposed, and that the resolution may be referred to a select committee.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT. That motion can only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. BORLAND. I object.

The PRESIDENT. It is in the power of the Senator from New York to move to strike out a portion of the resolution, and insert new matter.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I move to amend it by striking out the words "to report a bill," and to alter the resolution so as to make it read "the expediency of purchasing."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the resolution drawn so as to meet the views of the Senator, and have but one motion.

The resolution, as proposed to be amended, was then read as follows:

"Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of — members, be requested to inquire into the expediency of purchasing George Catlin's collection of Indian Scenes and Portraits."

Mr. BORLAND. As the question has assumed a somewhat different aspect from that which it presented a short time since, I must remark that, in substance, it is an old acquaintance here. I know that for the last four years, there has scarcely been a session in which it has not been brought before us. The Senate has passed its judgment upon it more than once, and I have always opposed it on its merits. I stated to the Senate, on a former occasion, what I now repeat, and what is known to me to be certainly correct, that we have in the Army of the United States an officer who has given proof of his eminent qualifications, in the judgment of those better qualified to decide that point than myself, which would enable him to produce a series of paintings of this kind, far superior to those of Mr. Catlin. I believe he has given proof of his superior qualification, by works which have already come from his hands; and he is, as I understand, willing, for no greater compensation than he now receives as an officer of the Army, to produce such a gallery of paintings upon these very subjects, far superior to those of Mr. Catlin. The gentleman to whom I refer, is Captain Eastman, of the Army of the United States. In justice to him, however, I must say, that I have never seen him, though I have seen his works; and we have on the desks of Senators evidence of his eminent qualifications, in the illustrations which he furnished for Mr. Schoolcraft's book. For a compensation no greater than he now receives as an officer of the Army, I am informed that he is ready to furnish to the Government a gallery of paintings superior in every respect to those which we are now asked to purchase at a much higher price. On no account could I be induced to vote for a proposition of this kind; and unless Senators desire to make further remarks upon the subject, I will move to lay the subject on the table, as a test question.

The question was taken, and on a division, there were—ayes 21, noes 16.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

NAUTICAL ALMANAC.

Mr. GWIN. I moved, the other day, to lay on the table a resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] in relation to the Nautical Almanac. I am satisfied, now, that it ought to pass; and therefore move to take it up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to inform the Senate where, and at what Observatory, the observations and calculations for the "Nautical Almanac" are made?

Why the same are not made at the National Observatory at Washington?

What expenses are necessary therefor, except the pay of the Superintendent?

What progress has been made towards making a Nautical Almanac?

For how long a period of time the calculations of the first almanac are expected to extend?

Whether it is necessary to the perfection of the "Nautical Almanac" to make observations at more than one Observatory, and if so, where they are made at two Observatories, and if so, at what two?

Whether any persons except the Superintendent, have been paid for services in preparing the "Nautical Almanac," and if so, how many, and what compensation have they received?

When it is expected that a "Nautical Almanac" will be prepared for publication?

What improvement, if any, is it expected the American "Nautical Almanac," when published, will have over the English?

Is it expected that any errors of former astronomers or observers are to be corrected, or any new means suggested by which more precision is to be given to astronomical science?

After the first American "Nautical Almanac" is published, will the succeeding numbers probably cost as much, or more than the first?

Will the same time be necessary for the second and subsequent numbers respectively, as for the first?

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I think a good deal of the information asked for in that resolution, is already at the command of the Senate. For example: as to the names of the persons employed in making the computations for the Almanac. We have the whole of that, with their compensation and residence, given in the Blue Book. And so we have reports—I think we have had two or three of them—from the Superintendent, exhibiting the progress of the work. Nevertheless, I very much desire to see such a report as the resolution contemplates, called for; because I think it will forever silence all cavil upon the subject, and demonstrate not only the utility, but the absolute necessity of publishing an Almanac of our own.

I suppose that Senators are aware that no vessel, either of the navy or merchant service, can go to sea without a Nautical Almanac; and that heretofore we have been dependent on the British Nautical Almanac, which is put out about three years in advance, that for 1855-'56 being now published. If we have a war of more than three years' duration, which would intercept our communication with England, it is manifest that our vessels could not put to sea, unless we had established such a work as this resolution inquires into. I think it will appear from this report, that we have not only good reason, but a perfect right, to expect great improvements in astronomical science, and great improvements in the accuracy of this work. Indeed, one of the reports of the Superintendent, which was laid on our table some time ago, already shows that the American calculations will make impossible certain errors in the moon's place, as given in the European tables, which may make a difference of fifteen or twenty miles in longitude. The accuracy of the computations is evinced by a test which was applied during the solar eclipse of last year. In the predictions of that eclipse, according to the British Almanac, there was an error of eighty-five seconds, while the American Almanac was in error only twenty seconds. I think, also, it will be seen that the observatories of the whole world, and in all time, are laid under contribution for the purpose of supplying the materials for the calculations. Those calculations and computations are not confined to observations made to-day, or in the course of this year, at Washington, or anywhere else; but observations made at all the observatories in all the world, which are reliable, for hundreds of years past, are relied upon for these computations. Observations at Washington will no doubt assist in the correction of errors—in a nearer approach to the utmost attainable accuracy. The services of persons competent to perform these computations, cannot be had at anything less than is now paid them. I believe that compensation is as low as it can be obtained for. But I will not go any further into the subject. I only desired to say thus much, as a reason for passing the resolution. I am satisfied that the report in answer to it will be most satisfactory and gratifying. And I am very sure that the continuance of the work will be as valuable to the country, as it is and will be honorable to the admirable officer who superintends it.

I will add, sir, for the information of the economists, that the sale of these Almanacs will restore to the Treasury a part of the expenditure upon the work, while it will cheapen to all our mariners the cost of the book. Already the anticipation of this publication has brought down to one half the price of the British Nautical Almanac.

The resolution was adopted.

CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA.

Mr. BROOKE. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it may be considered at this time:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the Senate upon the practicability, utility, and probable cost of a ship canal across the peninsula of Florida; and also to communicate such information as the Department may be in possession of, in relation to the navigation of the Straits of Florida, the losses occurring therein, and the dangers and difficulties incident thereto.

No objection was made to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BROOKE. I hope the resolution will be adopted. It is one of a great deal of importance, not only to Southern commerce, but to the commerce of the whole Union. My attention has been called to it by a highly intelligent gentleman of the State of Mississippi—Mr. A. B. Alvord—who has bestowed a great deal of time and labor in the investigation of the subject. I am informed by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY,] that the annual loss of vessels doubling that cape or peninsula, is about twenty-two per annum, involving a loss of about $1,000,000 per annum. The dangers and difficulties incident to that navigation are the cause why so many vessels go in ballast to the city of New Orleans, the rates of insurance being so high; and that, of course, imposes a great burden upon the commerce and products of the South and West, because, in order to make up the losses incident to their empty vessels going to New Orleans, they have to impose very large freights upon outward-bound cargoes. I do not intend by this resolution to commit the Government to the construction of the canal, but what I want, is simply the information, in order that private capitalists, if they should be so disposed, may embark in the undertaking; though I do think it is one of such national importance that it might well be considered by the Government as a national work.

The resolution was adopted.

REMEDIES TO PATENTEES.

Mr. BRADBURY. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill giving further remedies to patentees. The consideration of it will occupy a very few moments.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It enacts, that if any person or corporation shall import, or have in possession, for the purpose of traffic or sale, any articles imported into the United States from any foreign territory adjoining or near thereto, and manufactured in whole or in part in any such territory by any process or machine, for which there may be at the time a subsistent patent owned by any citizen of the United States, such person or corporation shall, upon due proof thereof, before any court of competent jurisdiction, be deemed to have infringed said patent, and be liable for all damages, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as in other cases; and the articles so manufactured and imported, shall be forfeited to the use of the owner of said patent. It enacts further, that whenever a patentee, or any person holding under him, shall file a bill in equity, verified by oath or affirmation, in the circuit or district court of the United States, complaining that any person or corporation has imported, or has in possession for sale or traffic, any of the articles described in the preceding section, and shall make it appear to the satisfaction of the judge, that the facts alleged are probably true, the said judge shall issue an order to the marshal, directing him to take said articles into his custody, and hold the same subject to the final order of court; and may further, by injunction, restrain the sale of, and traffic in said articles; and after due notice to all the parties, may, upon a final hearing of the cause, decree said articles to be forfeited to the use of the complainant: Provided, however, That from all judgments and decrees of said courts, a writ of error or appeal shall lie in the same manner as now provided by law in relation to other judgments or decrees.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have one or two verbal amendments to offer to the bill, and one of some importance. I desire to say, first, that the necessity of this bill arises from a defect found in the existing patent laws. By a valuable invention, a great saving of expense has been made in the manufacture of irregular forms. The inventor was protected by a patent. After the invention was found to be valuable, as in the manufacture of gun-stocks, lasts, &c., violators of the patent stepped over the line into Canada and manufactured the articles, establishing machines on the other side of the line, and bringing the articles into this country for use—thus depriving the patentee of the benefit of his patent. I do not suppose any further explanation is necessary to the bill.

There are one or two verbal amendments to be made, where I regard the bill as rather too stringent in its character. I will move, first, that the word "hereafter" be inserted in the beginning of the bill after the word "shall," so as to make it read, "that if any person or corporation shall hereafter import," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. I move to strike out the word "sale," in the clause—"that if any person or corporation shall import or have in possession, for the purposes of traffic or sale, any articles," &c., and insert the word "use" in lieu thereof.

Mr. HALE. I hope that will not be done. I think the Senator does not understand the force of that amendment. It will make a very important alteration; and its effect will be to subject any man to the penalties of the bill who buys a patented article, although he may know nothing of the existence of the patent. For instance, I have on my desk two specimens of patented cloth; if an individual buys a piece of that made by the infringer of the patent—if this amendment is made—he subjects himself to the penalties of the bill. I think it is broad enough to include any one who has the articles for the purposes of traffic or sale; and it should not subject an innocent purchaser, who may buy an article without knowing whether it comes from the genuine patentee or not. I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. I perceive that the Senator from New Hampshire, who supposes that others misunderstand, does not himself understand the necessity of the amendment. Perhaps I may premise that I propose to submit such other amendments as will obviate some of the difficulties which the Senator has in his mind. But the necessity of the amendment is this: If the bill is adopted without the amendment, a violator of a patent has only to establish his manufactory on the other side of the line, and then enter into contracts with every one who desires to use the article, and under those contracts he will bring the articles in, and they will be used; so that the bill will be utterly useless unless an amendment of this kind be adopted. I only propose that those who shall knowingly hereafter use the article shall be required to pay something for the use of it, for I shall move presently to strike out that portion which declares that the article shall be forfeited. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HALE. The honorable Senator says it is owing to my ignorance that I do not understand the amendment; and I confess it. I do not see how, if you adopt it, you can protect any single citizen of the United States that goes into a dry-goods, or any other store, and buys a patented article. He subjects himself to the penalties of the bill. I am in favor of the bill, and think it is broad enough as it stands. If you subject to its penalties every man who uses an article made by the violator of a patent, it will be extending the principle further than it has ever been extended before. There never was such a principle as that a man who used a patented article, manufactured by somebody in violation of the rights of the patentee, should be subjected to a penalty. It is a new principle, and a dangerous one. A man may buy an article—take this cloth for instance—may go into a store, and buy a suit of clothes, or a coat, or what not, and the first thing he knows he is subjected to the penalty. It will be broad enough if you subject the traffickers and those who have the patented articles for sale, without subjecting an innocent person to it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would ask how the honorable Senator proposes to protect the patentee against frauds of this kind: where a manufacturer of articles, in violation of the law or of the spirit of the law, should be established on the other side of the line in Canada, and where the manufacturer, intending and designing to violate the law, should then propose to supply every establishment in the country with lasts? They would then, if this amendment is not put in the bill, be able to use them when purchased in violation of the spirit of the law on the other side of the line under that contract, as effectually as if there was no protection whatever. Certainly the Senator from New Hampshire cannot design anything of this kind. It will be easy to reach the difficulty to which he alludes, by a subsequent amendment requiring the purchasers to pay when they use the articles in known violation of law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. The bill provides that the importing of articles manufactured from American patented machines in contiguous foreign territory, shall be deemed to be an infringement of the patent. It provides that the party so infringing "shall be liable for all damages in the same manner, and to the same extent as in other cases." The bill provides immediately afterwards: "And the articles so manufactured and imported shall be forfeited to the use of the owner of said patent." I move to strike out this clause, and insert in place of it the words "of infringement." The effect of the amendment will be to subject the parties to the same penalties "as in other cases of infringement."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. In consequence of that amendment, another amendment becomes necessary in the second section. I therefore move to strike out in that section, in the clause relating to the powers of the United States courts under this bill, the following words: "And after due notice to all parties may, upon a final hearing of the cause, decree said articles to be forfeited to the use of the complainant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the gentleman who has charge of this bill, whether it would not be better to limit the penalties of this act to the case of articles manufactured from wood.

Mr. BRADBURY. The object of the bill is to reach cases of that kind. I am not aware that there is any necessity to extend it further; and therefore, no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts occurs to me at present. If he will suggest the proper place for such an amendment, I shall perhaps be willing to have it inserted.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know where such an amendment would properly come in, for I have not the bill before me; but I suppose there is some place in the bill, which the Senator can very readily point out, where a provision may be inserted, limiting it to the case of articles manufactured from wood.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to hear the Senator explain why that amendment is necessary. He will perceive that this bill has relation only to articles brought in the United States from contiguous territory, having reference to Canada, and that it cannot apply to articles imported from distant countries, for the language of the bill is very explicit with regard to that.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not feel inclined to enter into this discussion at all. I have entertained doubts as to the policy which this bill proposes, but the evil complained of being limited, I believe, to two articles—the manufacture of shoe-lasts, and of axe-handles—I thought it would be perhaps wiser to limit the measures proposed by this bill, to articles manufactured of wood. The Senate will very readily see that this may lead to retaliatory legislation, and that the better course of policy is to have a party take out a patent in a foreign country rather than protect himself by legislation. But, seeing an evil existing in this particular case, and knowing that this is the third renewal of the patent, for which protection is asked, and supposing that a patent could not be obtained in a foreign country, I was disposed to let the bill pass, if limited to the particular class of cases which I have mentioned, and for which it was, I believe, intended to provide.

Mr. ATCHISON. I concur in the remarks made by the Senator from Massachusetts, and for that purpose, I move that the bill be postponed until Monday next.

Mr. BRADBURY. I think I can prepare an amendment, in a moment, which will obviate the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ATCHISON. The Senator from Massachusetts expresses doubts as to the policy of the bill at all, but if there is to be no further discussion, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the Senator from Maine will consent to let the bill lie over. If the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] is correct, the bill, as it now stands, subjects to punishment innocent individuals who may purchase articles without the knowledge that they have been made abroad by a machine patented in this country. I would not be willing to agree to that principle. I think, therefore, it would be better to let us have an opportunity of examining that question.

Mr. HALE. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Maine, who has this bill in charge. I am friendly to the bill, and wish to have it passed; but I think that if it passes now, in its present form, it will be the most monstrous trap that was ever set. It involves an entirely new principle, and one which we have never adopted in regard to any patented machine throughout the whole United States; and that is this: the bill, as it now stands, subjects to its penalties a man who uses an article manufactured in a foreign country from a machine patented here. You may be liable to the penalties for wearing a piece of cotton or linen cloth, if it turns out that it has been spun or woven by a machine patented in this country. Every article that enters into domestic consumption may come under this bill. Every man will be subjected to its penalties who uses an article that has been manufactured by a machine on the other side of the line, provided a patent for the same machine has been issued on this side. I say this is an entirely new principle, and an alarming and dangerous one. It is one which you have never adopted with regard to articles made from machines in this country. If a man has a machine for weaving cloth, and somebody else manufactures the same kind of cloth, in violation of his rights as a patentee, that subjects him, under this bill, to a penalty. According to our present laws, it does not subject me to the penalties of the law if I buy a piece of that cloth. But this bill goes further: If an article is manufactured on the other side of the line by a machine, which is a violation of the patent here, then, according to this bill, the products manufactured, be they cloths, hats, boots, shoes, or anything else, are not allowed to be used without subjecting the user or wearer to its penalties. I hope the bill will be laid over, and that if it is thus obnoxious the Senate will amend it.

Mr. BUTLER. In justice to myself, as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I hope I may be allowed to say a word. It was with some reluctance that I gave my consent to this bill. It was very carefully worded by Mr. Dayton, one of my former colleagues upon the committee. We were very careful in guarding the bill, as we supposed at that time. The new principle that has been introduced by my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Maine, is altogether without my knowledge. I agree, to some extent, with the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire. As long as this bill is founded upon the principle that persons are to be reached who openly sell, scientia—with knowledge or implied knowledge that they are using articles manufactured from machines beyond the line, in violation of the rights of persons who have them upon this side, I have no objection to it. The great principle, however, should be to reach none but those who openly and knowingly sell in violation of the patent in the United States. I therefore would say to the Senator from Maine, that I doubt very much the propriety of the amendment which has been adopted on his motion, and cannot give my sanction to it without further consideration.

Mr. MILLER. I am very anxious that this bill shall be disposed of at this time. I would say to the Senator from Maine who has had charge of it, that I prefer the bill as introduced by myself, and reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I think we had better return to the word "sale," and not insert the word "use," so as to avoid the difficulty suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. I think if we leave the bill in its original form, it will embrace all that is necessary, and secure all the rights necessary to be secured. Then I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts to confine this bill to the manufacture of articles of wood. That will reach the case, and get rid of all the difficulties which have been suggested. It is highly important that our own citizens, who have these rights secured by acts of Congress, should be protected, and immediately protected against this piracy upon their rights. The case it is intended to remedy exists, confined to articles manufactured of wood. If the bill is retained in its original form, it can injure no one except those who are knowingly and willfully engaged in evading the laws of the United States. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Maine will consent to the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRADBURY. I feel bound, after the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey, who introduced this bill, to assent to the amendment. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is correct in his recollection; the amendment which I offered, was one moved by myself upon explanation by a gentleman conversant with the matter, who said the law would be comparatively useless without it, because it could be easily evaded. But, as the honorable Senator who introduced the bill thinks the amendment which has been made would be objectionable, I move to reconsider the vote striking out the word "sale," and inserting the word "use." After that, I shall be ready to accede to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment striking out the word "sale," and inserting the word "use," and it was rejected.

Mr. BRADBURY. I now move, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, to insert after the word "articles," the words "manufactured in whole or in part of wood."

Several SENATORS. What is the necessity of the limitation?

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not see any necessity for it, and if the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection to the bill as it now stands, I shall withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I cannot see the propriety of making this amendment. I cannot see why we should give specific protection to one class more than to another.

Mr. BRADBURY. As Senators do not seem to be in favor of the amendment, I withdraw it.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not wish to interfere with the passage of the bill, but it strikes me that it is a bill of very great importance, and I, for one, wish to ask the honorable Senator from Maine to defer its consideration until to-morrow morning. If this bill be for specific relief, I ask if the patent of this person (Mr. Blanchard, if I recollect his name) has not been renewed at least twice, or thrice; and if it be so, whether it is not in fact protection enough? If the bill is to have general operation, then it must be seen at once that endless litigation will grow out of its passage; and it will be seen that the remedy, to be of service, must extend to the manufacture of articles as well across the Atlantic as across the Canada line. It strikes me that the bill is introducing an entirely new principle—one for which a struggle has been made for years, but which has hitherto been withheld. I believe the Committee on Patents have had this subject under consideration for some years, and have studiously avoided giving their assent to the principle involved in this bill. I may be mistaken in this; but it really appears to me that this is a subject which merits more grave consideration. As such I should like to look into it a little more. I confess I have not had time to examine it sufficiently. I would like to have another day for its consideration, and therefore I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Might I suggest an amendment now, before the question is taken upon the motion to postpone?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator cannot offer an amendment unless the motion to postpone is withdrawn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Florida will withdraw the motion for a moment, I will renew it.

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly; I will withdraw it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I cannot vote for this bill as it stands. I wish to read it, and to call the attention of Senators to it for a moment. It has been somewhat restored to its original form, and it reads thus:

"That if any person or corporation shall hereafter import, or have in possession for purposes of traffic or sale, any articles imported into the United States from any foreign territory adjoining or near thereto, and manufactured in whole or in part in any such territory by any process or machine, or by any substantial modification of any process or machine for which there may be at the time a subsisting patent owned by any citizen of the United States, such person or corporation shall, upon due proof thereof, before any court of competent jurisdiction, be deemed to have infringed said patent, and be liable," &c.

Now, suppose a Western merchant goes to New York or Boston and buys a great many articles thus imported from Canada, and should take them to the West for the purpose of merchandising, is not that merchant, under the provisions of this bill, subjected to its penalties? I think he is, because the idea suggested by the Senator from South Carolina has not been met. If you will say that the person shall not do this knowingly, or having knowledge that the articles were manufactured in the adjoining province of Canada, then I will agree to the bill; but if you do not insert into the bill any clause which exempts a person from penalty, if he acts innocently—without the knowledge that these articles which he thus buys in Boston or New York have been manufactured across the line by some machine patented in the United States, and brought here in violation of our patent laws—I cannot agree to it. I therefore think that we ought to insert after the word "and," in the sixth line, the words "knowing them to have been manufactured." If he has any knowledge that they have been manufactured in Canada by a machine patented in our country, then he would be guilty, in substance, of a violation of the patent laws. As I promised my friend from Florida to renew the motion to postpone, I merely suggest the amendment, hoping that those who take an interest in the bill will examine it, and see whether the amendment which I have suggested is not necessary. I do not offer the amendment now, but I would suggest it so that the friends of the bill may examine it, and make the guilty act dependent upon knowledge, as suggested by the Senator from South Carolina. I now renew the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. BRADBURY. I supposed such would be the construction of the bill without the insertion of the clause suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. I wish to get a vote on the bill to-day, and if the Senator from Florida will withdraw the motion to postpone, I shall offer an amendment, to insert after the word "possession," the words "knowing the same to have been imported."

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to postpone the further consideration of the bill. No amendment can be offered unless that motion is withdrawn or voted down.

Mr. BRADBURY. I hope my friend from Kentucky will withdraw the motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I cannot withdraw it. It was originally made by my friend from Florida, and I renewed it in consequence of my pledge to him.

Mr. MILLER. The clause of which the Senator from Kentucky complains is not a new clause at all. It is copied from our own patent laws protecting the rights of our own citizens against invasion within the United States. Let us take the case cited by my friend from Kentucky, of a merchant going to New York and purchasing a counterfeit patented article; it is not now necessary to prove that he had knowledge that it was not in truth manufactured by the owner of the patent or his assignee. If you find the article in his possession, under our patent laws now, regulating our own citizens, he may be made liable for an infringement of the patent, although he knew not at the time he bought the article whether it was made by a patented machine or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can never consent to that principle. If that is so, there is greater necessity for postponing the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. As this bill was originally drawn, and as it came from the Committee on the Judiciary, I think the gentleman will find that it embraces the same clause which is contained in our other patent laws, and certainly we ought not to extend to persons who infringe these patents in the Canadian Provinces, and all persons purchasing under them, any greater rights or privileges than we extend to our own citizens.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to change the name of the steamer Brilliant.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after two hours spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 10, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 271, granting the right of way and a portion of the public land to the States of Florida and Alabama, for the construction of certain railroads in said States.

Mr. BUSBY. I ask the consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the papers and petition of Joseph Sloan.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman desire to withdraw them?

Mr. BUSBY. That they may be returned to the memorialist.

Mr. ORR. That is unusual, I think; is it not?

The SPEAKER. It is unusual, unless copies be left on the files, which the Chair supposes the gentleman will see is done. The order will be entered upon the Journal, with that understanding.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to make a bargain with the House. Let me take up one little bill upon the table, and pass it this morning, and I will not trouble them any more. It is the bill to grant preemption rights to settlers along the Central Railroad in Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Upon the measure immediately before the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] is entitled to the floor. Does the gentleman yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON?]

Mr. ORR. I cannot yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The bill under consideration will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk accordingly reported to the House "A bill granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands to the States of Alabama and Florida, for the construction of certain railroads in said State."

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STANLY. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] will pardon me a moment. I want to inquire how this bill gets before the House at this time? I was under the impression that another bill would take precedence of this in the order of business.

The SPEAKER. It was reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which fact confines the bill to the morning hour, and is kept within the morning hour by the pending motion to recommit.

Mr. STANLY. What becomes of the bill reported by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] yesterday, granting lands to the States generally for railroad and educational purposes?

The SPEAKER. That will be the next business in order, according to the opinion of the Chair. This bill being first reported, and being in precisely the same condition as the one reported by the gentleman from New York, should be first disposed of.

Mr. ORR. I propose to offer a substitute for the bill which was reported by the committee. The variation between it and the original bill is a very slight one. In the first section of the substitute, the branch of the road provided to be run upon that road from Pensacola Bay to Montgomery, out in the direction of the Chattahoochee river, has been stricken out, and another branch from the road, in the direction of Mobile Bay, to connect with the terminus of the Gerard road, substituted.

There is another provision in the substitute, allowing the privilege to the Gerard road to cross this road, and an equal share of the public lands within six miles of the road.

The entire bill is a precise copy of the Missouri bill in all of its features. The same guards are thrown around this bill which are contained in that bill; and although it has not been returned from the printer, yet the House can be informed as to its contents as well without the printed bill before them as with it.

Mr. MARTIN, (interrupting.) I should like to make a few observations on the subject of these bills.

Mr. ORR. I do not like to be unaccommodating; but still—

Mr. MARTIN. I will trouble the House but a few moments.

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman will be brief, I will yield the floor, if it will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that if the gentleman yields the floor for explanation, it is in accordance with the practice here, and is in order; but if the gentleman yields the floor for any other purpose, he yields it altogether.

Mr. ORR. I do not know what course to pursue. I know that the Committee on Public Lands have got into rather a bad odor in the House, in consequence of keeping their bills before the House, and thereby preventing other committees reporting. We submit a report, and the friends of the particular measure desire to be heard. It is right and proper that they should be heard. Their constituents are interested, and they want to put themselves right before them. Other gentleman desire to be heard, and only one hour being devoted to the call of committees, we find that the Committee on Public Lands has consumed very much of that hour for the last three or four months.

Mr. MARTIN. I will only occupy about ten minutes' time for an explanation.

Mr. ORR. I yield for an explanation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understood the Chair to decide that if the gentleman yields the floor for any other purpose than for explanation, he will lose it altogether.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did so decide.

Mr. JONES. Then I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN] if he has any personal explanation in relation to these bills?

Mr. MARTIN. My explanation relates to these bills generally. I can get through with what I have to say before you can settle this question.

Mr. JONES. I wish to inquire if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] is upon the floor, or the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MARTIN?]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is entitled to the floor, but has yielded it for explanation, to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JONES. Then I hope the gentleman will confine his remarks to matters of explanation.

Mr. MARTIN commenced some remarks, in which he was arrested on the ground of irrelevancy.

Mr. ORR. The opponents of bills granting alternate sections of the public land for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, have never yet, in my opinion, stated the question with any fairness. It is charged upon those who have favored the policy, that they were propositions for the giving away—the squandering—of thirty-five million acres of the public land, which is worth, at the Government price, $50,000,000. That is true as far as it goes, but it is not the statement of the whole case. These grants do not amount to a gift which impoverishes the Government one farthing. The means in the Treasury are not reduced. It is just as rich after the donation has been made, as it was previously. You will find money flowing into your coffers after these grants have been made, and the construction of the railroads for which they were made, that you never could have received without some step such as this had been taken, to enhance it to a value which it now has not. I desire, therefore, gentlemen—when they rise in their places, either in the House or the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to assail this policy—to meet the argument, and not make the charge that we are throwing away the public lands. That is not true in point of fact. The grants are made by this Government upon certain conditions. What are those conditions? That the railroads shall be constructed through your public domain. The other condition is, that the lands for six miles on each side of the road, reserved to the Government, shall not be sold at less than $2 50 per acre. They are now sold at $1 25 per acre; and if you sell half the present quantity, then, for double that price, I should like to inquire whether there is not realized as large an amount to the Treasury, after these donations are made, as though the whole had been disposed of at the present price? The people are not impoverished at all. They are not required to pay, in consequence, an additional farthing into the public Treasury. It is a gift, upon the other hand, of great consequence, by giving value, in extending facilities for markets, and thereby bringing unsalable lands into market.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ORR. I hope my friend will spare me the interruption.

Mr. JONES. The opponents of these bills cannot get an opportunity to say a word upon them.

Mr. ORR. The Missouri bill was debated here for four or five weeks, and then the opponents of these schemes had the opportunity of being heard, but not one of them as yet has met the arguments advanced in favor of the system. They cannot be successfully met; and this mad-dog cry that those who support the donation for the construction of railroads of alternate sections of the public land, are in favor of a system of internal improvements, is idle and vain. It has no foundation. It is the cry of those who would defeat a measure, who are not able to bear it down by the weight of argument.

Mr. AVERETT. I will merely put an inquiry to the gentleman.

Mr. ORR. I cannot yield the floor.

Mr. AVERETT. The previous question is moved on all of these bills, and opportunity is not afforded for reply to their opponents.

Mr. ORR. I will state, as I have done before in advocating this bill, there are seven townships of the public land through which this road passes, which have been in market for twenty years, and of which, during that whole time, not one single quarter of a section has been entered. Would it be a loss to grant this to a railroad company? So far from it, by encouraging the construction of a road through it, you bring it into market, and cause that which is now valueless to be sold for $2 50 per acre. But more; these roads guarantee to transport your troops and munitions of war without any charge, and your mails at such prices as Congress may see proper to pay. These are the advantages to be derived from the policy by the Government. See what vast importance and consequence in time of war the road proposed in this bill would be to the Government for the transportation of troops across the Isthmus of Florida. In their voyage around the southern coast of Florida they would easily be obstructed by a foreign foe. It would be of immense importance not only in a pecuniary point of view, but in the saving of time. That saving of time may be of great consequence in the defense of the country. The bill ought to pass. Its merits commend it to the support and confidence of this House. Its importance should commend it to the favorable consideration of members of this House—North, South, East, and West—and I trust it will be passed. I now withdraw my motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, and offer the substitute of which I have given notice. I then renew the motion to recommit, and upon that demand the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill and substitute upon the table, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his call for the previous question for a single moment. The gentleman had not taken his seat, and therefore the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina could not retain the floor after having demanded the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I would be glad to accommodate the gentleman could I do so. If the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is voted down, I will withdraw my call for the previous question, to afford the gentleman, who is particularly interested in this matter, to submit a statement.

Mr. CABELL. I will, with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, make a short statement in regard to this road, without touching upon general matters.

Mr. JONES. I cannot withdraw, for if I do, the whole question will be opened again.

Mr. ORR. I withdraw my demand for the previous question.

The yeas and nays were ordered upon the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. MILLSON. I move a call of the House, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put, Shall there be a call of the House? and it was disagreed to—yeas 62, nays 117.

The question then recurring upon the motion to lay the bill on the table, it was taken, and there were—yeas 99, nays 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Chas. Allen, Allison, John Appleton, Wm. Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barrere, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhausa, Bocoek, Bowyer, John H. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, Meacham, Millson, Morehead, Murphy, Newton, Orr, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Riddle, Robbins, Robt. Ross, Savage, Schoonmaker, D. L. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, R. H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Sweetser, B. Thompson, Thurston, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, and Wells—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Willis Allen, Bell, Bissell, Bragg, Bremon, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Cotnam, John G. Davis, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Ficklin, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Hall, Harper, Haven, Hendricks, Hens, Houston, Howard, John W. Howe, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kansas, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Nabers, Olds, Outlaw, S. W. Parker, Penn, Pennington, Phelps, Porter, Rantoul, Richardson, Robinson, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Smith, Stanley, Benj. Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Towns, Townsend, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welsh, Addison White, Alexander White, and Williams—82.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. COBB. I move, then, to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. KING, of New York. Is not the motion to reconsider a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged question which, under the circumstances, confines itself to the morning hour, under the special order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the House refuse to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, can they proceed with this other business?

Mr. COBB. I would inquire of the Speaker, if the House refuse to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, what is the next thing in order?

The SPEAKER. The House would proceed to vote upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. COBB. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is it not in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It will be when the pending motion is disposed of.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I trust the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] will withdraw his motion, and let us go into Committee of the Whole.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. HAMILTON. I rise to a privileged question. I would inquire of the Chair, if it is not in order now to take up the contested-election case from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there not a privileged question pending?

The SPEAKER. This one is of a higher grade, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move, then, that we proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WALSH. Is that in order when another motion is pending?

The SPEAKER. It is, as involving a question of privilege.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] moved to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, and the House was dividing upon that. And then there is a call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were demanded, but that does not alter the case.

Mr. HAMILTON. I will withdraw my motion for the purpose of deciding this other business.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB], seeing that a majority of the House is disinclined to adopt his motion, will withdraw it for the present, and let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. If I was satisfied that would be the action of the House, out of due respect to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM], who has an unfinished speech, I should certainly withdraw my motion. Shall we go into Committee of the Whole if we reject that motion? I am satisfied that we will not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Let us take the vote, and we can then determine.

The question was then taken upon Mr. COBB's motion to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, and there were, yeas 54—noes not counted.

Mr. EVANS. I call for tellers upon that motion. There is a good deal of business on the Speaker's table, which ought to be disposed of. We will have speeches enough in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Tellers were then ordered, and Messrs. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, and RICHARDSON, were appointed; and the question being taken, the tellers reported—yeas 78, noes 74.

So the House agreed to proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EWING. Is it in order to move now a postponement of that question for two weeks?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. EWING. I move, then, the postponement of that question for two weeks, on account of the necessary absence of the sitting member.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order, after the House has determined to take up and consider the case, and not till then.

Mr. HAMILTON. I demand the yeas and nays upon my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 83, nays 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Willis Allen, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bissell, Bocoek, Bragg, Breckinridge, Buell, Busby, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Cleveland, Colecock, Curtis, Daniel, John G. 32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 98.

Cottman, Cullom, George T. Davis, Dockery, Duncan, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Fowler, Gentry, Giddings, Goodnow, Goodrich, Grey, Harper, Haws, Haven, Hebard, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thos. M. Stephens, Stone, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, and Yates—99.

So the House refused to consider the contested-election case.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is there any question before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is no question. The House had determined to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was about to move to suspend the rules, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. The first question will be to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. That is decided in the affirmative. The motion pending now is to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled an act relating to the salaries of the officers of the Territories of the United States; which received the signature of the Speaker.

Mr. HAMILTON. With the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB,] I will suggest to the House, and I will make the motion if it is in order, to take up this contested-election case on Tuesday week. It is the legitimate business of the House, and should certainly be disposed of; and this is due to the gentleman who is contesting the seat, and to the dignity of this House. I would suggest, then, that we take it up on Tuesday week.

Mr. FULLER, of Pennsylvania. If it would suit the convenience of the House, I would prefer to have it set apart for Thursday two weeks from to-day.

Mr. HAMILTON. I will agree to that.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent it will be entered and regarded as the special order for that day.

Mr. STANLY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] can reach his object by making his motion at the time proposed by him, as it is a privileged motion of a higher grade than any other, involving, as it does, a question of privilege.

Mr. HAMILTON. I will not give any notice. I shall make the regular motion, and the House can vote it down, if it thinks proper.

Mr. HOUSTON. At the suggestion of members around me, I will propose to close debate upon the Indian appropriation bill at four o'clock this evening. I will say to the House that the general debate will not be interrupted. On tomorrow I shall propose to take up the deficiency bill, and this debate may go on.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I renew the motion—which is a privileged motion—to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I do object to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] closing the debate upon the Indian appropriation bill just at this time, when there can be no necessity for it, as the deficiency appropriation bill has to be debated upon its merits before we can get to the general appropriation bill at all; and we may want to talk upon the general appropriation bill after the deficiency bill is disposed of.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas in one word, and it is this: The Senate, on yesterday, as will be seen by referring to the debates, took up the joint resolution proposing the adjournment of the two Houses on the 16th of August, and laid it over, declining to act upon it, on the ground that this House had sent them no appropriation bills. They are throwing the responsibility upon us. All that I ask is, that the debate upon the Indian bill shall come up under the five minutes rule, and to-morrow gentlemen can go on with the debate upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to a snap judgment when necessary, but an unnecessary snap judgment ought never to be taken.

Mr. HOUSTON. I feel it my duty to move the resolution.

Mr. HENN. I rise to a question of order. I would ask the Speaker if the House did not decide to go to the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The House did so decide. It is nevertheless in order to submit a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would suggest after to-day we cannot go to the business on the Speaker's table so as to distribute it for ten days to come. It is well known to the House that a great many of us will be absent next week, and there are a large number of bills there that ought to be referred to committees. I hope therefore that the House will not go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but will proceed with the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I submit a resolution which I have always understood to be a privileged proposition, terminating debate upon this bill at four o'clock this day. I do not see how it is that I am cut off from a vote upon it. I feel it my duty to offer that resolution, that you may send some appropriation bills to the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Then, sir, I move to lay it upon the table, for the reasons I have given the House, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The question was then taken on Mr. JOHNSON's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

The question recurred upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STUART demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought that the gentlemen on the other side of the House wanted to fight out their fight, but I find that they are anxious to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, and I therefore withdraw the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I renew that motion.

Mr. STUART. I demand the yeas and days. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, demanded tellers; but they were not ordered.

The question was then put upon Mr. STEVENS's motion, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.)

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the first question under consideration was House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the Indian department, upon which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. MEACHAM concluded his remarks upon the subject of the tariff. [Mr. M.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. OUTLAW then addressed the House in regard to the proceedings of the Whig Congressional caucus, and in justification of the Southern gentlemen who had seceded from the caucus. He expressed himself in favor of the maintenance of the fugitive slave law as it is, and of MILLARD FILLMORE for the Presidency. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, next obtained the floor, but yielded to—

Mr. GENTRY, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. RICHARDSON) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 43, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1853," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report House bill No. 243, "to surrender to the State of Ohio the unfinished portion of the Cumberland road, in said State."

The SPEAKER. Is it a bill of which previous notice has been given?

Mr. STANTON. No, sir; it is a report from a committee.

Mr. TOOMBS. Does the gentleman propose to refer the bill?

Mr. STANTON. I will move to refer it, if there is any objection to its being put upon its passage.

Mr. TOOMBS. If the gentleman proposes to refer it, I do not object to its being reported, but if it is proposed to put it upon its passage, I shall object.

Mr. STANTON. I will move to refer it.

There being no objection, the bill was then received, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. STANTON. I move that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, be made the special order for to-morrow, and from day to day until disposed of, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MEADE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion. I have been waiting for two or three days to present certain resolutions from the State of Virginia. They are very short; and I desire that the House shall hear them read.

Mr. STEPHENS. There are several other gentlemen asking me to withdraw the motion; but I cannot do it.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative; and the House adjourned until to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. HUNTER gave notice that he would, on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to introduce a bill of the following title: "A bill to incorporate the Wesleyan College Institute, of Washington."

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. EASTMAN: Petition of 105 citizens of Wisconsin, for grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Chicago, in Illinois, to Janesville, in Wisconsin, and, branching at Janesville, to construct one branch by way of Lake Winnebago to Lake Superior, and one other branch by way of Madison to Falls of St. Croix, and that Allen's Grove, in Walworth county, may be named as a point in said line between Chicago and Janesville.

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE: The petition of William P. Vaughan, administrator of Edward Vaughan, deceased, asking compensation for a horse lost in the Mexican war.

By Mr. ST. MARTIN: The petition of Andrew Bodge, Jr., a citizen of Louisiana, praying for relief.

By Mr. DAWSON: The memorial of the Lieutenants of the Corps of Engineers, Topographical Engineers, and Ordnance, asking promotions more nearly approximating to that of the line of the Army.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 11, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

NEW SENATOR FROM GEORGIA.

Mr. DAWSON presented the credentials of the Hon. ROBERT M. CHARLTON, appointed a Senator by the Executive of the State of Georgia, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. John McPherson Berrien. The credentials were read, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. CHARLTON, he took his seat in the Senate.

POSTPONEMENT OF PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. HUNTER. As this is Friday, the day on which private bills are considered, I move that the rule setting apart this day for their consideration be suspended for an hour.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the Senate will not consent to the motion. It will be borne in mind that it is now six weeks since the Private Calendar has been taken up by the Senate; at all events, since any bill to which objection could be made has been taken up. If, even for an hour, we dispense with the order setting apart to-day for the consideration of private bills, it will have the same effect as similar motions have had heretofore—we shall not be able to reach a single case.

I think it is due to this class of our fellow-citizens having claims against the Government, that they should have some consideration under the rule adopted by the Senate; and that, in accordance with that rule, the Senate should at once take up their claims. There is no reason why the demands of private claimants against the Government should be postponed week after week, and be made to give way to every other business. There are claims here which have been urged since 1812; which have been pressed again and again, from that time to the present, and are delayed from day to day for the purpose of taking up matters of less importance.

I hope not a single moment will be given to the consideration of any other business than that which should come up under the rule, which directs that every Friday shall be set apart for the consideration of private claims. Whenever that rule has been dispensed with for an hour, hitherto, the whole day has been generally spent in the transaction of general business.

Mr. ATCHISON. If it be in order, I propose to amend the motion of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] by moving that the rule be suspended for the entire day. I desire very much that the Senate should go into Executive session. The PRESIDENT. The first motion must be put.

Mr. ATCHISON. I have this to say in response to what has fallen from the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT:] if we examine the Journals of the Senate, it will be found that we have passed more private bills during the present session, than during any previous session at a similar period. There is another proposition which I will lay down, and which the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] will, I think, assent to: that private business ought, and must, yield at all times to public considerations and to business; and I hold that the public business which will be considered in Executive session to-day, is of more importance than any private bill on the Calendar.

A SENATOR. It is of more importance than all of them.

Mr. ATCHISON. Yes, sir; it is of more importance than all of them together. If it be in order, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The PRESIDENT. That motion will not be in order; there is already a motion pending.

Mr. HUNTER. I will modify my motion so as to suspend the rule only till one o'clock. That will allow half an hour for the consideration of morning business. We shall get through in that time.

Mr. MANGUM. I rise for the purpose of inquiring what motion is pending; and will avail myself of the occasion, if permitted, to say that the question pending in Executive session is of vast importance; and that certain matters may be done to-day which cannot be done at a future period. I think, therefore, it is indispensably necessary to a proper action on the subjects there pending that we should go into Executive session now.

The PRESIDENT. That is not the question before the Senate.

Mr. GEYER. I wish to inquire, before giving my vote, whether this is what is called "objection day?"

The PRESIDENT. This is the day on which any bill that is objected to, or which gives rise to debate, must lie over.

Mr. BAYARD. I was under a different impression.

The PRESIDENT. This is the day.

Mr. HUNTER. The half hour will expire while we are considering this matter.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend; and a division being called for, there were—ayes 19, noes 15.

So the motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. STOCKTON presented the petition of Isaac Bigelow, a seaman on board the United States steamer Missouri at the time of her destruction by fire, praying remuneration for the loss of his clothing; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a petition of Isaac Bigelow, praying a pension on account of loss of health, incurred in the naval service during the late war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALKER presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying that the public lands may be granted, in limited quantities, to actual settlers not possessed of other lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of F. W. A. Cram and others, and two petitions of citizens of Wisconsin, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the homestead bill, may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of J. L. Fuller and others, and five petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the homestead bill, may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GEYER presented the petition of L. C. Easton, assistant quartermaster in the Army, praying that he may be credited with an amount of public money of which he was defrauded by his clerk; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RUSK presented a memorial of Samuel A. Belden and others, citizens of Texas, praying an increase of the military force on the frontiers of that State, for the protection of its citizens against Mexican and Indian incursions; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for the report of the Board on marine condensers; which was ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Louisiana, for the construction of a railroad from opposite New Orleans, thence to the Sabine river, reported back the same with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way and a donation of the public land, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Shreveport to the Mississippi river, in that State, reported the same with amendments.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred resolutions of the Common Council of the city of New Orleans, relating to a navy-yard and naval depot, presented the 17th of May, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Frederick Parsons, praying bounty land, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

NAVY PENSIONS.

Mr. HUNTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report back two appropriation bills, which were sent up from the House of Representatives and submitted to that committee. The first is "A bill making appropriations for the payment of navy pensions for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853." It is a bill which is strictly according to the estimate of the Department, and I ask that it may be acted upon now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides for the appropriation of the sum of $45,000 for the payment of navy pensions for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853.

There being no amendment proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate, and read a third time and passed.

INVALID AND OTHER PENSIONS.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance have also instructed me to report back "A bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853," with a slight verbal amendment. I ask that the bill may be considered at the present time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the appropriation of the followingsums for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853: For invalid pensions, the sum of $400,000; for widows and orphans, under various acts of Congress, $966,240.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment proposed is merely a verbal one, to rectify a mistake in reference to the date of one of the acts named in the bill.

The amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

BRAZILIAN CONVENTION.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and the Emperor of Brazil," of the 27th of January, in the year 1847, approved March 29th, 1850.

The bill was read a first and second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, in discharging the awards made by the commissioners under the act entitled "An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and the Emperor of Brazil," of the 27th of January, 1847, shall, in all cases to which the same shall apply, be governed by the provisions of the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to carry into effect certain stipulations of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico," of the 2d of February, 1848, approved March 3, 1849, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the said eighth section had been originally a part of said act.

Mr. MASON. The term of the convention will soon expire within which the bill referred to has to operate; and the object of the bill reported by the committee is merely to enact a law providing for the distribution of the money awarded under the eighth section of the act which is found in a similar provision in relation to the treaty with Mexico. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to be governed by the eighth section of the act which regulates the distribution of the awards. Unless this bill is passed within two weeks by both Houses, it will be inoperative. As it is important, therefore, that this bill should become a law, I ask that it may be read a third time to-day.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and was read a third time and passed.

CHANGING NAME OF STEAMBOAT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask leave to introduce a bill, in pursuance of notice which I gave yesterday. It is to change the name of the steamboat Brilliant.

Leave being given, the bill was introduced, and was read the first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask the Senate, as a favor, that they would permit this bill to pass to-day. This was an unfortunate boat, and the gentlemen who owned her have expended several thousands of dollars in repairing her. We all know how sailors feel in regard to a boat that has been unfortunate, especially while she remains under the old name. The object of this bill is merely to allow the owners to change the name.

The bill was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the owners of the steamboat Brilliant shall be authorized to change the name of said boat to that of Mary Hunt, and that they may make a new register at the port of Louisville, Kentucky.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for increasing the compensation of the Assistant Postmaster Generals, and to provide for their appointment hereafter by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

ISLAND OF SANTA CRUZ.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report to the Senate whether any portion of the public domain on the Island of Santa Cruz, in the State of California, has been leased by him to any person or persons, and if so, that he furnish, for the use of the Senate, a copy of the lease, together with any legal opinion that may have been given regarding the power to lease the public domain, and to state under what law of the United States such lease may have been made.

DUTIES ILLEGALLY EXACTED.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate the sums of money paid by him, or by his authority, to persons claiming the same under the act of August 8, 1846, as duties which had been illegally exacted, and whether such payments into the Treasury were made under protest.

THE GARDNER CLAIM.

Mr. SOULE submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State do communicate to the Senate whatever information he may have obtained in Mexico, and elsewhere, in relation to the Gardner claim, adjudicated upon by the Board of Commissioners organized under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

REMEDIES TO PATENTEES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Since yesterday I have had a conference with some of the gentlemen from the North, who are much interested in the bill giving further remedies to patentees; and I have also conferred with other friends who took an active part in the debate upon this bill when it was under consideration yesterday. We have agreed on all hands to certain amendments, which I am inclined to think will readily be assented to by the Senate. I think the bill will not give rise to debate, and I trust it may be taken up and passed, as there are yet a few minutes to one o'clock. I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up that bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are several slight amendments I now wish to offer. I move to strike out the word "and," in the sixth line of the first section, and insert in lieu thereof the words "knowing them to have been," so that it will read, "knowing them to have been manufactured," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That amendment having been adopted, there is now no objection to insert the word "use" between the words "traffic" and "or" in the fourth line of the same section; so that it will read, "for the purpose of traffic, use, or sale."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the tenth line of the same section the word "subsistence" ought to be "subsisting." This is a mere verbal inaccuracy.

The amendment was agreed to, and the first section, as thus amended, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if any person or corporation shall hereafter import or have in possession for the purpose of traffic, use, or sale, any articles imported into the United States from any foreign territory adjoining or near thereto, knowing them to have been manufactured, in whole or in part, in any such territory, by any process or machine, or by any substantial modification of any process or machine for which there may be at the time a subsisting patent, owned by any citizen of the United States, such person or corporation shall, upon due proof thereof, before any court of competent jurisdiction, be deemed to have infringed said patent, and be liable for all damages, in the same manner and to the same extent as in other cases of infringement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the second section, at the sixth line, I move to strike out the words "of the," between the words "any" and "articles."

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I further move to strike out of the same line the words "described in," and insert "imported, or purchased, in violation of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I further move to amend by striking out the word "or," between "sale" and "traffic," in the same line, and insert, after the word "traffic," the words "or use."

The amendment was agreed to, and the section, as thus amended, was read, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever a patentee, or any person holding under him, shall file a bill in equity, verified by oath or affirmation, in the circuit or district court of the United States, complaining that any person or corporation has imported, or has in possession, for sale, traffic, or use, any articles imported, or purchased, in violation of the preceding section, and shall make it appear, to the satisfaction of the judge, that the facts alleged are probably true, the said judge shall issue an order to the marshal, directing him to take said articles into his custody, and hold the same, subject to the final order of court; and may further, by injunction, restrain the sale of, and traffic in, said articles: Provided, however, That from all judgments and decrees of said courts, a writ of error or appeal shall lie in the same manner as is now provided by law in relation to other judgments or decrees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. These are all the amendments which we wish to offer.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this is the first step towards the establishment of a very dangerous precedent. If we provide for this particular invention, to prevent the introduction of articles manufactured abroad from being introduced into the United States, why shall we not make the same provision for the protection of the invention of every other patent machine? And if we make this provision in relation to Canada, that being a foreign country, why not make it in relation to all others? Where is the distinction in point of principle? Shall we not, in justice to other inventors, be forced to extend the principle when they make an application for it? And if we do, can we imagine a more fruitful source of litigation than it will open? I believe there is great danger that it will lead to retaliation on the part of other Governments; and I submit whether we shall not commit a greater injury by thus attempting to remedy this particular evil, than if we let the matter alone altogether? I understand there is a remedy for these inventors, that they might take out a patent in Canada itself; and it seems to me it would be far better to leave them to that remedy, than to begin to establish such a principle as this bill involves. I think the Senate should weigh this matter well before they establish this precedent; for they may rely upon it that, if it is established, others will come here and claim—and claim justly, too—that we shall legislate in their favor also; and I do not see how we can resist their application.

Mr. MILLER. As the morning hour is nearly passed, I wish to appeal to the Senator from Virginia to allow this bill to be engrossed, and then, if any gentleman wishes to discuss the matter further, he can do so when it comes up in the Senate.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator from Virginia will consent to that, there will be no objection, I presume.

Mr. HUNTER. If the consideration of the bill can be postponed, I have no objection. I do not want to delay the bill, but I would like to look into it a little further.

Mr. MILLER. I suppose there will be no objection. It will have to be engrossed; and I do not suppose there is any probability that it can be passed to-day.

Mr. SEWARD. I will say one word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] and shall postpone any further remarks until after the engrossing of the bill.

It seems to me necessary now to say, in reply to so much of the argument of the Senator as supposes that there is a remedy for this difficulty by going into Canada, and taking out a patent there, that the cases of injury which have brought this bill before the Senate, arise in respect of patents which have been already renewed and extended—very meritorious patents, about which there has been no contention. I speak particularly of a patent for turning irregular forms of wood, for which it is impossible to get a patent in England, and to which, therefore, the argument of the Senator from Virginia will not apply.

In regard to the question raised by that honorable Senator, that we are establishing a new principle, I submit, for his consideration, that there is really no such embarrassment in this case. In regard to the violation of patents, we have laws which enable us to protect the rights of inventors by arresting the fraudulent manufacturer of the patented articles. That is the remedy under our present system. We must reach the person of the infringer, and we must be able to reach his machine, and for that purpose he must be a resident of the United States. Therefore, without seizing on the production of the patented article, we can, in such cases, punish infringement, prevent piracy, and protect the rights of inventors. But, where a person resident in this country is in the possession of a patent, and another person, wishing to evade that patent, goes into the adjacent province of Canada, and there erects his machine, he is beyond our reach, and is subject to no law that we can enact. We cannot visit him with the punishments authorized by our laws; we cannot reach him, and seize his machine, and break it up, as we could do if he were a resident of the United States. There is no remedy, then, but to prevent the importation of articles manufactured abroad for the purpose of defeating the constitutional policy of the United States, which is the protection of manufacturers in their property.

I throw out these suggestions, without desiring to go into the debate now; and I will yield the floor for the purpose of allowing the motion of the Senator from Virginia to be put.

Mr. HUNTER. I would rather that the bill should not be engrossed now. I should prefer to examine the question more attentively.

Mr. BRADBURY. Unless a bill of this character shall be adopted, the Senate will perceive that the effect of the want of such protection will be to transfer the manufacture of all patented articles to the other side of the line—to Canada; because it is easy for individuals to carry their machines into the adjacent foreign territory, there manufacture the articles, and bring them into the United States, and thus evade the law.

I think that if the Senator from Virginia had been present yesterday, he would have perceived, from the discussion which then took place, the necessity for such a law as this. He will also perceive, that as it is limited in its operation to articles brought from an adjacent territory, it is not liable to any of the objections which he has urged.

Mr. BAYARD. As this bill stands amended, I have two objections to it. The first one may be remedied, being, perhaps, only verbal; but the second is an objection of principle. I think the words "adjacent or near to," are altogether too indefinite, and might, by construction, be made to include Europe, and certainly the West India Islands. If the object is, as I suppose it to be, to prevent the article being constructed or made in Canada, or the British possessions on the continent, and then brought into the United States, I would rather that different language were used. I think, as it stands, it is altogether too indefinite.

The other objection which I have, goes to the whole bill. If I understand rightly the principle of the patent laws of this country, or of England, they have confined themselves to this principle—that, though it may be right to protect the inventor in the enjoyment of the exclusive privilege which you give him, in consequence of his discovery, that protection has never proceeded upon any other principle than that of allowing him the right to call to account the person who was the vendor of the article infringing the patent. It has never gone to the extent of subjecting the consumer to the will of the patentee because the article infringing the patent may be found in his possession. I conceive that great evils must necessarily grow out of the adoption of such a principle. The liability to suit of any individual in the United States, who may have in his possession an article, as to the right to make which there is a controversy, is of itself a very great evil. No man will stand a suit in such case for the purpose of vindicating the right of another, and thus the patentee, by threatening those who may have these articles in their possession, is enabled, in case of a disputed patent, to enforce an unjust right against the community at large. I submit that the principle is a doubtful one as to its merits. No nation has ever acted upon the principle of giving to the patentee the right to enforce against the consumer, by legal remedies, at his option, his alleged claim under a patent; in other words, to give him the right to call upon a party who has no direct interest in the manufacture, or who does not trade in the article. Such a principle, I say, is dangerous. And although the words "knowing them to have been manufactured," may be inserted in the bill, the liability to suit would still attach to every individual who might have the article in his possession; and in that mode a patentee who ought not to be entitled to preference, might enforce his claim.

Mr. ATCHISON. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the motion was to suspend the rules for half an hour. I presume that now carries the bill back precisely to the point where it was taken up, and that no motion to dispose of it, now that the time has expired, is necessary.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that the hour of one o'clock having arrived, the bill must lie over.

Mr. ATCHISON. Then I move that the rule be suspended, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, that though the bill under consideration goes over, strictly speaking, when the hour of one o'clock arrives, yet he would prefer, for the sake of convenience in keeping the record upon the Journal, that some proposition to dispose of it should be made.

Mr. ATCHISON. Very well, then. I make the motion that it be postponed till to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. ATCHISON. I now renew my motion that the rule which sets apart Friday for the consideration of private bills, be suspended, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to call up a private bill, to which, I am sure, there can be no objection, and which will lead to no debate? If it produces any debate, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. ATCHISON. That bill cannot be considered now, even by unanimous consent, until the rules are suspended.

Mr. SEWARD. Oh, yes, it can. This is private bill day.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator from New York is aware that, under the rule, no private bill can be acted upon to-day to which anybody objects.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that that is not the case, and that private bills generally can be acted upon, whether they lead to objection or not.

Mr. PRATT. I certainly do hope that if the Senate refuse to suspend the rules, they will not go back to take up some particular bill out of its order, but that they will go on with the whole or none. I really think we should go on with the Private Calendar. It is due to those who have claims against the United States; and it is a crying evil that their claims have been so long neglected, and one of which our constituency have a right to complain. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Archison] says that private claims are to give place to the public business. Now, I apprehend that the business for which the Senator desires the postponement is very pressing, and of a public character exclusively, in his estimation; but I presume that if it were not for the private interests involved in it, we should not have it urged to the exclusion of the claims of the citizens. I do hope the Senate will abide by the rule which they have adopted, and will occupy this day in the consideration of private business. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

Mr. SEWARD. I believe I have the floor, and under the circumstances of the case I will withdraw my request, and I am prepared to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Missouri.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition is to suspend the rule which requires the consideration of private business on this day, to the exclusion of all other business, and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MANGUM. I would reiterate the remark which I made some time since, that if we pass over this day without considering those matters in Executive session to which I have referred, a very great loss will be sustained, because we cannot consider them hereafter. I hope we shall go into Executive session, if it be but for only five minutes; and that if the Senate are prepared to open the doors they can do so, and proceed to the consideration of private bills. But my impression is that the matter now pending in the Executive session is one that involves great public interests and necessarily includes private ones. I think it is indispensable that we should go into Executive session at least for a few minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish only to say that I have no objection to the motion made by the Senator from Missouri, if we can have an understanding that we will meet to-morrow and take up the business assigned for to-day.

Mr. WALKER. You cannot do it.

Mr. CASS. It seems to me to be a crying evil and an injustice, to neglect these private claims; and, before we agree to suspend the rule which requires us to consider them to-day, there should be a strong reason for it. I do not understand the Senator from Missouri that he expects to terminate this treaty to-day, or in the course of two weeks; or, at least, I suppose he does not expect to get a ratification in less than two weeks. I do think that, on every principle of justice, we should go into the consideration of private bills. There are claims which the Government owes to private individuals, as honestly as any in the world, and which are passed by from week to week. If we could get through with the treaty to-day, I would consent to the motion; but it is agreed on all hands that we cannot get through it in two weeks.

Mr. MANGUM. I will mention to the Senator from Michigan that it is desirable that a motion should be made in Executive session which cannot be made after to-day.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me to suggest, I will propose to him that we go on with private bills until near the usual hour of adjournment, and then go into Executive session long enough to allow that all-important motion to be made.

Mr. BELL. I will state, in relation to the matter mentioned by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM] that, though I am as much opposed to his object as any member of the Senate can be, what he wishes to propose in Executive session to-day is, in itself, a motion so fair and just in regard to any gentleman who thought that the public service was likely to suffer, that I do not think there would be the slightest difficulty in obtaining the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass such a motion. I am, however, opposed to entering upon any important Executive business to-day, and should prefer going on with the Private Calendar. For this reason, I inform the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM], and the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Archison], that, standing in opposition to their objects, as I expect to do, I do not consider an objection to that motion justifiable in any Senator, at any time, or whenever it is offered.

Mr. MANGUM. I was about to remark, when I yielded the floor, that I am well aware of the usual courtesy of the Senate, but I do not wish to rely on its unanimity; and gentlemen must remember that a single objection would prevent the motion from being entertained.

I know that it will be impossible to obtain the ratification of this treaty. It is not proposed to effect it. But I hope that the Senate will, nevertheless, pass the motion to postpone the private business, and that we will then go into Executive session.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senate will adopt the course suggested by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Archison], because we shall not only make no progress, but lose the advantage of everything we have done, if we chop in with private bills before finishing the business before us in Executive session. I owe it as a matter of courtesy to gentlemen who have made speeches on this subject in Executive session, to say—and I suppose, Mr. President, there is no harm in saying that Senators do make speeches in Executive session, although we may not tell what they are about—that those speeches are already growing very faint upon my mind; and they will grow fainter; and if we postpone the matter longer, I fear that I and other gentlemen will forget all that has been said, and it will all have to be gone over again. I hope that we will go into Executive session, that the Senate will pursue the course we usually have pursued, especially when a chairman of a committee has suggested that it is desirable he should have a matter acted upon. It is so in this instance, and I trust the Senate will have confidence enough in his judgment to sustain him.

Mr. ATCHISON. I made this motion because I believed it to be my duty. The Senate are in possession of all the facts, and can form their own opinion as to the necessity of action, and speedy action, as well as I can. I deemed it my duty to make the motion; and whatever shall be the decision of the Senate, of course I shall cheerfully acquiesce in it, whether it be to proceed to Executive or other business. But I do not know what proposition the Senator from North Carolina may make. There is a proposition now pending in Executive session, which I expect to urge; and I trust, if we go into Executive session now, we shall make some progress, whether we act definitely on these treaties or not.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall vote for the motion to suspend the rule in this case, because I understand there is public business to be transacted in Executive session of great importance. As to the Private Calendar, what will be the result if we take it up? The first question which will come up, is a motion to reconsider a vote by which a bill for the relief of the Carmelite Nunnery was rejected; a bill involving a question of some $45, and in regard to which the Senate has already expended a considerable portion of one day. Thus it is proposed to postpone business of a high order, for the purpose of taking up a case which, if we may judge of it by a former debate, will extend through the whole day.

The yeas and nays were then taken, and resulted—yeas 27, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Brooke, Clemens, Davis, Desaussure, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Felch, Foot, Geyer, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Mangum, Sebastian, Seward, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Stockton, Toucey, Underwood, and Wade—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bell, Bradbury, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Charlton, Chase, Dawson, James, King, Mallory, Mason, Miller, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Shields, Sumner, Upham, Walker, and Weller—23.

So the motion to suspend the rule was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened; and

The Senate adjourned to Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 11, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES], to lay on the table the motion made to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 271, granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands to the States of Alabama and Florida, for the construction of certain railroads in said States, was laid upon the table.

Mr. CARTER. There is a bill now lying upon the Speaker's table which came from the Senate yesterday. It is Senate bill No. 470, to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved July 4th, 1836; and also, "An act to provide additional examiners in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," approved May 27th, 1848. If the House are willing, I should like to take it up and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DIMMICK. I object.

FLORIDA AND ALABAMA RAILROADS.

Mr. VENABLE. I move a call of the House, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, the question being taken, resulted—yeas 67, nays 89.

So a call of the House was not ordered.

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. VENABLE. Will the Chair state to the House the precise condition of the question?

The SPEAKER. On yesterday the House laid upon the table the bill proposing to grant lands to the States of Alabama and Florida, for the construction of certain railroads. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] moved to reconsider that vote, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] moves to lay that motion on the table. The question, therefore, now is, "Shall the motion to reconsider lie upon the table?" and upon that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I respectfully ask the unanimous consent of the House for only five minutes, to make an explanation with regard to this bill.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I object to that, unless some other gentleman be also allowed five minutes to reply.

Mr. WALSH. Then I move that the gentleman from Connecticut be also allowed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The gentleman can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BEALE. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] five minutes, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CLEVELAND] five minutes also. It will only take ten minutes.

Mr. McNAIR. There are other gentlemen who wish to speak upon this bill too. I object.

The question was then taken; and the result was—yeas 88, nays 89; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Allison, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barre, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhaues, Bocoek, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Breckinridge, George H. Brown, Busby, Caskie, Chandler, Chastain, Churchwell, Cleveland, Colcock, Culom, Curtis, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Dinmick, Dunham, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fowler, Gamble, Giddings, Goodenow, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hascall, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, T. M. Howe, T. Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Newton, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Sutherland, Sweetser, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Wildrick—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Bell, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chapman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Disney, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Ewing, Ficklin, Freeman, Gentry, Gorman, Hall, Harper, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Howard, J. W. Howe, Hunter, Jackson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Phelps, Porter, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robinson, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Ab'm P. Stephens, Alexander H. Stephens, Stuart, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townsend, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—89.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid upon the table.

The question recurred on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will not the Speaker's vote change the result?

The SPEAKER. The vote of the Speaker would not change the result. His vote might make a tie; and the motion would then fail, as it now does.

Mr. ORR. I desire to inquire of the Speaker, if a motion to postpone the further consideration of this matter for two weeks is in order?

The SPEAKER. It could only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. ORR. Would it be in order to make that motion, if the motion to reconsider should prevail, and so bring the bill again before the House?

The SPEAKER. It will then be in order to move to postpone its further consideration to a day certain.

Mr. ORR. Then, if the motion to reconsider prevails, I propose to make that motion.

Mr. CABELL. As a friend of this bill, I shall, if the motion to reconsider prevail, vote for and desire its postponement for two weeks.

Mr. VENABLE. Is the question to reconsider debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The question is to reconsider a vote by which the bill was laid upon the table; and that motion is not debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CABELL. Do I understand that if the House decide to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table, it will then be in order to move to postpone to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt that the motion will then be in order. When the bill is before the House, it will then be competent for the House to postpone its consideration.

The yeas and nays were then ordered; and, being taken, the result was—yeas 101, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Bell, Bowne, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Ewing, Ficklin, Florence, Freeman, Gentry, Goodenow, Gorman, Hall, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Heun, Howard, Jno. W. Howe, Jackson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Pennington, Phelps, Porter, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robinson, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, Scurry, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Alexander H. Stephens, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Toombs, Townsend, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—101.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Allison, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Barre, Beale, Bennett, Bibbhaues, Bocoek, John H. Boyd, Breckinridge, Busby, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Cleveland, Colcock, Culom, Curtis, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Dinmick, Dunham, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fowler, Gamble, Giddings, Gilmore, Goodrich, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Andrew Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Geo. W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Martin, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, Meacham, Meade, Millson, Newton, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Sutherland, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Venable, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Wildrick—86.

So the House agreed to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table.

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. CABELL. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed till this day two weeks.

The SPEAKER. It will not be competent for the gentleman to make that motion until the motion to lay on the table is disposed of, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then I move to proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the consent of the House for only five minutes, to present the resolution which I hold in my hand from the Legislature of the State of Virginia.

Mr. ORR. It will not be in order to proceed to any other business until the House decide by a vote to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] asks the unanimous consent of the House to lay before it certain resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Virginia.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] to allow me to report back from the Committee on Ways and Means the deficiency bill, with the amendments of the Senate, in order that it may go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DEAN. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would inquire of the Chair if the pending motion upon the Florida railroad bill, provided the motion to lay on the table be voted down, is not to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. JONES. There is no motion to recommit the bill pending. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] made that motion, but afterwards withdrew it.

The SPEAKER. That gentleman has since renewed the motion.

Mr. DEAN. When?

The SPEAKER. Yesterday.

Mr. JONES. How could he do it after I had moved to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. He did it before he had resumed his seat. He first withdrew the motion to recommit, and offered a substitute; and then moved again to recommit.

Mr. JONES. Was the previous question withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. It was demanded, but the demand was afterwards withdrawn.

The question was then taken upon the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, and carried in the affirmative.

Mr. MEACHAM moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.)

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the first question under consideration was House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the Indian Department, upon which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, remarked that he had nothing to say which would be particularly interesting to the committee, after the exciting debate of the last two weeks; for he had no remarks to make in relation to the Presidency. Indeed, with them there was no occasion for it; for among all true Whigs there was perfect harmony and entire unanimity. Although he felt solely distressed at the unhappy difficulties and dissensions which had destroyed the Democratic party, [laughter,] yet it would be impertinent for him to interfere. Nor need he say anything in reference to that very select and highly respectable body of gentlemen who denominated themselves the "Union party;" for, although they started with elevated pretensions and considerable eclat, they met an early grave. Engendered in a whirlwind of their own creation, the Union party vanished with the elements which gave it birth; and although they had lately seen its ghost limping across this Hall, in the honored and agreeable shade of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] with certain uneasy attendants, yet its corpus was in the tomb; and, admonished by the charitable injunction, Ni mortuis nisi bonum, he desired to pass by this party with the profoundest silence.

He then touched upon questions relative to the various land bills which had been reported by, and the legions which were yet in, the hands of the Committee on the Public Lands, and incidentally discussed the protective tariff. He said that the bills from the Committee on Public Lands necessarily raised the question both of the right and policy of the General Government to dispose of the public lands. The right was expressly given by the Constitution, and therefore ought to be unquestioned; but the object to which they should be appropriated seemed to him necessarily to depend upon the nature of the title. The Government did not hold these lands by any unconditional fee simple, but simply as a trustee, to execute the terms of the grant for the benefit of all the States. When they distributed grants of land to one State, they were bound by the terms of the grant to grant an equal proportion to the other States, according to their representation in this body; and he would thank any gentleman who was claiming to give away these lands by the million to show him any authority in the Constitution of the United States for so doing. Mr. S. then argued this point at length, and in conclusion gave his views on the tariff, advocating protection to American industry. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. RANTOUL, after briefly alluding to the arguments of Messrs. MEACHAM, and STEVENS of Pennsylvania, in relation to the tariff, remarked that a great deal had been said denunciatory of agitators by gentlemen from the South. The cry was, Cease this agitation and quiet the Union. Now, if gentlemen desired to arrest agitation, why did they not cease it themselves? He and his friends had made no agitation. He had not opened his mouth in the House in any allusion to the subject of slavery, except in reply to a direct attack upon him, and again and again had he suffered such attacks, but he had allowed them to pass without notice. Still the cry of agitation came from another quarter, and was directed at him and those who entertained the same opinions as himself. After sitting quietly so long, he had at last been singled out in such manner that he could not, as a man of honor, remain silent any longer, without an imputation of cowardice, and he would deserve it if he should attempt to avoid the issue presented to him.

Having been sent to the Baltimore Convention by the largest district Democratic convention held for many years, regularly called according to the usages of the last twenty-five or thirty years, to represent five thousand Democrats, the Convention thought proper to disfranchise his district—the only Democratic one in Massachusetts—thereby insulting not merely his district, but the sovereign State of Massachusetts, which, by this proceeding, was shorn of its proportionate share of representation in the Convention. He would ask whether any one Democrat in the State of Massachusetts was under any obligation growing out of any proceeding of the Convention, in which the State was not represented, being shorn of the proportionate number of delegates elected by her own voice? This was a question for the Democratic party to consider, and for the Democrats of Massachusetts to consider. As for the district which had thus been disfranchised, he would like to compare its history with that of any other represented upon this floor; and he proceeded to mention the distinguished men who were natives of his district, and of their eminent deeds in the war of the Revolution. But why was he and his district insulted by the Baltimore Convention? Simply for saying, on being asked by the committee on credentials whether he would agree to the platform, that he would do his own thinking. If gentlemen supposed that there were not millions of white men in the North, who would do their own thinking, they were egregiously mistaken. He repeated, he was excluded as a delegate, because he desired to think for himself upon a grave question of constitutional law.

He then denied that the Constitution of the United States contained a grant of power to Congress to legislate for the rendition of fugitives from slavery, and thought that there was not a man in the Union, who could sustain his character as a Democrat upon the position that there was such a grant. He contended that this was a subject of State legislation, and entered into an argument to sustain his position.

[Mr. R.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. MARTIN concluded the speech, heretofore commenced, in opposition to the bills reported (twenty-one in number) giving lands to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads. In the course of his remarks he denied the right of Congress to grant those lands for local purposes, and the measures proposed as unjust to the older States.

[Mr. M.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. CABELL, of Florida, next obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. RICHARDSON) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 43, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1853," and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back the deficiency bill, with the amendments from the Senate, for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

No objection was made.

Mr. STUART. Does the gentleman from Alabama propose to have the amendments printed?

Mr. HOUSTON. They are all printed. If gentlemen will send up to the document room, they will find every amendment printed with great accuracy, and so that they can be understood in connection with the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It shows everything except the action of the Committee on Ways and Means upon the amendment.

Mr. STUART moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and

The House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 12, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion to lay upon the table House bill No. 271, granting lands to Florida and Alabama for the construction of certain railroads in the State of Florida.

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the Wesleyan Collegiate Institution, in Washington; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCORKLE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Clerk of the House to purchase, for the use of the members, ——— copies of the memoir and charts of the waters of the bay of San Francisco, and rivers Sacramento and San Joaquin, by Commander C. Ringgold, of the United States Navy.

Mr. McCORKLE said: In respect to the importance of the maps, it may be remarked, that they are based upon and carefully prepared from actual surveys, executed on the system of triangulation and hydrographical principles. Everything essential and necessary to the navigator, with a useful delineation of every shoal, rock, and obstruction to channels, clearly laid down and distinctly shown, in a manner conclusive to any seaman or man of science, or judgment, and presenting strong proof of the merit of the entire enterprise. The illustrations throughout the memoir are well executed, and add to the many facilities introduced for practical purposes. If, then, these are the only maps extant of so interesting a portion of the Union, covering an expanse of water, forming the resort of thousands of our finest ships, dispatched thither through the enterprise of our commercial citizens of the Atlantic coast, is it not just and proper to distribute, liberally, the information embraced in them?

Congress annually scatters thousands of copies of the report of the coast survey along the eastern coast; and it is only right that all information touching so valuable a part of our Confederacy as California, should be widely disseminated, in order to facilitate the development of her great resources. Independent of the value and importance of these maps to the Pacific coast, they are interesting to every Congressional district. Emigration to California, from all parts of the Union, is constantly increasing and going on; and, when the useful knowledge contained in the memoir and maps is considered, a wide distribution must prove highly beneficial and judicious.

The enterprise being a private one, is viewed by men versed in science or practical skill connected with hydrography, engraving, and lithography, extensive and creditable to the officer who executed the surveys, and comparable with, if not superior to, any ever prepared previously in our country.

From the elaborate and minute manner in which the Coast Survey has to proceed with its operations and charts, it must necessarily and unavoidably be a long time before any connected survey can be made and prepared of our extended coast on the Pacific. These maps, therefore, must, for all useful and practical purposes, be used and relied upon, until supplanted by others, prepared under the auspices of the Government.

The commerce of the Pacific imperatively demands that some facilities should be afforded by the General Government for its protection and safety. Without a light-house or buoy, we have over $20,000,000 in merchandise afloat in the Bay of San Francisco every month; and as little as this House can do for its protection at this time is to furnish navigators with these charts.

I hope, therefore, no gentleman will object to this resolution.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a report from the Committee on Public Buildings. It is an appropriation bill.

Mr. ORR. Will it come out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. That depends upon the order of the House.

Mr. STANTON. I do not desire that it shall be taken out of the morning hour. It will not take more than a minute. I merely wish to introduce the bill, and have it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is a bill making appropriations for the public buildings and grounds, and for other purposes.

Mr. FICKLIN. I object to the introduction of that bill. I have one which I have been waiting for an opportunity to introduce for the last two months.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I ask for the regular order of business.

FLORIDA RAILROAD BILL.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business, as stated by the Chair before, is the motion to lay upon the table House bill No. 271, granting lands to Florida and Alabama for the construction of certain railroads.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That motion was made by myself, I believe.

The SPEAKER. It was made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JONES. Have I the right to withdraw the motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw it.

Mr. JONES. I will then withdraw the motion, and move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask whether the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The previous question could not be ordered upon a motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. CABELL. But was it ordered upon the motion to commit?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] called the previous question, but afterwards withdrew the call.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I now desire to say a very few words upon the pending motion.

We have been here in session now six months and a half, and I may say that we have as yet done literally nothing. One of the great causes for this has been the course taken upon the bills which have been reported here for the benefit of railroads in the different new States. No committee, I believe, in this House has made a report under a call for reports, except that on Public Lands, for the last four months; and if we continue to go on as we have done, acting alone upon the bills reported by that committee, I ask, when we shall get through?

Mr. ORR. I call the gentleman to order for irrelevancy.

Mr. JONES. Is it not in order to show why this bill should be referred?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman was proceeding in order.

Mr. JONES. About two months ago the gentleman from South Carolina reported a bill nearly identical in its provisions with the one now before the House, designed to accomplish precisely the same objects. It was to grant the right of way and alternate sections of land to certain railroads in Alabama and Florida. That bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. But since that bill has been there, here is another one reported from the same committee, by the same gentleman, for the same purpose; and it is brought here and attempted to be forced upon us, and through this House, without giving it the usual, and, heretofore, almost universal direction of bills of the magnitude of alternate sections bills.

Now, sir, if we go on in that way we cannot get through the call of that committee for reports until the first Monday in December next, unless the House come to the conclusion to pass all the bills as they are reported from that committee.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman permit me to say one word? I am as anxious as the gentleman from Tennessee, or any one else, to get through with the call of that committee for reports, and if the House will devote the entire day to the call of that committee for reports we shall be able to get through; but if the House only devote the time they have been doing for two or three weeks past to that object, the business of that committee accumulates as fast as we can report it.

Mr. JONES. If you continue to report the same or duplicate bills as fast as the House refers them, it will continue to accumulate. If the House will refer these bills when they are reported, as is the usual course, and then call the other committees, we may get through with the call. But suppose when the committee is through the Committee on Claims takes the same course, and insist upon their bills being put upon their passage as fast as they report them, when shall we get through with it? An impression generally prevails among the friends of these bills, that if they are referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union they will there sleep the sleep of death. Why, sir, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union a bare majority may take any one of these bills up whenever they may think proper. Your rules require that in the committee the Calendar shall be called through, and the committee shall then determine by a vote whether they will proceed to the subject called. If they determine not to proceed to the consideration of that subject another is called, and so on until they come to some bill which the majority of the committee desire to act upon and dispose of. The only exception to this rule is in relation to the general appropriation bills, which may be taken up on motion without calling the Calendar regularly to get to them. But I will not discuss the merits of this bill, because I do not consider myself at this time prepared to do so.

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman will discuss it.

Mr. JONES. I will say this much: I consider every one of these railroad bills, as bounties given by the Government to corporations; whether directly or indirectly, it is that in effect, in my opinion. And, in the last four months, the greatest portion of the time of this Congress has been appropriated to them. Their interests and their demands must be attended to and must be acted upon, by the people's Representatives, to the exclusion of all the other public interests, or individual interests, which were before the Congress of the United States. Sir, when was it ever known that a measure, whether in the shape of banks or internal improvements by the General Government, or a protective tariff, or any other measure or system of legislation was not defended and advocated by its friends as for the sole and exclusive benefit of the people?

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow me for one moment? It has been repeated in this House that ever since these railroad bills have been under discussion, no person but the friends of the measure have had the opportunity of speaking, that the question has not been fairly contested. The gentleman from Tennessee now has possession of the floor, and is opposed to these railroad measures. Now, I ask him, since he has the floor, to let us have his objections to these bills, and let the world know that the opposition has at least one champion to defend them, for I regard him as the champion of the opposition of these railroad bills.

Mr. JONES. I shall take my own course about that. My friend from Alabama [Mr. COBB] has a bill here somewhere, and perhaps he wants to get that in through this same Land Committee. It is to grant the right of way from Winchester, in the State of Tennessee, through a portion of the State of Alabama, to Gunter's Landing, on the Tennessee river. Now, the United States has not owned any land in that part of the State of Tennessee since the year 1806. The Government has no title whatever to a foot of land there. And that part of the gentleman's own district, through which the road runs, has been settled for the last forty years, and all the land that will produce two hundred pounds of cotton, or two barrels of corn to the acre, has been taken up, and is owned by individuals. I think the gentleman will concur with me in the opinion, that all the public lands north of the Tennessee river, in the State of Alabama, is not worth $10,000. Yet you must have an act of Congress to grant the right of way and alternate sections of public land in and through a county in which the United States has not owned one acre of land worth ten cents for the last quarter of a century. I question whether the Winchester and Alabama Railroad will run through a solitary sixteenth part of a section of land belonging to the United States, from its beginning to its termination.

Mr. COBB. It will run through very little.

Mr. ORR. I call the gentleman to order. That road is not under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the bill under consideration.

Mr. JONES. There is another principle which I particularly object to in this bill; and one upon which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] dwelt at some length yesterday. It is a principle which the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. HALL] and every other gentleman from the new States, has all along adhered to, and which will be sacrificed by the success of those railroad bills. It is one which I have desired to see carried out, and I am prepared to vote as far as they will go, to graduate and reduce the price of the public lands. But now, these gentlemen come here and ask us to give to States, and to corporations through these States, every other section of land within certain distances from the road. If there is not enough within six miles, they travel out fifteen miles, and then come before the country and say the Government has lost nothing by giving away the land, for the price of the alternate sections remaining is to be raised to $2 50 per acre.

Mr. HALL. As the gentleman addresses his remarks to me, I will remark that, according to my understanding of the matter, the principle involved in these railroad bills is the same as that involved in the graduation bills. The latter propose to reduce the price of the public lands to what they are worth. We propose in these alternate section bills to increase the value of the lands and then increase their price. The great object of both is to settle the lands, and these alternate section bills will accomplish that object better than the graduation bill.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the gentleman, if the value of the alternate sections remaining will be increased to $2 50 per acre, why you do not put your railroad sections at that price? No, sir; it drives the Government out of the market until you can sell your land, and then you will come back here and ask for the reduction of the price of the Government land. Now, sir, I want those gentlemen who desire to pass these bills—and I will vote with them for that purpose—to strike out "$2 50," and let the lands be sold at $1 25 to settlers who may enter them, and thus pay the Government price for them.

Mr. PIHELPS, (interrupting.) I would ask the gentleman why, if he is in favor of selling these lands at $1 25 per acre, he should complain if we should hereafter come back and ask to have them reduced to that price?

Mr. JONES. I say, I am opposed to this price of $2 50 per acre being set upon these lands; because it is a deceptive—a fraudulent principle, whether it is designed to be so or not. In order to justify the measure before the country, that we are to lose nothing by giving away one half of the lands, we put the balance up to just double the price. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR], if that specious reasoning of his is good, that if we give away half, we are to lose nothing, because we double the price of the remaining half? Suppose we should give to those railroads three quarters of every section, and require the Government to sell the remaining one quarter at $5 an acre, we would derive as much money from these lands as we now do, or as we would, if we should give away one half of them, and put the other half up to $2 50 an acre.

But, as I stated before, I am not prepared or disposed, at this time, to investigate and debate this bill in all its principles.

A gentleman behind me asks me how I am upon the bill reported from the committee by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT]? That is another of these land bills; and it proposes to give to the old States and to the new States, a portion of the public lands.

A gentleman says that that bill was not reported from the committee. If the Committee on Public Lands did not report that bill, then, as I contended the other day, it is not before this House, and is not entitled to be heard here. That bill proposes to divide the public lands among the several States. I am opposed to it. The States want no lands except to make money out of them. But, sir, however much I have denounced, and do now oppose the system of the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, advocated by Mr. CLAY, and the Whig party, I infinitely prefer that the Government should go on with the sale and management of the public lands, and after defraying the expenses of the system, distribute the proceeds amongst the States, to the policy proposed in the bills reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FREEMAN, (interrupting.) I desire to say that I am a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and that the bill to which the gentleman refers, proposing to divide the lands among the States, was reported by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT], and that as a matter of courtesy to him, as he himself states, he was permitted by that committee simply to report the bill with a recommendation that it do not pass, for the purpose of enabling him to bring his views before the committee. I believe the committee were unanimous that the bill should be reported, with the exception of the gentleman from Alabama, on the committee.

Mr. JONES. Who is the gentleman?

Mr. COBB. I am the one who opposed the reporting of the bill, and who is referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. FREEMAN.]

Mr. JONES. If that bill came here by the courtesy of the Committee on Public Lands, every other member of this House has the same right to have his sense of courtesy and propriety consulted, whether he will let it in or not. I say again, that under the statement of the gentleman upon that committee, [Mr. FREEMAN], that bill is not before this House.

That bill proposes to give away some sixty millions of acres of public land. Another bill upon your table from the same committee proposes to give away some ten millions of acres for the benefit of the insane asylums of the different States. If these bills are to come up here, and be considered in the House, without going to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we shall not get through the reports of that Committee on Public Lands during the remainder of this session. In one of these bills, (I believe the one for the benefit of the insane asylums of the country,) it is provided, that if the States have no lands within their borders, they shall take their portion of them in the Territories. There is but one Territory at this time in which there is any land of any account open to selection. If you pass the bill of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT], and the one for the benefit of the insane, you will cover that Territory—the Territory of Minnesota—and perhaps leave not one foot of public land within her borders by the time she is admitted into the Union with which to aid the construction of railroads in that State.

The whole system, sir, of giving away these lands to railroads in this way is, in my opinion, wrong. If you will reduce the price of these lands, subject them to entry by actual settlers at the reduced price, and then make it for their interest to make these roads, the construction of which will enhance the value of their lands, as it is now stated it would, it will be for them to determine whether they will thus increase the value of the lands by the construction of the roads.

Mr. Speaker, another reason why I think this whole system is wrong, is, that it brings members into this House, upon this floor, who, to benefit their own sections and districts, get up their schemes here, and by favoritism and partiality—I will not say log-rolling—pass them through. Now, if the policy is to be tolerated and adopted of giving away these alternate sections, it should be done by one general bill.

Mr. FREEMAN, (interrupting.) Did I understand the gentleman to accuse the Committee on Public Lands of log-rolling?

Mr. JONES. I said I would not say it. I say, if this policy of giving away alternate sections of land is to be adopted; if the Committee on Public Lands had prepared a general bill, providing that when a State shall authorize the construction of a road within its limits, they should have the right of way and the use of the materials, upon the public lands, for the purpose of constructing that road, and that they should have these alternate sections,—I say if they had prepared and reported such a bill to this House, and referred it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, they would have got it up long before this; would have had it discussed upon its merits, its fate determined by this House; and, if passed here, would have long ago passed to the Senate. Thus the object of the whole system which is proposed by the passage of separate and individual bills, would have been accomplished by the passage of the one bill. I will conclude by calling the previous question, and moving to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. SWEETSER. I hope the gentleman will not call the previous question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish the gentleman would withdraw the motion for one moment.

Mr. TOOMBS. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay on the table. I think it is a great outrage.

Mr. HOUSTON. If this is an outrage, the outrage is upon the other side of the House. Upon every bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands, they have universally made speeches in favor of them, and then called the previous question.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I would inquire of the Chair whether it is in order to move to postpone the consideration of this bill to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order so long as a motion to lay the bill upon the table is pending. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] has demanded the previous question, and then submitted a motion that the bill, with the proposed amendments, do lie upon the table, neither of which propositions are debatable, and until both are disposed of no motion to amend or postpone to a day certain can be entertained.

Mr. CABELL. Did not I understand the gentleman to withdraw his motion to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. He renewed it before he took his seat.

Mr. CABELL. I have only to say I hope the House will vote down the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. These two motions cannot be made at the same time—that is, the call for the previous question and the motion to lay the whole subject upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman. The practice has been universal in this House to allow double motions of that kind, or rather, a gentleman can make two motions before he takes his seat.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I did not hear the question. It may be the same one I am about to propound. I ask the Chair, if it is in order for a gentleman to move to commit a bill to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union and also a motion to lay the bill upon the table, at the same time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] had a right to make both his motions. When he first took the floor he withdrew his motion to lay upon the table, and submitted the motion that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. At the close of his remarks, he demanded the previous question, and afterwards moved to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I have never known of anything of the sort practiced in the House. I will not appeal myself, but it is a new practice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must think the gentleman is totally mistaken as to what the practice of the House has been. Nothing is more common than for a gentleman to introduce a resolution, and demand the previous question upon it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not think the Chair understood my question. I did not object to the gentleman's motion for the previous question. But he cannot move to commit a bill, and move to lay it upon the table at the same time. My point is, that he cannot make two distinct motions which are not connected together in any way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman of the fact, that it is the everyday's practice here to move to reconsider a vote, and to move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. They are two distinct motions. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] demanded the previous question, and afterwards moved to lay the bill, with the proposed amendments, upon the table. The Chair thinks it in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The case referred to by the Chair—the motion to recommit, and the motion to lay that motion upon the table—is the only one where two motions can be made, and it grew up into a practice in the last Congress, and in the Congress before the last. But I will ask the Chair, if he remembers any one case where a gentleman has moved to commit a bill, and at the same time moved to lay it upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect of a case at this moment, but he does not doubt, that under the practice of the House, it is in order.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to make a single suggestion in relation to this bill.

Mr. KING, of New York. I rise to a point of order. If there is no appeal, debate is not in order.

Mr. STANTON. I simply desire to make one suggestion, and that is this; that when the gentleman calls for the previous question, it is to call for a vote upon the main question, and calling for the previous question, and immediately making a motion to lay the whole subject upon the table, are two motions utterly inconsistent and repugnant. It is not like the motion to reconsider, and the motion to lay that motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has been the constant practice of this House to allow gentlemen to make double motions, embracing the same principle as the one now under consideration. The Chair has no doubt of the correctness of his decision, under the practice of this body.

Mr. CABELL. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. The gentleman from Tennessee has made a motion and called for the previous question. I wish the Chair would state to the House whether the previous question is called upon the motion to commit, or upon the motion to lay upon the table. Will the Chair state the question to the House, for I confess I do not understand it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state that, upon taking the floor, the gentleman from Tennessee withdrew his motion to lay the bill upon the table, and moved to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Before he took his seat, he demanded the previous question upon that motion, and again submitted the motion that the bill and the proposed amendments do lie upon the table.

The question recurred upon the motion to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. HENN. Has the call for the previous question been yet sustained?

The SPEAKER. It has not. That question does not come up until the privileged motion to lay upon the table is disposed of.

The question was then put upon the motion to lay upon the table the bill and amendments; and it was not agreed to—yeas 79, nays 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Allison, John Appleton, Averett, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bigbaw, Breckinridge, Busby, Carter, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Cleveland, Colcock, Cullom, Curtis, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Dimmick, Fowler, Gamble, Giddings, Gilmore, Grey, Hamilton, Isham G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Lotcher, Martin, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McNair, Meacham, Meade, Millson, Morrison, Murphy, Newton, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Powell, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Sutherland, Sweetser, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Willard—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, William Appleton, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, George T. Davis, John G. Stephens, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townsend, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—100.

So the bill was not laid upon the table.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. Is it not in order for me now to submit a motion for the postponement of the further consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The demand for the previous question is still pending, and during its pendency the gentleman's motion is not in order.

Mr. ORR. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his call for the previous question. If it is withdrawn, I will then submit the motion intimated by the gentleman from Florida, which is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone is not debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. They say around me they can pass it. Let us take the question upon seconding the call for the previous question. If that is voted down, the gentleman can then submit his motion.

The question was then put, and the call for the previous question was not sustained.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Friday week—that is, two weeks from yesterday.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is it in order to amend that motion by postponing the subject two or three weeks longer?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. JONES. Let us try and get through with some of the other bills. I move that the postponement of the subject be until the second Friday in July.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the motion as amended, and, being put, it was agreed to.

GRANTS FOR EDUCATION AND RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the consideration of the bill, reported from the Committee on Public Lands by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] making grants of land to the several States for the construction of railroads and for other purposes.

Mr. WELCH. Will the gentleman from New York grant me a short time to submit a few remarks?

Mr. BENNETT. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. WELCH then addressed the House at length relative to the disposition of the public lands. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BENNETT. I desired, Mr. Speaker, to delay action upon this bill, long enough to allow every member to read it and judge for himself of its merits, and of the various provisions it contains. And, when I reported it three or four days ago, I spoke until the morning hour had expired, more for that purpose than any other, that gentlemen might have an opportunity of examining the bill, which was printed and laid upon the desks of members, in order to enable them to vote upon it understandingly, and to determine whether they would or would not support it. I did not then wish, nor do I now, to occupy any of the time of the House, but as there are only a few moments left, before the expiration of the morning hour, and, as it is perfectly clear, a vote cannot be had upon the measure this morning, the House must pardon me for again addressing it and speaking against time, as my hour has not yet expired.

A motion is still pending to recommit the bill, and on Monday, I hope we may be enabled to get a vote upon it. I will say a word or two by way of answer, to what has been stated this morning, with regard to the granting of lands, to aid in the construction of railroads, by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES:] I am one of those from the old States, who believe that the granting of a small portion of the public domain, for the construction of railroads, if properly made, and with the proper restrictions, is one of the best purposes to which they can be applied; what I have contended for here is, that grants for schools and roads should be made with some degree of fairness to all the States—the old as well as the new. The public domain is the common property, and so far as the West are concerned, they have been liberally dealt by. They have already received some fifty-five millions of acres of the public land, of which eleven or twelve millions of acres have been devoted to internal improvements and railroads. All that is proposed in the bill I have alluded to, is to give to the old States, not the same amount in proportion to representation, but only one half of the amount in proportion to population, which is granted by this bill to the land States, irrespective of the fifty-five millions of acres heretofore granted to them. I think that is liberal, and that this bill is just and fair, and ought to pass.

To gentlemen from the West desiring the construction of these roads, we come up to their aid, and say, if you will adopt a principle by which a small portion of the proceeds of the public lands may be applied to school purposes in the old States, we will give you land for the construction of your roads in the Western States. I think this is a fair compromise, and one which the friends of grants to railroads, and the friends of the old States could unite upon. If they unite, the bill could be carried, and if they do not, the bill will fail. I have no doubt, also, when separate grants are asked for aid in the construction of particular roads, they will also fail. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] seems to insist that the whole of this system is wrong. If that were an open question, I would say, let it be considered; but I hold it to be a question that has been settled. You have already been granting lands to certain States for these particular purposes. You have granted to every one of the land States the sixteenth section for schools. Who objects? Who says that is unconstitutional? Not a man. You have granted to Illinois, Missouri, and other Western States, land for roads, and who says it is unconstitutional? If there were such objectors when those bills were up and considered, Congress settled the question that grants could be made, and they were made. Now, the States of Illinois and Missouri have received these very grants. We can now see how liberal the members from Illinois and Missouri will be in making several grants to the other States—West as well as East—the old as well as the new States. We will see whether they are willing to grant for educational purposes—not a greater amount in proportion to population, but only half that amount, or less than half that amount, to the old States.

In regard to this appropriation to the older States, one reason for it is, many of them are largely indebted, and resort to direct taxation to support their schools. If a small portion of the proceeds of these lands were to be applied for the benefit of free schools in all the States—which every one admits to be constitutional—it would be the best disposition that could be made of it. What objection could the Western States have to such a measure? What odds does it make, whether the old States sell a portion of the lands or the General Government? By this bill we do not propose that the older States shall own a rod of land in the new States. It is prohibited; the States have no right to locate any of the land—the warrants are to be sold, and will be located by actual settlers—

[Here the gentleman was reminded that the morning hour had expired, and he accordingly gave way.]

Mr. DANIEL. There are upon the Speaker's table some private bills, which were reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that they do pass, two or three weeks ago, which, I trust, will be taken up for consideration this morning.

Mr. HALL. The gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. Speaker, is one of those who have been complaining a great deal on account of the time consumed by the Committee on Public Lands. I would now appeal to him to let this day be devoted to the reception of reports from that committee. They then will be enabled to get through with their business, and next Monday we will be enabled to go on with the other committees.

Mr. DANIEL. The kind of business, to the consideration of which I ask the attention of the House, cannot be considered on any other day than Saturday or Friday.

Mr. HALL. I hope that the Committee on Public Lands will not be complained of any more.

Mr. DANIEL. The private bills I have alluded to are upon the Speaker's table, and have been there ever since they were reported from a Committee of the Whole House, undisposed of. With a view of getting at them, I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The question was put upon the motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DANIEL. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion. I wish to know whether we are ever to dispose of these private bills now on the Speaker's table, or not?

Mr. STUART. I submit the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar. If that motion fails, it being the first business in order, and the House shall determine to make this a day of public business, I shall then submit a privileged question, upon which I shall desire to address the House.

Mr. DANIEL. I prefer we should transact the private business upon the Speaker's table, before going into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar—this being private bill day—will be first put.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. There is a bill on the Speaker's table, which came from the Senate on yesterday, involving an individual matter in which a constituent of mine is alone interested. I should like very much that the House would indulge me in passing it. It is merely to change the name of a steamboat. I trust no one will object.

Unanimous consent was accorded, and the bill was taken up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill under consideration is Senate bill No. 452, entitled "A bill to change the name of the steamboat Brilliant, to that of Mary Hunt."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, ordered to a third reading, and, having been read a third time, was passed.

The question was then put upon Mr. STUART's motion, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar; and it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of private bills upon the Speaker's table. A motion is made by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STUART. I submit a privileged question. I move to call up the question which I moved some six months ago—to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 121 was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist that the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is a privileged question, and takes precedence of this other one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that, as both motions are of a privileged character, the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union being first made, should be first put.

Mr. DANIEL. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, and it was agreed to.

So the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is House bill No. 43, making appropriations for the Indian Department. Upon that question the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the consent of the gentleman, I will suggest—

Mr. CABELL. Not if it comes out of my time.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the consent of the gentleman from Florida, and the committee, I would like to have the deficiency bill No. 207 taken up this morning. The gentleman can occupy the floor just as well upon this bill, and no one will object to it.

Mr. CABELL. I do not know as I can get the floor on that bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Nobody will object.

Mr. STANLY. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no doubt that general debate will take place on anything that may come up, and a certain portion of time will have to be given up to such debate. I desire to take up the deficiency bill, and get through with it, but if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] does not want it to pass, I have no more to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] that there is objection made to it, and the only means by which it can be disposed of, is by a vote of the committee.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I ask if the gentleman from Alabama can take the floor from the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] to make this motion?

The CHAIRMAN. By his consent.

Mr. CABELL. I did not give my consent. I prefer to proceed, and the motion can be made afterwards.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am perfectly willing to yield, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] has objected to taking up the deficiency bill.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida, addressed the committee an hour in regard to the silent position of General Scott upon the compromise measures, and declared his determination not to support any man for the Presidency who did not explicitly avow his opinions in favor of those measures. He did not believe that General Scott, if he adhered to his present position, could carry a solitary Southern State in the coming contest for the Presidency. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. STUART here obtained the floor, and said:

Mr. Chairman, before I proceed, I wish to say to the gentlemen of the committee, and to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] that I wished this morning to call up a motion to reconsider, and upon that motion I desired to address the House upon the subject of harbor improvements. The committee, I think, will do me the justice to say that I have not designed, or manifested a disposition to talk for talk's sake. This is a great subject which concerns a portion of the country I represent, and if I can at a future period, say on Monday, have the privilege of calling up the motion, by the general consent of the House, and of making the remarks I designed to make, I will now cheerfully yield the floor to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY.]

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!" from all parts of the Hall.]

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I rise to state to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] and to the committee, that this committee cannot give any such agreement.

Mr. STUART. I am aware of that. It is only by a conventional understanding that it can be done.

Mr. STEPHENS. I give the gentleman notice, that I do not enter into that conventional understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] is entitled to the floor, and if he yields it, the Chair will assign the floor to the gentleman who attained it first after him.

Mr. STUART. I suppose I have the right to yield the floor to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to yield the floor for explanation.

Mr. STUART. I yield the floor to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] for explanation.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise not to a question of order, but to make the motion that this bill be laid aside, and that bill No. 270 be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has the floor, the gentleman from Michigan having yielded it to him for personal explanation.

Mr. STANLY followed in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] and in defense of General Scott. He repudiated all platforms in regard to the compromise, or any other measures, but at the same time coincided in determination with the gentleman from Florida not to support any man who should refuse to give to the American people his opinions in regard to the vital questions embraced in the measures of compromise. He had more confidence in the word and character of General Scott than all the platforms that could be constructed to suit the occasion. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

THE COMPROMISE MEASURES—RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER obtained the floor, and addressed the committee at length on the compromise measures, railroad grants, &c. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BOWNE then addressed the committee on the Presidency, &c. [His speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. GENTRY obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. FOWLER, who moved that the committee rise.

The question was put, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. RICHARDSON) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No 43, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1853," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to have an order made to print the report of the Committee on Ways and Means on the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill. I hoped that we should have taken it up to-day, and that is the reason I did not ask for the printing of what we had done.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, that order will be entered.

On motion by Mr. FOWLER, the House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. SMART: The petition of Nathaniel Patterson and others, citizens of Waldo county, Maine, asking for bounty land for soldiers, who served at the siege of Bigwade, in the Penobscot bay in said State, during the revolutionary war, and also asking bounty land for the heirs of said soldiers.

By Mr. CHASTAIN: The petition of the inferior court and sundry citizens of Cobb county, praying Congress to appropriate a sum of money to assist in the erection of a new court-house at Marietta, in said county.

By Mr. SCUDDER: The petition of Francis Bacon and 28 other presidents and officers of insurance companies in Massachusetts, asking for huys to be placed on the "Lone Rock," near Hyannis harbor, and on a sunken wreck in the channel, near Seconnesset Shoals.

Also, the petition of Obed Baxter and 73 other ship-masters, for the same.

Also, the petition of Joseph Eldridge and 26 other ship-masters, for the same.

By Mr. PORTER: The petition of William J. McElhenny, Lawrence Kribben, and E. P. Matthews, of St. Charles county, Missouri, for permission to enter two certain small pieces of land in their possession, fractionized by the commons of the town of St. Charles, and which have been reserved from sale up to this time.

By Mr. CASKIE: The petition of Francis B. Crump, sole heir and legal representative of Benjamin Crump, deceased, praying for relief on account of the services of the said Benjamin Crump, during the revolutionary war.

By Mr. RANTOUL: Resolutions of the State of Massachusetts, concerning claim of said State against the United States.

By Mr. CHANDLER: The memorial of the Rev. F. M. Bogen, asking Congress to assist him with means to circulate among German immigrants in this country, two books which he has prepared for their benefit.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 14, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion to recommit House bill No. 208, making grants of land to all the States in the Union for railroad and educational purposes, upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] to suspend one moment to enable me to make a personal explanation.

Mr. BENNETT did not respond.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table House bill granting the right of preemption to actual settlers along the line of the Illinois Central Railroad. Having delayed action upon this measure in some respect myself, I will say to the House that I have examined this bill thoroughly, and I am satisfied that, in justice to those building it, it ought to be passed immediately. The sale of these lands takes place next month, and if the House wish to do an act of justice to the settlers along the line of that road, a general law should be passed, and passed immediately. I ask, therefore, the unanimous consent of the House to take the bill from the Speaker's table and pass it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion to recommit House bill No. 208, already stated by the Chair to be the first business in order.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House merely to offer certain resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, with a view of having them referred.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. Is it not a privileged question for a member to make a personal explanation?

The SPEAKER. It depends upon the nature of the explanation.

Mr. MOORE. I ask the unanimous consent, then, of the House to do so. I do not often trouble the House.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the Chair, if it would not be in order to suspend the rules upon the motion I made?

The SPEAKER. It will not be until the special order of the morning hour is executed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I withdraw the call for the order of the day.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE] asks the unanimous consent of the House to allow him to make a personal explanation.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this be taken out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will unless it is the special understanding of the House that it shall not be.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. On Saturday, in the course of a speech made by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], he adverted to certain meetings held in this city by those who retired from that celebrated caucus of the Whig members of Congress lately held. At the same time he alluded to an attempt made to get up a third party; and these allusions were so connected together as to convey the impression to the minds of some that they were one and the same. It is my duty, as an honorable man, and as a Whig, to state, as I do, here most emphatically, that a few of the friends of Mr. Fillmore, from the North and from the South, and some from the West, a short time previous to that caucus had occasionally assembled in this city. I had the honor of being the chairman of these meetings, and I ought to know everything that transpired there. The object of those meetings, as I understood it, was to consult about the best fair and honorable means of promoting the nomination of Mr. Fillmore as the Whig candidate for President of the United States. Another object of those meetings was, as I understood it, to harmonize the Whig party, and establish such principles, or a platform, as the modern term has it, as we could all unite upon, North and South, East and West, and one which we could all support. If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] intended to mean that those meetings were got up for the purpose of creating a third party, I think it my duty to put upon it the seal of my contradiction, as I do most unhesitatingly. There was no such purpose, as I understood it. Again, in connection with his speech, he mentioned another subject, which I will barely notice. He stated that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, my namesake, [Mr. MOORE], made a proposition in that caucus, if we would remain there until the time and place of the National Convention was fixed, he would then either bring forward or support these compromise resolutions. I will not say anything disrespectful of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MOORE], or the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], but I wish merely to state, in connection with that fact, that I have not the least doubt in the world that such a proposition was made, as both the gentlemen assert it, and I am bound to believe them.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I do not see the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] in his seat, and, therefore, with the gentleman's consent, I will make a brief explanation. I think the gentleman from Louisiana is mistaken as to the position assumed by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY]. He stated, if my recollection is right, that the gentleman to whom he alluded, one of whom was myself, had said they were ready and willing to vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL], as a separate proposition. I responded to what the gentleman from North Carolina said on Saturday, by stating to the House, that as soon as the vote on the decision of the Chair, declaring Mr. MARSHALL's resolution to be out of order, was announced, I did say to the meeting, that I was then ready to vote upon the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL], as a separate proposition.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. I wish merely to say, if any such proposition was made, it was not made while I was present, or at least I did not hear it. I heard of it for the first time on Saturday. If I had been present and heard the proposal of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MOORE], I should have acceded to it most cheerfully. I will admit, that I retired early from that caucus. I was disgusted with the arbitrary, partial, and, as I thought, improper manner in which the chairman decided those questions to be out of order. This is all I have to say.

Mr. MEADE. I will ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT], to allow me to offer some resolutions of the Virginia Legislature, in connection with the service of some of the soldiers of the war of 1812. I ask the gentleman's permission to let the short resolution be read, that it may be referred to the Military Committee.

Mr. BENNETT. If it will not come out of the morning hour, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. It will come out of the morning hour.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] declines to yield the floor.

GRANTS FOR EDUCATION AND RAILROADS.

Mr. BENNETT. My object is not to make a speech upon this bill. I do not desire to say a word more upon it. When this bill happened to be called, it was too late to think of getting a vote upon it. I ask gentlemen upon all sides to allow a vote to be taken upon it, and for that purpose I withdraw the motion I made to recommit. Let the bill be engrossed, and ordered to a third reading. I however renew the motion to recommit, and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. DOTY. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw the demand for the previous question to enable me to offer an amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. I withdraw it.

Mr. DOTY. I now offer the following amendment to the bill:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That of the lands hereby granted to the eleven first-named States, a portion of the proceeds thereof shall be applied by the said States, respectively, in the manner directed in the preceding section, to aid in the construction of the following lines or routes of railroads, namely:

From Toledo, Ohio, via Logansport, Lafayette, and Peoria, to Burlington; from Cincinnati, Ohio, via Vincennes, to St. Louis, with a branch from a point in Illinois, via Mount Carmel, to New Albany; from such point on the Mississippi river, within the limits of Arkansas, as that State shall appoint, via Little Rock, to Fort Smith, Arkansas, with a branch from Little Rock to Fulton, on the Red river, and a branch from Little Rock to Cairo, at the mouth of the Ohio river; from Terre Haute, in Indiana, via Springfield, to Bloomington, in Illinois; from New Orleans, by the way of Jackson and Canton, in Mississippi, thence to connect, by the nearest and best route, with the proposed Nashville and New Orleans railroad, and from Canton, by the way of Holly Springs, to the line of the State of Tennessee; from Girard, in Alabama, to the waters of the Mobile Bay; from Brandon, in Mississippi, to Montgomery, in Alabama; from the river or Lake St. Clair, or the waters flowing into the same, to Lake Michigan; from the southern boundary of Wisconsin, through Janesville and Fond du Lac, to Lake Superior; from Selma, in Alabama, to Gunter's Landing, on the Tennessee river; from the Atlantic ocean, in Florida, to the Gulf of Mexico, in said State; from Davenport and Burlington, in Iowa, to the Missouri river; and from Dubuque, in Iowa, to the Missouri river; from Manitowoc, in Wisconsin, to the Mississippi river; from San Francisco, to San José; from the Saginaw river to Mackinaw, in the State of Michigan; from Mobile Bay, in Florida, and to the Chatahochee river and Flint river, in Georgia; from a point opposite New Orleans, to the Sabine river, in Louisiana, from Shreveport to the Mississippi river.

Said railroads to be constructed on the most direct and feasible routes, between the points before-mentioned. And the proceeds of the residue of the land herein granted to the said eleven first-named States, respectively, to be applied by them to aid in the construction of such other railroads as the Legislatures of said States may respectively designate: Provided, No more land shall be taken by any State under this act in the whole, than is granted to said State by the first section thereof.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to a question of order. I make two points of order on that amendment: first, that it is not germane to the bill, which grants lands to the States, whereas the amendment proposes to grant lands to railroads; and second, that the provisions of the amendment are embraced in separate bills, which are pending before the House.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair recollects aright, the original bill proposes to distribute land among the States for internal improvement purposes. If that be the case, the Chair does not see that the amendment is not germane. With regard to the second point raised by the gentleman, that the provisions of the amendment are embraced in separate bills before the House, the Chair would state that, unless an amendment is in the identical shape of a bill before the House, it has always been the practice to receive it. The Chair therefore overrules the points of order raised by the gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I trust the gentleman from New York will allow me to propound a question to him. I desire to know of him what member from Alabama has been consulted in regard to the disposition of the land that he proposes to give to that State?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. During a demand for the previous question, discussion is not in order. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. BENNETT. I do not.

The SPEAKER. Then discussion is not in order.

Mr. MEADE. I wish to know whether it is in order to move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question is demanded. Debate is therefore out of order; amendments are out of order; and it is not in order to move to commit the bill.

Mr. MEADE. I move, then, that the bill and amendment be laid upon the table.

Mr. FICKLIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MEADE. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I renew it.

Mr. GORMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 85, nays 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Boeock, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, Brut, Busby, Caskey, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Colcock, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dunham, Eastman, Edmundson, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Freeman, Gaylord, Giddings, Gorman, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Hubbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Houston, Howard, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, Preston King, Letcher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McNair, Meade, Murphy, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Peaslee, Penn, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Scurry, Skelton, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Townsend, Venable, Wallace, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Wildrick—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Barrere, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bibbhauss, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Brooks, George H. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Cartier, Chandler, Chapman, Cleveland, Clingman, Cullom, Curtis, Dean, Dimmick, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Edgerton, Evans, Ewing, Fowler, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grey, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Horsford, John W. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Walbridge, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Williams—93.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The previous question was then seconded. The question then being, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Mr. MEADE demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. MEADE and WATKINS were appointed.

The question was then put, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 72.

So the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. COBB. Will the Chair state what is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question is first upon recommitting the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. If that should fail, the question will then be upon the adoption of the amendment proposed, and then be upon the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to recommit.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] withdraw the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. He did, but he renewed it again.

Mr. JONES. I thought he withdrew it this morning.

The SPEAKER. He did withdraw it this morning, but he immediately renewed it.

Mr. DOTY. I understood the amendment to have been accepted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT].

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it. Besides the bill before the House was a report from a committee, and the gentleman had no right to accept any amendment to it.

Mr. BENNETT. Have I now the right to withdraw the motion to recommit?

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman cannot withdraw the motion after the main question has been ordered.

Mr. BENNETT. I intended to withdraw the motion to commit.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 78, nays 109; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, John Appleton, Ashe, Bragg, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, Busby, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Colcock, Conger, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Faulkner, Fitch, Freeman, Gaylord, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Thompson, Wallace, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Yates—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Averett, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bibbhauss, Boeock, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Burrows, Burt, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Cartier, Caskey, Chandler, Chapman, Cleveland, Clingman, Cullom, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dimmick, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Ficklin, Fowler, Gamble, Gentry, Giddings, Gilmore, Goodenow, Goodrich, Grey, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Mace, Martin, Meachan, Meade, Miller, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Morrison, Newton, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Porter, Powell, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Smart, Smith, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stephens, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townsend, Venable, Walbridge, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Williams—109.

So the House refused to recommit the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Virginia. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

WHEELING BRIDGE.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a matter of courtesy to the House. The relations which I at present hold to the House are soon to close. I have been called by my people to another sphere, and the close of this month will dissolve the connection between this House and myself.

During the short time I have had the honor of being a member of this House, I have not trespassed upon your patience, nor asked any indulgence in respect to time.

So far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker, I have violated no courtesy, nor have I asked any of the courtesies of this House to be extended to me. Now, as there is a question of vast importance in which my immediate constituents are very deeply involved, matured in one of your committees, I ask as a matter of courtesy to myself, of justice to the people which I represent upon this floor, as well as to settle a great national question, involving national principles, that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be permitted to make a report in relation to the Wheeling bridge, and when that report is made, that it be the special order for next Monday.

[Cries of "Agreed!"]

Mr. McLANAHAN. I object.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to make that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman cannot make that motion. We are now acting under a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. JONES. The rules of the House require a motion to go into the business on the Speaker's table at the expiration of the morning hour, in order to arrest the business then before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this being Monday, it is in order to move to suspend the rules under an express rule of the House.

Mr. JONES. How do you get clear of the question now before the House, the main question having been ordered to be now put?

The SPEAKER. It falls. The Chair thinks this is one form by which the House may get clear of it. There are several modes, and this is one of them, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I wish to state to the House my reason for objecting to the request of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. THOMPSON.] Pennsylvania, sir, has also some interest in this great national question to which he has alluded. It is a question of vast importance to the judicial as well as the legislative departments of this Government. But that question, under the resolution from the State of Pennsylvania, has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STUART. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I think it is due to the House that I should make that report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I desire to know if the motion to suspend is debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. MARSHALL. Then I object to the gentleman making a speech.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the main question having been ordered to be put upon the bill just now before the House, nothing could intervene until that question was disposed of. I ask the Chair to decide.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion, as he before stated, that the morning hour having expired, it is competent to submit a motion to suspend the rules—this being Monday—without regard to the immediate business before the House.

Mr. STEVENS. When will it come up again?

The SPEAKER. It will come up as the first business, and as the special order, to-morrow morning. The Chair decides that the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. THOMPSON] is in order, and is not debatable.

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to a question of courtesy to reply to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. THOMPSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot proceed without unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Object!" and "Order!"]

Mr. FOWLER. I only want to say one word.

[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

[A message in writing was here received from the President of the United States by the hands of MILLARD P. FILLMORE, his Private Secretary.]

GRANTS FOR RAILROADS AND EDUCATION.

Mr. MEADE. I rise to a privileged question, but not to interfere with the motion of my colleague, [Mr. THOMPSON.] I simply rise to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered upon the bill which was before the House a few minutes ago.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. MEADE. I will state, that my object in making the motion is to enable me to make the motion to refer it back to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will it be in order now to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so as to give my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] an opportunity to speak?

The SPEAKER. The privileged motion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. THOMPSON] to suspend the rules must be put first.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will allow his motion to be passed by for the present, and let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remark, that the motion to suspend the rules must be put now, if put at all.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays. I want to see who it is that will make these special orders at this late day of the session.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CARTTER demanded tellers; but they were refused.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 63, noes not counted.

So, two thirds not voting in the affirmative, the rules were not suspended.

CALIFORNIA MINT BILL.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that I may make a motion that the Committee on Ways and Means be allowed to report back the Senate bill for the establishment of a branch Mint at San Francisco, in California.

Mr. BRIGGS. I would ask if it is in order to move an amendment?

Mr. MARSHALL. Oh, Briggs, keep quiet! [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The motion is not susceptible of amendment.

No objection was made to the motion; and

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back to the House, with several amendments, Senate bill No. 6, entitled "An act to establish a branch of the Mint of the United States in California." I have no instructions in regard to the disposition of this bill, further than the ordinary course, which would carry it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentlemen here who represent that State, however, may desire some other course. If they desire to make a motion to put it upon its passage, I will make a statement in regard to the amendments proposed to the bill by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the gentleman to allow the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and they may put this bill into any shape they desire, so that it may come up hereafter as business first in order.

Mr. MARSHALL. This bill has been here for seven months; and for seven months speeches have been constantly made.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Let it go over a day or two.

Mr. MARSHALL. If it goes over a day or two, it will go over until next month. There are special orders for every day, and it will not be reached this session, unless it be taken up now. It will take but half an hour to pass it now.

Mr. McCORKLE. I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. HOUSTON. When the bill shall have been read, I will submit a few remarks upon the amendments which have been proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The bill was then read through by sections, as also the amendments proposed by the committee, which are as follows:

Page 1. Strike out word "temporary," in 8th line, and insert, in lieu thereof, the word "suitable."

Page 1. Strike out word "immediately," on 9th line.

Page 1. After the word "and," on 19th line, insert the words "until the thirteenth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five."

Page 1. After the word "of," on 22d line, strike out "five," and insert "four."

Page 1. After the word "thousand," on 22d line, insert the words "five hundred."

Page 1. After the word "of," on 25th line, strike out "four," and insert, in lieu thereof, the word "three."

Page 1. After the word "of," in 25th line, strike out "three," and insert, in lieu thereof, the word "two."

Page 1. Strike out, after the word "men," on 27th line, the words "not exceeding twenty."

Page 3. Strike out after the word "laws," on the 2d line, the word "made," and insert, in lieu thereof, the words "now in force."

Add at the end of the bill the following:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That there shall be charged a seigniorage on the coinage of gold in the Mint of the United States, and each of its branches, at a rate or rates to be established from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed, in his judgment, the actual expense of the coinage at said Mint, or branch Mint, respectively: Provided, The same shall not be more than one per centum on the amount coined.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall procure or erect the buildings provided for in the second section of this act, or commence operations under any of the provisions of the same, at San Francisco, State of California, it shall first be his duty to make a contract, or contracts, for the erection of said buildings, and procuring the machinery necessary for the operations of said Mint, at a sum or sums which shall not in the whole exceed the sum of $300,000, which said contract, or contracts, shall be secured by good and sufficient sureties, to the satisfaction of the said Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will it be in order to move to strike out the ninth section of the bill, and insert a section, which the Representatives from California desire submitted to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes it would be in order. Whether it would be in order or not until the amendments of the committee are disposed of is another thing.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I send up the amendment, that it may be voted upon. The amendment is to strike out the ninth section and insert the amendment which I send to the Speaker's table.

The amendment sent to the table was as follows:

"Strike out section 9, and insert:

And be it further enacted, That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1851, and for other expenses," approved 30th of September, 1851, as provides for the appointment of a United States assayer, and for contracting for the assaying and fixing the value of gold in grains and lumps, and in forming into bars, be, and the whole of the said clause is hereby repealed."

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to say, upon the bill which has been just reported to the House, that so far as the amendments proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means are concerned, they are restrictive in their character. The salaries of the officers in almost every instance are reduced; and the seigniorage is subjected to the regulation, from time to time, of the Secretary of the Treasury, and is not in any contingency to exceed one per cent., and in no contingency to exceed the expenditure of the Government incurred at the Mint where the seigniorage is charged. The bill has no appropriation in it.

The necessity for the amendment which the Representative from California has placed in my hands arises, I understand, from this fact: There is an assay office in San Francisco now, and that office, contrary to the intent of its original establishment, is now coining, instead of bars, fives and tens, as I am informed, and from the irregularity of their proceedings, and from the impropriety of the course pursued there, the coinage which comes from that assay office is now at a discount in California itself, of from three to five per cent., and in other parts of the country at still greater discount. The proposition contained in the amendment which I have just sent up, is, that the provisions of law by which that assay office was established, shall be repealed from the time of the passage of this law, so as not to curse that country, and especially those who dig the gold, and have to pay the large per cent. which is charged upon them for coining it. I say it is to stop that fraud upon the country, and especially upon the gold diggers, that the amendment is desired by the Representative from California.

Mr. Chairman, I move the previous question.

Mr. STUART. I desire to direct a question to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will hear the question of the gentleman, keeping the floor, in the mean time, for my motion.

Mr. STUART. I ask whether the Committee on Ways and Means are in possession of this information from reliable sources, or whether they have it from hearsay?

Mr. HOUSTON. I had it from the gentleman from California who stands before me, [Mr. McCORKLE] who represents that State in part, and I believe I had it from the other gentleman from California, over the way, [Mr. MARSHALL] and I certainly had it from one of the Senators from that State, that these things are true. I have heard it very frequently, and it has been repeated to me to-day. I have no doubt of the existence of the fact. I move the previous question.

Mr. STUART. It strikes me that it would be better to limit the powers of the assay office than to repeal the law.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is well known that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] wishes to address the House to-day. We can then come back into the House, and pass this bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to accomplish precisely what my friend from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] does; but what will then be the condition of this bill?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to withdraw his call for the previous question, and move to refer this bill to some committee, and then it will come up to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER. Otherwise it will go to the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. It will take but a few moments to pass this bill, if the House is in favor of it. Therefore I adhere to my call for the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope the House will not sustain it.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!" from all parts of the Hall.]

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means a question—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order. The previous question has been demanded, and it is not in order to propound any interrogatories, or answer any after that is done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order raised, and the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] is not in order.

Mr. BROOKS. I move a call of the House, because this question should not be passed through in this way. This bill ought not to go through the House without being printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] cannot submit any proposition to the House during the pendency of the call for the previous question.

Mr. HALL. I rise to a question of order, which is to inquire whether it would be in order to move to make this bill the special order for to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion is not in order.

Mr. HALL. I then ask the unanimous consent of the House that this bill may be made the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. BROOKS. Give us a little more time. I will make no objection if you will give a little further time.

Mr. HALL. To-morrow, then, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. STEPHENS. I object. I call for my motion, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARTTER. I demand tellers upon that motion.

Tellers were appointed, and Messrs. STEPHENS, of Georgia, and MARSHALL, of California, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—yeas 87, noes 45.

Before the result was announced by the Chair—Mr. MARSHALL, of California, demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. STEPHENS. In order that this Mint bill may be in a position that it can come up to-morrow properly, I am willing to withdraw my motion to go into Committee of the Whole, if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houstox] will then move to recommit it so that it will come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, is withdrawn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, and move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. STEPHENS. Now I renew my motion, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] withdraw his motion a moment to allow me to introduce a resolution?

[Cries "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STEPHENS. I cannot withdraw the motion.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. STEPHENS, and it was agreed to.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, here reported, as correctly enrolled, a bill entitled "An act to change the name of the steamboat Brilliant;" which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.)

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the first question under consideration was House bill No. 43, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the current year ending June 30, 1853," upon which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. GENTRY then addressed the committee at length, in favor of the Whig National Convention indorsing the finality of the compromise measures, and in opposition to the nomination of General Scott, &c. [Mr. G.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, here obtained the floor.

Mr. STANLY. Will the gentleman yield me the floor for a few moments?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before I yield the floor to the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] I desire to propound, for my own information, and for the information of the Northern Whig party, which has just now been so eloquently assailed by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] certain interrogatories, as well as to certain other gentlemen of the Whig party (as they claim) of the South.

This question of the finality of the compromise has been dragged into every debate of this House for the last six months, and I desire to understand in what way they understand this question of finality. And I first desire, with all due respect, to put the question to the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. OUTLAW,] who, but a few days ago, laid down a platform of action for himself, similar to that which we have just heard from the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY.]

The admission of California, with a constitution prescribing her territorial limits, and excluding slavery therefrom, was one of the measures reported by the compromise committee of thirteen, and which was passed by that Congress. I desire to inquire of that gentleman whether he, as a North Carolina Whig, stands prepared to pledge himself for the present, and for the future, to resist every attempt which may be made by the people of California to divide that State, so as to create a slave State?

Mr. OUTLAW. Does the gentleman desire me to respond?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and every other gentleman I shall name.

Mr. OUTLAW. In response to the inquiry of the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] I have to say that California, by the act to which he has alluded, is admitted a soverign State into this Union, and that she has the same right and the same powers as any other State in this Union—that, in my opinion, whenever her people shall call upon the Congress of the United States to divide her territory, and they shall deem it for the interest of the country that it shall be divided, it may be done without any infringement of the compromise measures.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That answers the question. I now desire to propound the same question to the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. GENTRY,] who has just taken his seat—whether he stands prepared, as a Tennessee Whig, to resist, in Congress or out of Congress, every effort which may be made by any portion of the people of California to divide that State to create a slave State?

Mr. GENTRY. I will remark to the gentleman in reply, that I stand with respect to California precisely as I do with respect to Virginia. The principles upon which a State may be divided are prescribed in the Constitution, and every State that wants slavery has a right to have it. Ohio has a right to have it now, if she wants it, and can establish it to-morrow, if she chooses.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. OUTLAW] to take the same position, viz: that they will not oppose the erection of a slave State out of a part of the territory now included by the constitution of California; and I will assert, in general terms, in relation to every one of those Southern Whigs who abandoned the Whig caucus, that that is precisely their position upon this question of finality. If I am incorrect, they may now so state.

Mr. TOOMBS. No doubt of it. It ought to be.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They assert that it is a part of the compromise.

Mr. GENTRY. The compromise cannot repeal the Constitution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Here is the condition of things, and I want it to go forth to the people of this country—ay, to this great national party which is about to assemble at Baltimore—that while these gentlemen invoke to their aid the veto power of the Executive of this land, to prevent the people from exercising their constitutional right to legislate upon the law with regard to the reclamation of fugitive slaves, they claim the right to divide that free State, which was admitted as such, as a part of this compromise. It is to be a finality so far as the claims of the Southern gentlemen are concerned, but not a finality in regard to the admission of California as a free State. That is the position; and, Mr. Chairman, because, forsooth, the Whigs of the North come here for the purpose of discharging the duties they owe to their constituents, and entering into the ordinary legislation of the country, because they do not desire to assert the finality of the fugitive slave law, gentlemen denounce them as recreant to their constitutional obligations.

Sir, the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] knows full well that Northern Whigs, as well as Southern Whigs, are sworn before their Maker before they take their seats here, to support that instrument. He knows as well as any man in all the land, that there is not a single Northern Whig in this Hall, or who is summoned to attend this National Convention, who is not ready and willing to carry out every constitutional obligation. Yet gentlemen tell us that they will not oppose a breach of the compromise when they can create a slave State out of a part of it. They are not prepared to say that the people may not do it by their consent. But I promised to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY,] and I do so now for the purpose of explanation, giving to him, under the circumstances connected with the attack of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GENTRY] upon him, as much of my time as he may desire, notifying the House, that should I see proper to do so, I will write out and print the speech upon this very subject, which I designed to make.

Mr. OUTLAW. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to say, in addition to what I before said, that I would vote for the division of California without any regard to the question of slavery or no slavery. I would be governed in my vote upon that subject by what I believed to be the interest and the convenience of the people of California, precisely as I would in the case of any other State in this Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Suppose a portion of the people of California should present a constitution of a State, carved out of California, with the institution of slavery recognized in it, would you vote for its admission?

Mr. OUTLAW. I say that the compromise itself would require this House to admit her, with or without slavery, as the people might determine for themselves. That is one of the principles of the compromise.

Mr. STANLY then replied to the remarks of Mr. GENTRY. He expressed himself against platforms, and declared that he had no fear of the slavery agitation continuing; for he believed it was growing less every day. He referred to the course of Mr. GENTRY at the Whig Convention of 1848, when that gentleman opposed the adoption of a platform as out of order, contending that the convention had merely assembled for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency. [Mr. S.'s speech is published in the Appendix.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND next obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. RICHARDSON) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 43, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1853," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have a resolution which I desire to offer.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the Chair, if, when the House went into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the California Mint bill, reported by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was not before the House; and if when we come back into the House, the question does not recur upon that bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that that business is before the House.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That when this House adjourns on Wednesday next, it adjourn to meet again on Saturday.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. CLEVELAND. I move to amend that resolution so as to provide that when the House adjourns to-morrow, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. JONES. I ask how that resolution can be offered, when there is a bill pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks the unanimous consent to submit it.

Mr. JONES. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman to move to suspend the rules, it being Monday.

Mr. JONES. But there is a bill before the House, which the Chair has decided is before the House, and no motion can be entertained to suspend the rules until that is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion is in order.

[A message was here received from the Senate by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, asking for the return to that body of Senate bill No. 450, to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of useful arts, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved July 4, 1836; and also "An act to provide additional examiners in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1848.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask, before we proceed further, that the House will give leave to return the Senate bill which has been requested by that body.

The order was accordingly made.

The question was then taken, and the rules were not suspended, only 56 voting in the affirmative.

Mr. JONES. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROBBINS. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the motion, and to withdraw his objection to the resolution which I have offered. It cannot be offered unless it be done to-day.

Mr. FOWLER. I request the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw the motion to adjourn, to enable me to submit resolutions from the Legislature of Massachusetts, merely for the purpose of having them referred and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES. I am willing the House should vote to-morrow to adjourn over as long as they wish, but I cannot withdraw the motion now.

The question was then put, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. FOWLER. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to present resolutions from the Legislature of Massachusetts.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Virginia. I object.

A MEMBER. Let us have the motion to adjourn over.

Mr. JONES. I am willing to move to-morrow, that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

A MEMBER. But some one will object, as you do now.

Mr. JONES. They cannot object.

Several Voices. Yes they can.

Mr. JONES. I wish to know if a motion that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on a given time, is not in order at any time, and whether it does not take precedence of a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The motion will be in order to-morrow, though without a quorum it will not be competent for the House to adjourn, except from day to day.

Mr. JONES. But we shall surely have a quorum here to-morrow. I am willing to make that motion then, but I object to its being made now.

HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, then, by unanimous consent, introduced, from the Committee on Commerce, a bill making appropriation for the improvement of certain rivers and harbors; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOWLER. I appeal to the House now to allow me to introduce the resolutions which I hold in my hand from the Massachusetts Legislature, for the purpose of reference.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I object, and move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to; and

The House adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

Monday, June 14, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasury Department, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 10th instant, calling upon that Department to report "upon the practicability, utility, and probable cost of a ship-canal across the Peninsula of Florida; and also, to communicate such information as it may be in possession of in relation to the navigation of the Straits of Florida, the losses accruing thereon, and the dangers and difficulties incident thereto." It states, that from general and unofficial information it believes the plan would be practicable and capable of being executed at a reasonable expense in comparison with the great advantages which would result from such a work. It states, also, that it is probable the ocean commerce of the American ports, and the Gulf of Mexico, inward and outward, foreign and domestic, exceeds $250,000,000 per annum, besides that of the Mexican and other foreign ports on the Gulf. That all the above commerce has to encounter the dangerous navigation of the Florida coasts and reefs, and all the inward portion of it, the equally dangerous navigation of the Bahama banks; and that a difference of insurance on the above amount of only one half of one per cent. by a ship-canal through Florida, would be an annual saving of a million and a quarter of dollars, while a still larger amount would be saved in the expenses of the vessels, and a consequent reduction in the rate of freight by shortening the voyage, as would be the case by a route through such a canal. Such is the danger in the present navigation, that the rate of insurance from New York to New Orleans is equal to that from New York to China. The communication was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, in favor of a reciprocity arrangement with the British North American Provinces for the free interchange of the natural productions of these countries, embracing also a full and joint participation in the fisheries and the free navigation of the river St. Lawrence; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLARKE presented the petition of William L. Martin, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of Daniel Warner and others, citizens of Rhode Island, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WADE presented three petitions of citizens of Ashland county, Ohio, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented two petitions of citizens of Iowa, praying the establishment of a mail route from Salem to Columbus City, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the memorial of the Indiana Central Railroad Company, praying that the payment of the duties on railroad iron imported by them may be postponed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ATCHISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Henry R. Schoolcraft, praying compensation for certain moneys disbursed by him in the Indian country, submitted an adverse report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Henry R. Schoolcraft, praying to be allowed the pay and emoluments of a captain during two expeditions, in 1831 and 1832, to discover the true source of the Mississippi river, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Dr. Avery Downer, asking to be allowed compensation for services as surgeon's mate during the revolutionary war, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following petitions, submitted adverse reports thereon:

Petition of Rachel Abbot, praying a pension for the services of her husband in the revolutionary war;

Petition of Dinah Mount, widow of a soldier in the revolutionary war, praying a pension;

Petition of Lydia Lord, widow of John Lord, praying a pension;

Petition of Hannah Thompson, praying that the pension she now receives may be continued for life; and Petition of Mary Colcord, praying a pension in consideration of the services of her father, Bradstreet Wiggin, during the revolutionary war.

Mr. STOCKTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the memorial of Isaac Bigelow, praying to be allowed compensation for loss of clothing on board the steamer Missouri, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following petitions and bills from the House of Representatives, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were ordered to be printed:

Petition of James T. Eells, praying a pension for the services of his father, Lieutenant Jeremiah B. Eells, during the revolutionary war;

Petition of Edward Milton, a sergeant in the United States Army, praying an increase of pension;

Petition of legal representatives of Joseph Ford, an officer in the war of the Revolution, praying a pension; and Bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Jonas D. Platt.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Emily H. Plummer, praying a pension for the services of her husband, Captain Samuel M. Plummer, who died from disease contracted during the Mexican war, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRIGHT, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave, to introduce a bill for increasing the compensation of the Assistant Postmasters General, and providing for their future appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

CUSTOM-HOUSE REGULATIONS.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire whether any legislation is necessary or expedient to exempt vessels, driven by stress of weather, and anchoring in any of our ports, from the ordinary detentions and requisitions of the custom-house.

CATLIN'S COLLECTION OF INDIAN SCENES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution, submitted by Mr. SEWARD on the 8th instant, in relation to the purchase of a collection of Indian Scenes and Portraits, by George Catlin, which, having been amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of three members, be appointed by the President of the Senate, to inquire into the expediency of purchasing Mr. George Catlin's collection of Indian Scenes and Portraits, which are in danger of being sold and lost to this country.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. appointed Mr. SEWARD, Mr. GWIN, and Mr. UNDERWOOD, as the select committee for the above purpose.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate to change the name of the steamer Brilliant.

REMEDIES TO PATENTEES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill giving further remedies to patentees; and no further amendments being offered, it was reported to the Senate.

The question was stated to be on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the vote is taken, I desire to say that it seems to me the bill is still objectionable. I cannot understand fully the propriety of restricting the operation of this law to territories contiguous to the United States. I cannot see why we should not extend the remedy so as to guard against violations of patents in territories that are not contiguous. The communication between the United States and England especially has been rendered so convenient and speedy, that a patent may be violated in England and introduced across the Atlantic almost as readily as from Canada. I rise not to offer any amendment to this bill, but to suggest to those who have it in charge the propriety of extending its remedies so as to embrace those violations of patent rights that may be committed in England, or in other territories, whether contiguous or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was induced to take some little hand in this bill in consequence of the belief that it might possibly affect my constituents. I have secured such amendments to it as that they cannot be touched, unless they violate the law knowingly and willfully. I am therefore content with having secured those privileges to them, and am not anxious to extend the amendment to the patent laws beyond what our Northern brethren seem to ask for. If the manufacturers of those articles which we of the South consume, and do not manufacture, are content to take it in reference to Canada, I do not wish to force upon them the extension of the privilege to Europe, or any other place. I do not think it good policy to do it. I am willing to take this bill as it stands, and those at the North who have applied to me on the subject are willing to take it as it stands. One argument in response to my friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and I believe I shall take my seat, and leave the bill to those who are more interested in it than I am to defend it.

That Senator has asked, Why pass the bill? and he says there would be objections to it, even where those are secured from the penalty who unknowingly violate it. It is necessary, it seems to me, for this reason: suppose an insolvent man comes over from Canada with a great many of these wares, and sells them to people living upon the line, and then departs, how do you reach him? Suppose an insolvent man, living even in our own country, brings all these articles from Canada, how do you reach him? He does not care about a legal process. If you protect his person, he does not care for the amount of judgment that you render against him. We have found that out in those countries where imprisonment for debt has been very properly, as I think, abolished. The only way, in cases of that sort, that you can do any good to our own patentees will be to reach those who may be solvent, and who knowingly violate the law. These things will be carried on by agents, and you must provide penalties beyond this bill if you wish to produce any effect in behalf of the patentee. You must provide a penalty by which you will operate upon the body of the fraudulent agent, who is carrying on this business between Canada and the United States, in violation of the rights of our patentees. If you take the bill back, and provide an entire new system for the purpose of reaching the agent in his person, perhaps you may do some good in that way. But, so far you have only gone upon the pecuniary penalty, and you accomplish nothing to break up the business to which I refer.

Mr. President, I have great respect for those men that employ year after year in the discovery of some useful invention, by which the "progress"—I would say to my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CASS]—of society and man is advanced. I am a thorough believer in that kind of progress; and I am for sustaining and protecting those individuals who devote their lives to studies of that kind, and who have benefited mankind by their exertions. The Arkwrights, the Stevensons, and the Whitneys—the men who have given us the cotton-picking machine, and the cotton-spinning machine, and other inventions—those who have given us the railroad and the steamboat—the Fultons and the Fitches, have done more for the progress of society than all our politicians, at least I am inclined to think so. I am for protecting such progressives as these in the enjoyment of their useful inventions; and I think that, when the inventions are depredated upon by persons just across the line, there is no great harm in reaching those who knowingly and willfully violate these rights. I am willing to go that far for them. This bill goes no further; and I do not think we ought to delay it according to the suggestion of my friend from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] to extend it to England, and the rest of the world. If the Northern people are willing to take it as it stands, let them have it so, and wait until some evil grows out of our intercourse with Europe.

Mr. BAYARD. I certainly have as little disposition as the honorable Senator from Kentucky to prevent a proper extension to the patentees of protection against fraudulent invasions of their rights. I have not looked at this bill, I concede, in reference to the interests of my particular constituents, but generally, as affecting the whole Union. There are no particular rights that they would have invaded, or no particular advantages to be derived from an invasion or evasion of the rights of the patentees. My objection to the bill is, that by introducing the word "use," you alter the entire principle of the patent laws, as they have heretofore existed in this country, and as they have existed in England. You put it into the power of the patentee to raise the question of the validity of his patent, by a litigation between him and the mere consumer of the individual article. The particular advantage to be gained here, in reference to this case, relates to a single patent; or, if you please, to a variety of patents, for wooden articles. I am not willing to pass a general law altering the general principles of the patent laws, for the purpose of protecting an individual case, if I think the principle wrong.

The Government undertakes, by a patent, to secure to the party receiving it, as far as it can, without trenching upon the rights of the community, protection, as a reward for the discovery or invention which he has made. Put the case—for there are cases of that kind—in which you cannot give protection, beyond a limited extent; in other words, where every species of protection which you can give must still be liable to evasion, unless you trample upon principles which you are unwilling to trample upon, even for the benefit of the patentee. Take the case of the author. Suppose his production to be pirated. If he came forward and told you, as you are here told, "Your patent laws do not enable me to reach the infringers in consequence of the insolvency of an agent of a publication in the hands of a pirating party; and I want you to give me authority to go into the house of every man in the community, and if he have in his possession my book, knowing that it is copyrighted, that I may have a right to file a bill in chancery, and force him to contest my copyright," would you be willing to pass such a law? Such a bill would not be entertained for a moment; and that is my objection to this bill.

As regards the evil to be remedied, I hold that if you strike out the word "use," there is a perfect remedy under the law, as it would then stand, against the fraudulent and irresponsible agents, as they are called. Is not the remedy of an injunction sufficient? Let the agent be irresponsible, if you will; still the process of injunction does not go upon the ground of the person's having property to answer with. He is liable to imprisonment, if he violates the injunction; because he is guilty of contempt of court; and therefore, if the word "use" is stricken out, we shall have the contest between the dealers in the article and the patentee. The patentee has a perfect protection; because, by the remedy in equity he could compel the party who had his establishment in Canada, and his agents here, if they were irresponsible, to change those agents eternally, and at a loss which he could not stand. I hold, myself, that the protection given by the bill, striking out the word "use," would be sufficient for the purposes of this or any other patent. If it is not, all I can say is, it will not do for you to trench upon the rights of the community, and compel the individual consumer of an article to contest the validity of a patent, to protect that patent. The difficulty does not apply to an avowedly good patent; it applies to the case of an article the patent-right of which in this country is disputed, or claimed by different persons; or where it is claimed that the patent has expired, or never legally existed. Those who deal in the article may well afford to test the validity of the patent with the holder of it; but the mere consumer of an individual article—the mere purchaser—would not be willing to do it. You have but to suppose the case of a man claiming a patent of the kind, which is unjust in itself, or doubtful, or which may be claimed by another person; he publishes a notice in the newspapers, and it can be brought home to the party using the article that he was a reader of the paper; then the question arises whether he saw the notice. Then the holder of the patent files a bill in equity, and saddles the party with the costs of suit. Whether he fails or succeeds is immaterial, for the terror will have been spread abroad in the community; and, the moment the party publishes the notice of the article in the newspapers the consumption of that article for individual use would be destroyed. My objection to the bill is, that if patentees cannot be protected without making the consumer of the individual article liable to contest the right with the patentees, they must go without that protection.

Mr. MILLER. This bill was introduced for the purpose of meeting a known existing evil—to prevent what the Committee on the Judiciary thought a gross violation of the spirit of our patent laws. It is not the design of the bill to reach any case which the Senator from Delaware has suggested; that is, of going and seizing an article merely because a man may be found in the use of it. But the object of the bill is to prevent persons who could not evade our patent laws within the United States from taking the machine across the line, and into a foreign country, and there manufacturing the article, and sending it here for sale and for use. If the machines which are now in operation in Canada were in the United States, they could be seized, under our present laws, and taken possession of at once, and the parties who had used them in violation of the law, would be punished. But, inasmuch as the parties, knowing the state of the law in the United States, carry their machines across the line, and there use them, there is no remedy, unless Congress give the remedy which is asked for by this bill, to wit: that if a man goes across the line to a foreign country contiguous to the United States, and there obtains the patented articles, and then brings them to the United States knowing them to have been manufactured fraudulently, or if he sells them in the United States, or uses them, knowing them to have been thus manufactured, he would then be subject to the penalty. What is there wrong in that? If the manufacturer were in the United States, this law would not be necessary. But this evasion of the law makes it necessary that our patentees should be protected in this way.

One word with regard to the objections raised by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] He objects to the bill because it makes the penalty apply to the person who may use the patented article. I agree that, when the bill was first reported, it struck me that the word "use" ought not to be in the bill; that it might be carrying the principle too far, so that it might become oppressive. But the remedy proposed is sufficient; because it must be proved by affidavit of the party whose rights are infringed, that the party using the article knew, at the time he did so, that it was thus surreptitiously brought into the United States in fraud of the patentee. I think, then, that, with regard to the scientia, there can be no difficulty. It must be brought home, it must be proved. If a man were to go into a market anywhere, and purchase an article to which the bill applies, it would be a hard case to seize that article, unless you bring home the scientia, the knowledge of the fact that the article was thus fraudulently introduced. But if a man goes and buys an article, knowing, at the time, that it is a fraudulent one, this bill will apply.

Mr. BAYARD. Suppose a case of a patentee having made a publication in a paper, claiming a certain patent in order to bring home to the knowledge of all parties that the article is a patented article, and he finds that, notwithstanding this, his article is in use, and files a bill against the party using it, would the notice in a paper be deemed a sufficient warning against the use of the article?

Mr. MILLER. That will be a question for the court to decide—a question whether the party had knowledge. I have no objection to the word "use" being stricken out, were it not for the fact that the law would then be evaded in another way. Because parties would then say, We do not transport these articles here for sale, but for use, and thus they would evade the law. If the word "use" is not put in, you will find men all along the line who will buy these articles, and put them into their shops and say they are for their own use. It is to avoid that and meet the whole case, that the word "use" should be retained; and I think that with the word "knowingly" inserted, the bill is unobjectionable as it is.

Mr. SEWARD. The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have power to promote the progress of science, and of the useful arts, by securing to inventors and authors the production of their genius for a limited term of years. It is a provision that became necessary to insert in the Constitution of the United States, for the reason that the object in which property was concerned was a matter of commerce, and commerce was necessarily put under the care of the Federal Government, instead of under the government of the States. It is an anomaly in the Constitution, because the rights to private property are secured to the owners by the several States with this exception; and I have stated the reason why this exception was made. It was a policy long before adopted by the Government of that country from which we have derived some of the most valuable of our institutions—the Government of Great Britain. It was adopted in that country in the time of James I., when all monopolies which had been before granted by the Crown, were revised and abolished, and the power of the Crown to grant monopolies was thenceforth restricted to the case of patents recurring for a limited term of years, to real inventors and authors, the production of their own intellectual labor.

The measures adopted by the Congress of the United States, to carry out this provision of the Constitution, were the same measures which had been earlier adopted by the Parliament of Great Britain. They went to the same extent, and they went no further; and being amended and improved nearly simultaneously in both countries, they have, with some degree of success, answered the purpose for which they were intended. But a time has come when a case has arisen in which the existing remedies are inadequate to fulfill the constitutional purposes. The manufacturer of a useful machine finds the production of his own patented machine on sale by others, in his own country, his own State, his own town. He seeks his remedy under existing laws. It is ineffectual, because the existing remedies can only be enforced by reaching the person of the infringer who makes the article, and the machine with which the article is manufactured. But the infringer is in Canada, beyond the reach of a legal process; his machine is in Canada or Nova Scotia, beyond the jurisdiction of the United States; and the products are, nevertheless, here on sale. Then the American inventor pays a great tax to the Government for the privilege of manufacturing his own article, and is supplanted in the market by the foreign manufacturer, who uses the inventor's own machine for the purpose without responsibility to him.

Thus, sir, the remedy which is provided by the Constitution, and secured by the law, is inadequate. The right of property, is, nevertheless, to be protected, or else the constitutional provision fails. What, then, is to be done? Either you must abandon the duty of protecting the property, or you must furnish a new and better remedy. That is the object of this bill; and it is proposed to be accomplished by providing that the manufactured article produced abroad and brought into the United States, should be forfeited to the use of the inventor in certain cases. What objection is there to this? It is stated by the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] that this bill proposes the introduction of a new principle; but I humbly submit that there is no principle involved in the matter—nothing that has the dignity, nothing that is worthy of the name of a principle. The principle which we seek to establish is, that the inventor shall be protected in his property, and the duty of Congress is to see that he is protected. The remedy proposed involves no new principle whatever. It is merely carrying out the principle already recognized and established.

But the honorable Senator from Delaware observes, that heretofore we have never seized and subjected to confiscation the manufactured product, but have left it free and open to commerce, and that we therefore shall establish a new principle by seizing the product in this case. Sir, I repeat that this proceeding involves no new principle, for certainly the man who uses the property of the inventor can claim no protection on principle in using it to the injury of his neighbor, who is its lawful owner. It is, therefore, only making the existing remedy more stringent. It is not departing from a principle at all; for the only principle in question is "protection of property by law." When this new remedy is proposed, two questions arise; first, whether it is necessary; and it is conceded on all hands that property of this kind cannot be protected, unless some new remedy is given, nor can the wit of man devise any other provision which will give additional stringency to the old remedy.

What other question remains about this additional remedy? Simply this: whether it is a remedy which is capable of being perverted to do greater injustice to the innocent than it will afford protection to the patentee. That, however, is guarded against by requiring that the person who is to suffer this penalty shall be proved to have committed a fraud—shall be proved to have had a guilty knowledge that the article he was purchasing was the property of another—the property of an American citizen. Is there anything new in that? No principle is better established than that property stolen shall not be made the property of another by purchase. There is no new principle in saying, that though the thief shall be obliged to surrender the property stolen, while it remains in his hands, that when he has sold it in the market, the purchaser shall not have a title to it, even though he purchased it innocently. But in this case we have adopted a precaution in declaring that no man shall be subject to damages in consequence of being in possession of these products unless it is proved that he knew that it was the production of a machine of an American citizen secured to him by a patent. Now, when you bring this knowledge home to an individual, he is convicted of fraud, and you only apply in this case the old principle that title shall not be diverted from its lawful owner by fraud.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] seems to suppose that the remedy is capable of being abused. He cannot deny that it is unquestionable in its nature and character, but capable of being abused. It is not capable of being abused, because it will be necessary for the person who seeks to prevent another from purchasing these products to give him notice that they are the production of a patented machine or invention. Neither can a case of dispute arise between patentees, because the owner of a patent must give notice to the intending purchaser, before he buys, that certain goods manufactured by his machine, are on their way from a foreign country; and he must prohibit the purchase; if any one buys after that, he buys with his eyes open, and he must submit to the consequences. It is not a question of conflict of patents, but of violation of a recognized patent. The honorable Senator from Delaware says that an injunction would reach the case, and afford a sufficient protection. This remedy would be defensible only on the ground that the use prohibited was unlawful and injurious. But the provision to which he objects rests on the same ground—to wit: that after notice is given, the use is unlawful and injurious. If it be right to enjoin a merchant not to offer these articles for sale, or to enjoin a purchaser from using them, then it is right to provide that, without a resort to the expensive litigation of an equity suit, the person fraudulently purchasing these articles shall not enjoy the benefit of his fraud. An injunction is never defensible, except on the ground that all other remedies are inadequate. There is, then, no need to resort to an injunction, because previous notice and confiscation in defiance of it would be not only more simple, but more adequate remedy also. To require the inventor to sue out an injunction is to require that he shall be subjected to a great expense, which could be saved by giving a simple notice.

I had so much to say on the question generally.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] objects, that if the principle is a sound one, it ought to be extended so as to apply the law to pirated articles manufactured in other countries as well as in the North American British Provinces. My reply will be brief. The principle is the same, and it would be easy, and I doubt not it would be right, to extend it; but it is not now necessary to extend it. In those foreign countries which are not contiguous to the United States there is no such evil as that of infringement upon the rights of American inventors by manufacturing articles with their own patented machines, and sending them here for sale. The only cases which have come to our knowledge are those in which these articles are manufactured in British North America contiguous to the United States. This bill, then, is sufficient for present purposes, sufficient for the present administration of justice, without extending it further. Senators representing other portions of the United States than that where the evil is suffered object to its being extended further. The case, then, is just this. It is necessary to give the bill this extent, and it is unnecessary to extend it further. We who feel the need of it are to take it, without extending it further, for no other object than to carry out an abstract principle.

The fact that the infringement of American patents is confined to the contiguous British Provinces seems to present an anomaly. But that anomaly may be easily explained. All those manufactures which find a provision of this kind necessary, are manufactures of wood or lumber, and timber. Wood, lumber, and timber, are not produced in any foreign country so abundantly as to tempt such infringements, except the British Provinces contiguous to the United States. They are not produced so plentifully that their production in foreign countries can be made so as to undersell the patentee in our own markets. Take, for instance, the article of lasts, a large quantity of which are manufactured by patented machines. The lumber can be obtained even more cheaply in Canada and Nova Scotia than here, directly across rivers, which are traversed by ferries at all hours of the day and night; and it will be seen at once, that trade in the article if allowed would become indiscriminate, unless there is such a remedy as this bill contemplates. But there are no last-makers in England, or France, or Russia, sending their lasts here manufactured by our machines, or otherwise.

On the contrary, so cheap are the products of our machines for working in wood, compared with those in Europe, that without any patent whatever, we do sell a vast amount of articles of this kind, especially of clocks, all over the continent of Europe, although we have no bounty there, and must pay a duty upon them when introduced there. It is seen, then, I hope, that this bill is right in itself; that it is necessary; that nothing less will be adequate; and that more than this bill proposes is unnecessary, and that a constitutional obligation upon Congress requires that it should be passed.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to acquit myself of my duty to this bill, and to make a few explanations in regard to it. The amendments which have been made, have been framed without my knowledge, and of course I do not feel responsible for them. I do, however, in some measure, feel responsible for the bill as it originally came from the hands of the Committee on the Judiciary. The great object of that bill was to punish fraudulent fabricators, and illicit traders in articles manufactured in a foreign country from a machine patented here. I recollect the circumstances under which the bill was framed in the committee room: A gentleman came forward and said that he had a machine for making irregular bodies, such as lasts, gun-stocks, axe-helves, and some other articles of the kind. It was one of those inventions which showed that he had been studying upon the subject a great while. He had a patent; it was a clear vested right—a right which the Government was bound to protect, as a vested right, as much as it was bound to protect any other vested right. This right, he said, had been invaded in this way: Persons after looking at the machine in the United States, would go over into Canada, make such a machine, there manufacture lasts and other irregular bodies, and they would be brought in quantities to the United States, and openly offered for sale in violation of his rights. The great object of the original bill was, therefore, to put down this combination between the fraudulent fabricators of a machine, beyond the United States, and the fraudulent vendors in the United States. It was to put down a species of smuggling in derogation of the rights of this inventor.

Now to the extent to which that went, I am perfectly willing to assent to the bill. I am perfectly willing that it should contain this provision: that all persons who shall openly and knowingly sell, in violation of the rights of a patentee, articles made from an American patented machine in an adjacent country, shall have these goods forfeited; and it is nothing but right that it should be so. To that extent I am willing to go; but I doubt very much, when we introduce the principle which has been alluded to by the honorable Senator from Delaware, whether we do not invade a very delicate subject, and thus introduce a painful subject of litigation by reaching an individual who may, or may not have the use of it bona fide or fraudulently. Why, sir, it will give rise to a species of litigation—it will be a broad field for litigation to say that every individual who shall have such an article for his use shall be subject to a lawsuit of this kind. I am perfectly willing to legislate on this subject with somewhat more caution, perhaps, than the extent to which this bill seems to look. I am willing to limit it to fraudulent vendors, who, in combination with a foreign fabricator, introduce articles within the limits of the United States in violation of the rights of patentees here. I am willing to let the bill go that far and no further. Therefore, if gentlemen who have had this subject under consideration will so far modify it as to strike out the word "use," I shall vote for it very willingly.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has stated very accurately, as he always does, the circumstance under which this bill was first framed. He has stated that it was made apparent to the Judiciary Committee that the existing patent laws were inadequate to prevent a gross violation of valuable patents; that they did not afford protection to individuals holding patents against those manufacturing the articles on the other side of the line within the Canadian territory. The bill was framed to meet that evil and to correct it. The object of the bill was to check that evil, and the question was not one of phraseology, but to reach a particular specified object. Now, it was seen that the bill as originally drawn would not reach that object; and it will not be contended that when it is discovered that a bill here is palpably inadequate to meet the object we shall adhere to it, and that it shall not be regarded as capable of amendment.

It has already been shown, (and shown so plainly that it would seem that there was no necessity for repetition,) that unless a provision shall be incorporated to reach the use of the article, the bill is inadequate, because, without it, it is only necessary to purchase through an agent; and every establishment in the United States can be thus supplied with articles from the other side of the line. And I submit whether there is not a measure of policy to be considered in a case of this kind—whether we will, by the defect of our laws, induce the establishment of manufactories all along the line of the adjacent foreign territory, and induce our citizens to go on that side of the line and there establish their manufactories, in order to evade our laws; for such assuredly will be the result. We shall find that individuals, instead of taking out their patents, or purchasing a right to use a machine for manufacturing, will find it cheaper to pass into the contiguous foreign territory, and there put up their machines and set the law at defiance.

Now, sir, the object being to protect the patentee, and to prevent the violation of the patent, we have only to inquire whether there is any danger that innocent persons will suffer from its provisions? If there is anything in this bill that shall bring suffering or danger upon innocent parties, then some correction should be made. Let us examine the provisions of the bill, instead of looking at the apprehensions which gentlemen seem to entertain, without, perhaps, due examination of the phraseology of the bill, to see whether there is any danger from that quarter. In the first place, the bill only reaches the case of those who undertake to use the article, knowing it to have been imported in violation of the law. The fact of the guilty knowledge must be established. And I would submit whether, when an individual undertakes, knowingly, to use an article in violation of law, it can be said that he puts himself in the attitude of an innocent person?

Then, again, is the phraseology of the bill sufficiently guarded, so that innocent persons shall not be annoyed? The honorable Senator from Delaware seemed to apprehend that there might be some danger of that kind. This bill authorizes a patentee, or persons holding under him, to "file a bill in equity, verified by oath or affirmation," in the district or circuit courts of the United States, complaining that any person or corporation has imported, or has in his possession for sale or use, articles imported in violation of the law. He must file his application, "verified by oath." But that is not all. As a measure of greater caution, the act proceeds further, and prescribes that if he "shall make it appear, to the satisfaction of the judge, that the facts alleged are probably true, the said judge may issue an order to the marshal" to take possession of the property. The application, then, must first be "verified by oath," and the judge must be satisfied "that the facts alleged are probably true," before the order issues; and then there is an opportunity for a hearing before the judge.

I submit, then, that the bill is so carefully framed, that there is no possibility, or at least no probability, that any innocent persons can be put to inconvenience, that there is no danger from the source apprehended. And unless we retain the right to seek and follow the individual who has the guilty knowledge, who knows that he has the article in his possession, imported after this time in violation of law, the bill is inadequate to check the abuse which it was designed to check. Really, I apprehend that, upon examination, there will be no serious objection to the bill. Without it, the patentee is without any protection whatever.

This is a case of peculiar merit, and commends itself, I think, to the favorable consideration of Congress. I will refer to a letter from the late Commissioner of Patents, the Hon. Edmund Burke, in reference to the merits of the invention which we here seek particularly to protect:

"PATENT OFFICE, January 8, 1847.
"SIR: In reply to your letter of the 6th instant, I have the honor to state that I have been acquainted with the general character of the machine invented by Thomas Blanchard for turning irregular forms, a further extension of the patent of which he now asks of Congress; and I am happy to state that the invention of Mr. Blanchard is one of great and singular merit, displaying remarkable versatility of application, and therefore of great utility. It has long been in use in the armories of the United States, where its merits have been fully and profitably tested. As to the originality, ingenuity, and value of Mr. Blanchard's invention, there can be no doubt. Mr. Blanchard is one of those many meritorious inventors whose lot is to derive but little benefit from inventions, the ingenuity and utility of which mark eras in the arts."

There would seem to be no reason why others similarly situated might not be embraced in the same law. There is no necessity, however, for extending it so far as was suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, as no complaints have come from that quarter. This bill, if it shall become a law, will not be of very general application. It is designed only to prevent violators of patents from passing from the United States into contiguous foreign territory for the purpose of violating existing patent laws; and I think that the bill as it stands is necessary to meet the case contemplated.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech upon this question; but it seems to me that this bill covers more cases than perhaps its framers contemplated. Suppose a patent were taken out for the same machine here and in Canada, would not this bill prohibit the importation of any articles manufactured by that machine, although patented in Canada as well as here? It seems to me that it would; and yet I hardly suppose it was designed to prohibit goods manufactured from a machine actually patented in Canada. The protection afforded by the tariff laws would be a sufficient advantage in favor of the domestic manufacture, and to prohibit would not promote the interests of the inventor, but rather the reverse. Again, sir, suppose the assignee of a machine patented in this country by a citizen of the United States, were to establish one in Canada; would it not operate as a prohibition of his manufacture from that machine? And if it be, it seems to me that is not contemplated by the framers of the bill.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. President, the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Virginia is, I think, entitled to some consideration. It was certainly not designed to provide for cases where patents existed abroad. A proviso to the bill would set that objection at rest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the Chair.) No amendment will be in order until the amendments made in Committee of the Whole are acted upon.

Mr. TOUCEY. Mr. President, I hope that this bill will be adopted, as it has been amended in Committee of the Whole. It is meant to apply to a class of cases principally, not exclusively, where an individual crosses into the British possessions, and there sets up an establishment for the violation of a patent granted by this Government. It applies to no other case, unless it be in regard to some other adjacent foreign territory.

Now, there does not seem to be any opposition, as far as I have been able to discover, to the general object of this bill. No one would vindicate, or countenance, in the least degree, a fraudulent transaction of this kind. Indeed, it would be an abandonment of the duty of Congress, under the Constitution of the United States, not to protect the immense amount of property which exists in the form of patent-rights; and if there is any species of property which I would protect above all others, it is that which is the product of mind. It is becoming too notorious that this species of property is not well protected. It is a matter of universal regret that it is not well protected. The public benefactor, who has given a benefit to the community beyond appreciation, derives to himself but little or no benefit from the result of his labors, of his ingenuity, of his genius. Now, sir, within the limits of this bill, it is obvious that these men are not protected, because, at present, along the whole line of the frontier, the fraudulent fabricator has only to cross over the line, and there set up his establishment; and, without regard to your laws, he can inundate the country and annihilate this species of property.

As I said before, there does not seem to be any opposition to the general object of this bill. It is admitted that the remedy ought to apply to the fraudulent manufacturer, or fabricator, in violation of the present right. Well, with regard to that class of persons, they are beyond the jurisdiction of your laws. You have no remedy against them. You can neither commence a suit at law, nor can you enjoin, nor can you reach their establishment. It is admitted that it should apply, also, to the fraudulent vender—to the person who has in his possession, for sale, the article fabricated or manufactured; and, to that extent, I do not understand that there is any difference of opinion, but all agree that the fraudulent vender of the article ought to be reached by the provisions of this bill.

The objection that is now interposed—that the fraudulent purchaser ought not to be reached, and the reason assigned for it, if I comprehend it, is, that it becomes a question to be investigated in a court of justice whether he is a fraudulent purchaser or not. Now, I do not believe that those who oppose the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, mean to say that there is any material difference between a fraudulent vender and a fraudulent purchaser. They are both participants in the fraud. They are both alike in fault. Their conduct is alike injurious to the real owner of the property, the right to which is violated. But it is said that, when you come into courts of justice, a question arises which it is somewhat difficult to determine: whether the purchaser is a fraudulent purchaser or not. Why, that is a very ordinary question in courts of justice. It is one about which there is no difficulty. It is a question which may be left to courts and juries with perfect safety; for no man can be subjected to the provisions of this bill, until it is fully shown that, at the time when he purchased the article which is meant to be protected, or which is sold in opposition to the patent-right, he purchased it with knowledge, in the first place, that it had been imported; and, in the second place, that it had been fabricated abroad at this establishment, thus set up in fraud of the patent granted by this Government. I think, sir, that it is all-important that this provision in the bill should be retained, because, without it, it will be inefficient.

Unless such a provision is made, what has an establishment on the other side of the line of Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, or Michigan, to do except to send its traveling agent to vend the article through the country and to return home, and before the party defrauded can discover that he is within the jurisdiction. Then those who purchase with knowledge, not being held responsible, there is connivance,—the fraud is multiplied, and the greatest facilities are afforded for its commission. You thus, by your legislation, permit it to go untouched, unchecked, merely because it is too much for a court of chancery or a court of law to determine whether the parties purchased with knowledge! Now, I think it is a very clear proposition, that if the fact can be ascertained in a court of justice, the law ought to apply to that case, and it is essential that it should apply. I hope, sir, that the amendments which have been made in Committee of the Whole will be adopted, that the bill will be passed in the shape in which it has been amended, and that this remedy will be given to a suffering and a very meritorious class of citizens.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "use."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, with amendments, the question is first on concurring with those amendments. No further amendment can be offered until they are disposed of.

Mr. FELCH. Mr. President, whatever may be thought or said of the details of this bill, or the propriety of passing it, its general object cannot be misunderstood. The effect of it must necessarily be to increase, in this country, the value of all patented articles, by giving a more complete and exclusive privilege to the patentee, by prohibiting from the market and from use all articles which are manufactured on the other side of the line, in the British Provinces. It is now perfectly manifest, that if the patent extend only to this country, any person residing in any of the British Provinces has a right to manufacture that article for sale; and, under the present laws in regard to imports, there is no prohibition against bringing that article for sale into this country. Now, the provisions of this bill are such as to prohibit the just right of persons residing out of the country, to manufacture articles which may be patented here. If this bill proposed to pursue only the American citizen who should take the invention of an American citizen, patented in this country, and manufacture articles from it on the other side of the line, then, of course, it would apply to, and operate only upon our own citizens; but it does not apply exclusively to such a case. It applies to all cases. In other words, it is a bill which applies to the importation of articles, generally from foreign countries on our own borders. If we look at the extent of articles manufactured under patent rights acquired in this country, we shall see at once that it is a bill which is very extensive in its operations. A very large proportion of the articles which are sold in the markets in this country are articles which are manufactured under patents; some of which are of a very complicated kind. This bill does not apply merely to articles manufactured of wood, but it applies to all other articles, and some of them are very complicated.

The question now is, whether we are willing to pass a bill which shall virtually give to the patentee a right broader than that which is given him by any patent law which we have ever passed in this country; whether we shall pass a law broader in its operation upon prohibition of importation than has ever yet been applied—whether we shall give larger profits, and more exclusive rights to patentees by excluding this description of articles manufactured in foreign countries, and enhance thereby the price of those articles which are purchased by individuals throughout the country for use and for sale. This is the scope of the bill. I think we should hesitate before passing a bill of this description. It seems to me that we have already gone far enough upon this subject. It seems to me that there is no claim on the part of the patentee which requires us to pursue the matter further, and give him exclusive and further rights, not given by previous laws, and not covered by his patent.

But it will be said, and has been said, and argued with a good deal of force, that here may be what are called "frauds," although in point of fact, it is a lawful pursuit of a lawful undertaking on the part of the citizens on the other side of the line. It is said that a remedy should be afforded for these "frauds." Well, what is the remedy which would strike a man as being most appropriate in such a case? What would the obvious remedy be? My idea of it is simply this: Persons not having a patent cannot, within the limits of our country, manufacture articles by a machine which is patented. That is all very proper, and right, and just, in every sense. Now, has not the patentee the same means of acquiring protection beyond the limits of our jurisdiction, which he has within its limits? Certainly he has. If I understand the laws of foreign countries in relation to that subject, an American citizen who obtains a patent here, may obtain his exclusive right also beyond the limits of this country. By an application to the British authorities—either to the Home Government or the local authorities of the British Provinces by which we are surrounded—I believe there is no difficulty in obtaining a patent. If I am incorrect in that respect, Senators will correct me.

Mr. BRADBURY. I understand that a patent cannot be obtained in the British Provinces in cases of extension. In all these cases, where a great deal of time is consumed in perfecting the patent, we find it necessary in this country, in order to reward the inventor, to give him an extension of his patent; but I understand, though I have not the British law at hand, that no patent can be obtained in England for an extension. I have this statement from an authority which I regard as good. The issuing of a patent there is rather a ministerial act, and the patent is much more easily obtained there than here; but when the power of granting the patent has once been exerted, they are not in the habit of extending patents.

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senator from Michigan wishes it, I will hand him the English law on the subject.

Mr. FELCH. By the fourth section of the statute of fifth and sixth William IV., which the Senator from Florida has kindly put in my hands, it is, in effect, provided, that if any person shall obtain any letters-patent, and shall, by such advertisements as are therein mentioned, apply, by petition, to the Queen and Councils for a prolongation of his term; and if the consideration of the petition shall be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the petitioner, as also persons entering caveats against the prolongation, are to be heard by their counsel, whereupon the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council may report to the Queen in favor of a further extension of the term granted, not exceeding seven years, and her Majesty is thereby authorized and empowered to extend letters-patent for seven years, if she so please. That is in substance the British statute upon that subject. There is no further extension of patents under their laws; but I do not apprehend that to be necessary, in order to enable parties obtaining patents here to avail themselves of the benefits of patents in the British Provinces. I am not familiar enough with it to speak with perfect confidence on this subject; but so far as I have information, I understand that at any time during the existence of a patent under our laws, whether it be under the original letters patent, or by a renewal of a patent, a similar patent may be obtained under the authority of the British Government. If I am correct about that matter—if this is the case, then all the party has to do is to avail himself of the means which are within his own hands to afford protection.

My friend from Connecticut [Mr. TOUCER] has very well said that the impropriety of the conduct is on the part of the person who fraudulently shall go across the line and manufacture these articles—that it is the manufacturer whom we ought to touch. Then I reply, the party himself has within his power the very instrument by which he may touch the manufacturer. He has within his power the very instrument by which, upon application and obtaining a patent from the foreign Government, he may control the entire matter within the jurisdiction of the British Queen, as well as within the limitations of our own jurisdiction. This, it seems to me, would be the proper remedy.

I have heard it suggested elsewhere that the amount to be paid for obtaining patents within the British Provinces is so enormous, that parties ought not to be turned over to that remedy, but should receive a more easy and convenient one under the authority of our own laws; but I have been informed by a gentleman very familiar with that matter, this morning, that the expense of renewing patents within any of the British Provinces is only $125, and that this renewal may be obtained from the legal authorities representing the British Government, and application may be made to the Home Government for a patent to be granted to embrace any portion of that great kingdom, whether England, for which the price is $750, or Scotland, for which the price is $500, or Ireland, for which the price is $125, or any of the Provinces for the same amount.

Mr. MILLER. I would ask the Senator whether it is not the fact that no one can get a patent renewed in Canada unless he be a British subject? That is what I understand.

Mr. FELCH. Mr. President, I am sorry that I have but little information upon this subject. I believe we are all without as much information as we ought to have. I cannot therefore answer the question directly. But I understand that is not so, from a gentleman who is familiar with this matter. But it is certainly true, that whether the rule is so or not, by an application to the Home Government, a patent may be obtained embracing all the Provinces, so that there can be no difficulty that I see in the way of a patentee availing himself of all the privileges of a British patent.

Mr. HUNTER. I went to the Patent Office on Saturday, for the purpose of ascertaining these facts. I could not find any book there containing the English laws on the subject; but the Commissioner of Patents told me that he was under the impression that a patent might be obtained for the Provinces alone, and might be obtained by others than subjects of Great Britain.

Mr. FELCH. So I am informed by a gentleman who has recently had occasion to examine into the patent laws, and make application for patents, as well in Great Britain as from other Governments on the Continent, and I think there can be no doubt of it.

If this is the case, I go back to my original proposition: Why should a party here not resort to the remedy which is already in his power? The amount which he has to pay for it is comparatively small. And, in relation to this very patent now spoken of here, for a machine for making irregular forms, it is well known that, not only is an immense fortune within the grasp of the patentees, but it has already been reached by them, and large amounts are still within their grasp, by pursuing their legal rights, without asking anything further from Congress.

Sir, when so simple a process will secure all the rights which these parties desire, I ask if it is prudent for us to legislate in the manner here proposed? With these numerous articles thrown abroad upon the community, in use every day, everywhere, in every art, in every science, and in every practical operation of everyday business, I ask if it is proper for us to open the door here to suits against every person who shall deal in those articles, who may use those articles, or who may have anything to do with them? In my opinion, the remedy which can now be obtained is a sufficient one for the patentees in this case; at least, it seems so to me, from the information which I now possess, and from all the information which has been given to us by Senators who have discussed this subject this morning. It seems to me that the passage of such a bill as this will lead to litigation and to great collisions, as well as throw an embarrassment upon the whole business transactions connected with this matter. The simple process, it seems to me, in this case, as in most others, is the best one; and the remedy which is now afforded is the remedy to which the parties ought to resort, if they desire to obtain an exclusive right to the use and manufacture of the articles for which they have especial benefit under their patents.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it seems to have been admitted by the Senator from Maine, in answer to some remark made by the Senator from Virginia, that there is a difficulty in this bill in that point to which the Senator from Virginia objected. There seems to be a good deal of doubt in the minds of some Senators as to what the patent laws are in some of the British Provinces. Originally I was very much opposed to the introduction of the word "use" into this bill. I thought it was liable to the objections which have been urged against it. But, as I have always great diffidence in my own opinions, I suggested to some of my friends that if they could satisfy my friend from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] on that point, I would vote for the bill with that word in it.

I think that all these things being considered, we had better let this bill lie over until to-morrow; and I am the more anxious to let it lie over for this reason: We are pressed with regard to these patent rights, and patentees, and patent laws. By looking into a bill which passed this body last Thursday, I find that we passed an act which I think no member of the Senate, or certainly not more than one or two, would have been willing to pass, if they had read it; and I desire to submit to-day a motion to reconsider the vote passing that bill, for this is the last day on which I can make that motion. I think it is evident that we are not in a state to pass this bill to-day. I therefore move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw it.

Mr. MILLER. I merely wish to say, that I hope the question will be taken on this bill to-day. This bill has passed through the ordeal of the Senate once before. It passed this body at the last session. We have spent now two or three days upon it, and it is important that it should be passed soon.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator say that the bill, as it now is, passed the Senate at the last session, or that it then contained the word "use?"

Mr. MILLER. It did not then contain that word; but I am ready to take the question on striking that out, and I hope we shall have the question on the bill. While I am up, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia one question about the right or privilege of obtaining patents in Canada. Does he understand that a patent may be renewed in Canada by anybody but a subject of Great Britain?

Mr. HUNTER. I understood distinctly that a patent could not be renewed either in Canada or in the mother country.

Mr. MILLER. That is precisely the case, as I understand. A patent for this machine was originally taken out in England, but it has expired and cannot be renewed.

Mr. HUNTER. A patent can be renewed for anything new, either in England or in the Provinces.

Mr. MILLER. A patent for the machine for cutting irregular figures was originally taken out in England. That patent expired, and of course cannot be renewed. I hope we shall have no more debate on the subject, but shall take the vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One word in reply to the new argument started by the Senators from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] and Michigan, [Mr. FELCH.] They seem to think that if you can obtain a patent for an American invention in a foreign country, it ought to be resorted to before giving adequate protection here. I am against that doctrine in toto. I never will consent to send an American author or inventor into England, or Canada, or France, or Africa, or Asia, and all over the world, to get a patent before giving him the constitutional right of protection to his writings and inventions in our own country. In regard to many inventions, if you put this duty, and impose this obligation upon the inventor, you absolutely deprive him of that right which the Constitution of the United States intended to secure to him, and you put upon him more trouble, in running over the world to hunt patents to secure his invention and to prevent the manufacturing of the articles abroad than his invention is really worth in a pecuniary point of view. I look upon it as degrading to the legislation of the country to impose any such duty as this upon an American inventor before properly securing him at home. It is unquestionably the law, that if an invention is made here and not patented in England, France, or any other foreign country, the people of the foreign country may use it as they please. What we ask is, that when they use it, and our citizens do not choose to take out a patent there, you will prevent them from bringing their productions, identical with those patented here, in competition with the patentee here. Under the Constitution of the United States it is your duty to give protection at home. I therefore object, totally, to the ground started now, upon which this bill is opposed.

I have a few words to add in regard to the "use." If you strike out that word, all along upon the line, your bill will not be worth a picayune. It will be worth nothing at all, because every man on our side of the line, may go from within thirty or forty miles with his carryall, and pack it with productions manufactured on the other side of the line, bring them here, and use them as much as he pleases. He could do it in open defiance, in daylight, intending at the time to go into the foreign territory, and bring the articles here and use them, in violation of the rights of the patentee. If he does it knowingly and designedly, and you can bring the scientia home to him, he is a fraudulent user of the article, in violation of the rights of the patentee, and I am willing to punish him; but if he has no such knowledge, if you cannot bring the scientia home to him, you cannot touch him under the bill; he is an innocent user of the thing, and he is protected, and the only possible injury he can sustain, the only conceivable injury you can bring upon a citizen who innocently uses the article is, that some individual may charge him with doing it knowingly, and bring a suit against him. Why, we are all liable to be sued without cause for anything on earth. A man may bring a suit for debt, for trespass, for anything without the shadow of right; and that is the only thing that can be said here—that you may charge an individual with having knowledge when he had not, and sue him upon that charge. But that is not likely, because the costs and expenses will ultimately fall upon the patentee who brings the suit, and it is not likely that he will institute a groundless action against any one. I think if you strike out the word "use," the bill is worth nothing, in fact. I do not think I would vote for it, because it would be doing injustice to the people who live along the line, and who claim the right of property in these inventions.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. President, practically I have very little knowledge of patents, and really I have very little knowledge of the patent laws in detail; but I think I do understand enough both of patents and the patent laws to see that there is one, and perhaps more than one, very important principle involved in this bill. My opposition to it is based altogether upon what I consider the principles involved, without any regard to the details of its practical operation.

A few words, in the first place, as to what is complained of here—as to the hardship which the owners of this patent now have to suffer. Why, sir, I learn, upon inquiry, that this patent was originally obtained as far back as 1819, both in England and the United States; that it has been renewed in the United States, at the Patent Office; and then, when our general laws refused it a still further extension, the owners of the patent came to the Congress of the United States and obtained a special act in 1848 for fourteen years' further extension, which grants them the right for ten years to come. Then it seems to me, if any people upon earth claiming the benefit of exclusive use of their invention, have ever had cause to be satisfied with the legislation of Congress, these very persons are the men. They have got the benefit of a patent in England, and have got the full benefit of two terms of the patent by our general laws in the United States, and they are now enjoying the third term in the United States, to the exclusion of everybody else. And sir, it is no answer to this to say, that they have made no money out of their patent. I hope it is not to be contended here, as an argument in their favor, that we are bound to guaranty them not only the exclusive use of their invention, but also profits from it. If so, we had better make a special appropriation out of the Treasury, at once, of so many thousands of dollars as they estimate the patent should be worth to them. But this is not to the merits of the case.

The main principle upon which I object to this bill is, that it is special legislation, and very limited and exclusive legislation. It does not propose to put these persons upon the same footing with everybody else. It makes a special exception in their favor. The friends of the bill even refuse to extend it further. The original proposition here, as I understand it, is to limit this bill to a particular kind of manufacture—to give no other person protection. It was proposed to be limited to articles made out of wood, as if articles made out of leather, or cloth, or metal, or anything else, were not entitled to equal protection with those made out of wood. The object, as I understand it to be avowed by the advocates of this bill, is to make it for the special and particular benefit of this particular patent. When I suggested that we should make it general, and extend it to all kinds of manufactures and manufacturers in countries beyond the seas, as well as in adjacent territories, I was answered that there was no necessity; that this is the only case in which there has been an abuse. Why, sir, because this has been so in the past, there is no reason why we should assume that it is to be so in all time to come. I object to any legislation which looks to a particular case, unless it be impossible that another case of that kind shall ever occur.

Sir, by special legislation in regard to patents, and these temporary and temporizing modifications of our patent laws, we have now got a system which I venture to say no Senator will rise on this floor, and assert that he understands. Ever since I have had the honor of a seat in this body the patent laws have been the subject of dispute, and I have rarely found any one instance where any two Senators agreed in the construction of the laws. The patent laws have been so modified to suit particular cases year after year, from the very first patent law to the present time, that no one can understand them. This, too, will add to the compilation of our system of patent laws. Now, so far as I have been able to look into them, and inquire into their operation, they are mere traps. They have actually created systems of attorneyships and agencies, which stand like so many hawks, ready to pounce upon and confuse any man's mind when he has made an invention. The Patent Office here is so fenced in now by this horde of agents and attorneys that a simple individual living in the country, making an invention, cannot find approach to the Patent Office, except through one of these, and by paying him a large fee. To my mind, if we pass this bill, we start a horde of patent missionaries through this country, to hunt up and follow every article of manufacture through the country, and institute suits to fill our courts of justice with litigation; and whether they protect the rights of the original patentee or not, they take care to fill their own pockets in the course of the operation. I deem it proper to say, and I will say it on all occasions when I see our lobbies here filled, as they are now filled, or if not wholly full, occupied by attorneys and agents who are to be paid for this operation, that they are boring and annoying the Senate. Why, I have been called from my seat half a dozen times by those who are to make profit out of this thing. The original inventor, in my opinion, has no interest in it. He may be broken down, and his rights, if he ever had any, may have passed into the hands of that very horde—that lobby gang, who come here to bore and annoy the Senate, and occupy their time with legislation, not for the support of any great principle, not for any great public benefit, but to fill their own pockets—mere harpies, who watch and are constantly on the look-out for "the feast of reason," (if I may so call it,) which flows out from the minds of the great inventors of our country, trying to defile it with putting their sordid claws upon it. That, sir, is my opinion of the effect of this legislation, and the source from which it sprang.

Now, as to the bill itself, and its provisions: it seems to me if the object be to conform to the proper principle in this case, and to give the right sort of protection in the right direction, it would simply place all inventors, whether they work in wood or metals, leather or cloth, upon the same footing by extending the protection which patentees now have against the use and operation of these machines, or all machines, within our territory, to all the productions of such machines which come in upon us from foreign countries. As the Senator from Michigan has said, these persons have now the same right to go to foreign countries, that they have in our own, and obtain patents. The individual from whose case this bill has arisen has not, because he has exhausted all principle, all patience, all propriety in his applications. Not content with getting the exclusive use of his invention for a limited term as the Constitution provides, he is for extending it into all time. The Senator from New York read from the Constitution that Congress had power, and therefore it became our duty to give protection. I admit it to be a duty—and one which I am always ready to perform—to secure to inventors the exclusive use of these inventions for a limited term of years. Our general laws gave these parties a patent for two terms. By a special law we have gone further in this case. We have complied with the requisition of the Constitution; we have given the "exclusive right" to this individual, and secured to him all the benefits which a reasonable man of conscience could ask. I am willing, and if I were familiar enough with our patent laws to draw up an amendment to that effect, I would propose to substitute for the first section of the bill one simply giving to all inventors in the United States the same protection against the use of their inventions in foreign countries, and the importation of their products into the country that we now give against citizens operating within our own limits. For such a bill as that I would be willing to vote, but never could think of voting for the bill in its present form.

Mr. GEYER. Mr. President, the object of this bill is doubtless a good one; but according to my reading of it there are defects in it, which it will be necessary to correct, or it will introduce more mischiefs than will be remedied by it. The first objection I have is to the word "use," introduced on motion of the Senator from Kentucky. As the bill now stands, any person who uses an article manufactured by a machine patented in the United States, if so manufactured in one of the Provinces adjoining the United States, is to be liable to an action. The honorable Senator from Kentucky informs us that no person is likely to sue unless he has a cause of action; and that therefore the community is perfectly secure against improvident actions being brought. I would inform that honorable Senator, that as the patent laws now stand they do not afford a guarantee to persons against suits brought in courts of justice that sit at but one point. Ordinarily a man is sued in his own immediate neighborhood, and is subjected to no great inconvenience in attending court. But the patent laws, as they now stand, have been made the means of levying black mail upon a very considerable number of our citizens residing remote from the seats of government of our States, where the United States courts are generally held, or in my own State from the city of St. Louis, where the circuit court is held. The patentee will commence his action—he does it upon calculation—against a person residing a great distance from the place of holding the court. Ordinarily these individuals do not understand our patent laws, and they are obliged to consult some professional man, and they are put to an expense for which they are not indemnified. Rather than do that they will pay a small penalty. They prefer doing that to litigation. I know that to have been the case. Where men have been sued for the use of patented articles, when they were told of the expense to which they would be put, and the time they would necessarily lose in attending court, they said it would be better to compromise with the man and pay him something. Now, if persons who use manufactured articles are to be proceeded against in our courts, a guarantee should be afforded, so that when an action is to be brought the patentee should be made responsible for all the expenses to which the party who may be sued shall be subjected, if a groundless action be brought.

But, sir, there is another objection. It seems to me that the bill has been framed with a view rather of providing remedies for patentees than guarding the rights of other parties now entitled to protection. A machine that may be patented in the United States, and a similar machine, or a substantial modification of it may also be patented in one of the Provinces, as Canada, for instance, by the Crown of Great Britain; its owners may manufacture an article and send it into the United States; and if there is a patent here, whether of earlier or later date, whether it is held by the real inventor or not, the patentee here is to have, according to this bill, a cause of action against all persons who vend that article, and all who use it.

Again: the patentee of a machine may sell the machine itself; he may sell it to a man who lives on the opposite side of the line—immediately adjoining the line, and the articles which are manufactured from that machine, if introduced into the United States, according to this bill, subject the vender, and the vendee, and the user to penalties.

The bill is broad enough to cover all these; for it is not confined to the particular case mentioned by the honorable Senator from New Jersey. It goes further; in all cases of patents, the patentee may have a patent from the Crown of Great Britain, for the same machine; he may have a patent in the United States, which he does not choose to use at all; or he may use both. His right to recover, according to this bill, will not depend upon the existence of a patent in a foreign country, but upon the fact of an article being manufactured by the machine, or some substantial modification of the machine, of which he is the patentee here. It will be no defense, as this bill stands, to answer the patentee: "You either sold the machine by which it was manufactured, or you have a patent for it from a foreign Government—from the Government within whose jurisdiction it was manufactured;" or that "the same machine is patented to a subject of the Crown of Great Britain, and there lawfully manufactured."

Now, sir, it seems to me, that the bill ought to be guarded in these respects. We ought to have some guarantee that a man will come into court, when he does come at all, with clean hands, and not merely aver that he is the inventor of the machine. In order that the remedy, in which some of the Senators seem to be much interested, should be so guarded as to protect the rights of others, I move that this bill be committed to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. HALE. I made a motion to lay this bill on the table, but withdrew it at the request of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MILLER.] I supposed he had some particular object in view. I did not know, when I withdrew that motion, that it would give rise to a wide debate, which I see no prospect of ending. I rise now to make an appeal to the Senate. On Wednesday last, we passed a bill on the subject of patents. It has gone to the House of Representatives. I find, on inquiring of the President of the Senate, that it is necessary, before a motion can be submitted to reconsider the vote by which it was passed, to send a message to the House requesting them to return the bill; and I want to submit that motion. If we do not do it to-day, the remedy is gone, and we cannot make it again. I think there is not a Senator who will oppose it, when he understands the case. The facts are briefly these: There was a law authorizing the chief clerk of the Patent Office to act in the absence, or vacancy of the office of the Commissioner, and it became doubtful whether it was broad enough to cover patents issued by him; and they came here, I suppose, with the intent that Congress should pass an act, that patents issued by the chief clerk, in the absence of the Commissioner, should be as valid as if signed by the Commissioner. That was the end intended to be accomplished. But, instead of that, the Senate passed a bill, that all patents signed by the chief clerk should be valid in law, without any qualification. It does not say, as valid as if signed by the Commissioner; but that they shall be valid, no matter whether obtained by fraud or not.

Mr. SEWARD. What are the words of the bill?

Mr. HALE. It enacts "that all such acts of the chief clerk of the Patent Office and of the Commissioner of Patents, shall be held and deemed valid and effectual in law." That is the whole sentence; not as valid and effectual as if signed by the Commissioner, but they shall be valid and effectual in law. I want to get that bill back from the House, for the purpose of reconsidering the vote on its passage; and I move, for that purpose, to lay the bill now under consideration on the table.

Mr. MILLER. That motion can be submitted when this bill is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. Then the House may have adjourned, and the opportunity may be lost.

Mr. BORLAND. The motion can be submitted by unanimous consent, without laying the bill on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor in the chair.) If no objection is made, the bill can be passed over informally until the motion is received, and then be resumed.

No objection was made.

Mr. HALE. Then I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the House of Representatives, requesting the return to the Senate of the bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved July 4, 1836; and, also, "An act to provide for additional examiners in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1848.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I now move to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will have to be returned first to the Senate, before the vote can be reconsidered.

The consideration of the bill giving further remedies to patentees, was resumed—the question being on the motion to commit it to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BRADBURY. The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. The chairman of the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office is not now in his seat, and he may be some days absent. That would seem to be a sufficient reason, if the bill is to be recommitted at all, that it should be to the Committee on the Judiciary. But I think that the Senator who made the motion will not, upon reflection, think it necessary to insist upon it. He will find that the objections which have passed across his mind can be obviated by a very brief explanation. He anticipates that inconvenience may result, to an individual who has a right to use a machine for the manufacture of irregular forms upon the other side of the line, having a patent there, because he could not import his articles here. Now, if the honorable Senator will recollect, when the right to use a machine is sold, it is sold to be used in a particular territory, and the right to use it for manufacturing articles to supply the Canadas, for instance, would not, fairly considered, justify the abuse of undertaking to supply the whole United States in consideration of the purchase of the right to use it in a limited territory.

Again: the honorable Senator says that a patent might be obtained from abroad; and that we would prohibit the introduction of articles where a patent existed. If the patent were granted, not to the original American patentee or assignee, but to a third party, for the purpose of defrauding that patentee, there would be an additional necessity for such a law as we propose: for surely we would not consent that a foreign Government should appropriate to itself a machine of ours, and confer the right to use it upon a citizen who had no claim to it, and then allow the individual, without the claim, to be protected in this country.

One other objection was adverted to by the honorable Senator from Missouri, for whose opinions I entertain great respect. He seemed to think that there was not sufficient protection against innocent persons being annoyed by suits. Now, there is more than the ordinary protection in this case. For, in the first place, the application in equity must be verified by oath, setting forth the facts. In the second place, the judge of the court must be satisfied of the truth of all the facts alleged in the application is issued before any process. Ordinarily we know that there is no such protection as this. Again, there is the further protection that, upon a hearing, the patentee or assignee has to make it appear satisfactorily that the individual complained of purchased the article and used it in known violation of the law.

The honorable Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] felt great horror lest harpies should fill their pockets through the legislation of Congress. I agree with the Senator in the feeling that they should not; and, as I know, upon reflection, he would not desire that those harpies should undertake to appropriate the inventions of others to their own use by passing over the line of our territory into a contiguous foreign territory, with the sentiments he avowed he should be the last man who would withhold any legislation necessary to prevent such a fraud.

Mr. BORLAND. The honorable Senator does not misunderstand my views on this subject. I made the suggestion—which if those who will be the beneficiaries of the bill were really in earnest and desired no more than sufficient protection against frauds, they would concur in—and I now make the suggestion to the Senator, and I hope he will adopt it, and then we will agree, as it seems now we agree in the object to be accomplished, to put these persons and all other patentees on the same footing as regards persons operating across the line in a foreign territory, as to protection against invasion of their patents by our own citizens.

Mr. BRADBURY. Then it is only a question of form, and the manner of accomplishing the same object. I would suggest to the Senator that experience has found that there is a necessity of reaching an article used by a person knowingly in violation of law, as already explained; but we cannot protect the parties in cases of this kind by leaving them to depend upon the action of foreign Governments. The law of Great Britain relative to the subject has been adverted to. It appears that after a patent has been granted, no extension can be permitted, except upon petition to the Queen. If the Queen sees fit, she may refer the petition to the Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council; and if that Committee see fit, and the Council adopt their report, the matter may then be referred back to the Queen, and she, if she pleases, may grant a renewal of the patent. There are so many contingencies, that the remedy would be worthless; and I submit whether our citizens should be left to the caprice of a foreign Government. But, again, the extension in England could not reach beyond seven years.

In the case which gave rise to this bill—and I would remark that numerous petitions came in at the last session of Congress, from every portion of the country, setting forth the most glaring violation of the rights of patentees—I would beg leave to say, that there were reasons which operated in granting the extension of the patent to Mr. Blanchard, for the manufacture of irregular forms. It is said he is now enjoying the benefit of a second extension. That is true; but Congress was satisfied that it was a case of great merit, and that he had derived no benefit from the patent. He had devoted his days and nights for a long period of years to perfect his machinery; and so perfect has he made it, and so important is it, that he has reduced the manufacture of lasts from a dollar to something less than a shilling. It has taken years for him to accomplish this purpose. Having satisfied Congress, as he did, and as I have already shown by the reading of the letter of the late Commissioner of Patents, that he had derived little benefit from the Patent, and had devoted his time to the perfection of his machinery, the renewal was granted. The benefit of that extension is now wrested from him by the violators of the patent, who have passed over to the Canadian territory; and they are the last who ought to excite sympathy, or have any claim for protection. I hope we will not allow the harpies who are attempting to wrest from the original proprietors the enjoyment of their just rights, to succeed, and I think we should pass the bill without recommitting it. But if the honorable Senator who made the motion persists in it, I think he should modify it so as to send it to the committee from which it originally came.

The PRESIDENT. It is moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw that motion, and allow it to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEYER. I will withdraw the motion cheerfully if the honorable Senator from New York will agree to its reference to a special committee.

Mr. SEWARD. Very well.

Mr. GEYER. That course will sufficiently guard the bill. I think the Committee on the Judiciary have already proved that they are not familiar with the patent laws.

Mr. SEWARD. Very well. Let it be referred to a special committee.

Several SENATORS. "Oh, no; no! There is no necessity to refer it to a special committee."

Mr. MILLER. It is altogether unusual to commit a bill of this kind to a special committee. Gentlemen may talk about the Committee on the Judiciary not having investigated this matter; but I can tell them that it has already been investigated by a committee of the House of Representatives; that a long report has been made upon the subject, and that it has been three times investigated by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Gentlemen have moved various amendments, all of which are understood, and have been acted upon by the Senate, and I think that, generally, the Senate is prepared to act upon the bill. I do not see any necessity for delaying the matter further by recommitting the bill. The Committee on the Judiciary are well acquainted with the patent laws. They have had them before them, and with a full knowledge of their import have prepared this bill.

Mr. GEYER. I shall not insist on the motion to recommit the bill to a special committee, as it is not usual to raise select committees to which to refer bills of this kind. I will, therefore, renew the motion to refer it to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this discussion. I do not rise to debate the merits of this bill, now before the Senate. I am perfectly satisfied with what I have heard on the subject, and design to vote for it. But, sir, I rise to say a single word to my friend, the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND,] in relation to the denunciations which he has seen fit to pass on those whom he terms "lobby members," or borers. How just his denunciations may be, or how applicable to those who have disturbed that Senator by calling him from his seat, I, of course, do not know, and shall say nothing in relation thereto; but I must say to him that those persons from the State of New Jersey, who have been explaining this measure, outside of the Senate, to me and to those who, like me, were willing to be informed by them, are among my most respected and valued constituents, and among the most useful and respectable citizens of the State of New Jersey. He may rely upon this, that any representation made by them to him or to any one, will be made in all honesty and truth; and that they have no designs other than those manifested on the face of the bill; namely, the protection of the patentee, who has been but poorly remunerated for his great and beneficial services to society. I hope that the Senator will be satisfied that he is in no danger from those gentlemen—my constituents—and that he will give them his kind consideration, either in or out of the Senate, because they are in every way entitled to the most respectful confidence.

Mr. BORLAND. The remarks I made in reference to those whom I designated as "borers," and whom I regard as a great nuisance to the Senate, had no application to individuals. Whether they are citizens of the State of New Jersey, I am unable to say. I did not know their names, and I do not know them now; therefore, the testimony that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] bears to their high and respectable character, I assume to be well deserved, and have no disposition to controvert. I was speaking of a practice which has grown up, and of which I am not the only one to complain. With the agents, or attorneys of patentees, or persons who are to be the beneficiaries of special legislation, I have nothing further to do, than to remark that the evil has grown up from the practice of their coming here, as I have already shown; and I have spoken of that practice in terms of condemnation to-day, as I have always done. I did it, if I may be permitted to say so, more with a view to my own protection in future, than from a hope that any benefit would be conferred on the country. I am free to admit that I have been greatly interrupted and interfered with, and that my time, which belongs to my constituents, and which I am anxious to devote to their welfare, has been greatly interfered with by this class of persons. Who they are, I know not; I only know that the practice is a source of great annoyance, which I desire to get rid of, and of which I hope that the Senate will get rid. I think it constitutes a very great objection to special legislation for companies and patentees; I mean the very serious evils brought on us by this consumption of time. Whether the influence which they seek to bring to bear on us have any effect or not, I think it is a great evil, and has a bad appearance before the country. I hope we shall be freed from it. It is almost sufficient to defeat any bill specially legislating for the benefit of individuals. It not only, in my opinion, violates a great principle, but it renders necessary a large consumption of time, and places the Senate in a position before the country, which is anything but pleasant.

Mr. MALLORY. I trust the motion to refer this bill to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, will not prevail. I am in favor of recommitting the bill, but not to a new committee, unless some substantial reason can be given for withdrawing it from the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary. Such a recommitment is unusual, and an inference unfavorable to the Committee on the Judiciary might be drawn from its recommitment to any other committee. The Committee on the Judiciary have enjoyed the advantage of hearing the objections which have been urged against this bill; and, if it is recommitted to that committee, they will confine their attention to these objections, and endeavor so to modify the bill as to obviate them if they should be of opinion that they have weight. Unless, therefore, I can have some good reason assigned for withdrawing it from that committee, it strikes me that that course would not be treating that committee with the courtesy which it ought to receive at the hands of this body.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is to refer the bill to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to amend the motion by striking out the words "Committee on Patents and the Patent Office," and inserting the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT. That amendment cannot be made. The Committee on the Judiciary is one of the Standing Committees of the Senate, and the proposition cannot be amended by a motion to refer to another committee. The question must be taken on the motion as proposed, which is to refer the bill to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. HAMLIN. Vote it down.

The question was taken, and the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office was not agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SEWARD. I suggested that motion, but I shall vote against it, because I think the bill is as perfect as it can be made now. The Senator from Arkansas thinks that the public time is misspent in the discussion of this, which is a private matter. I have only to say on that subject, that the Constitution of the United States devolves upon Congress the passage of such laws as will protect private citizens in the enjoyment of the fruits of their own genius and intellectual labor; and if the laws we have are—as we know they are—defective, we only perform a constitutional duty in making them adequate to that purpose. And there is no interest of society so important, no constitutional duty so obligatory upon Congress as that of protecting the rights of every individual citizen. All other interests will take care of themselves if the rights of property, which Government undertakes to protect and secure, are held sacred and inviolable.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not intend to say another word, but the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] have gratified me so much that I cannot refrain from adding a word or two in relation to them. I feel rejoiced, Mr. President, and the country, too, ought to rejoice, that the Senator from New York has announced to the Senate and the country that he regards the obligation of Congress, under the Constitution, to pass laws to secure the rights of property to the citizen. Sir, that announcement from that Senator is, in my opinion, most important to the Senate of the United States and the country at large. I do hope that we shall have good fruits from it in time to come. I am rejoiced to hear that the Constitution is upheld by that Senator upon the floor of the Senate, as the highest law, above which there can be no higher, and that we owe an obligation, by the oath which we have taken at that desk to sustain it as the supreme law of the land above all others.

Sir, I have no more to say upon that subject, but I will repeat what I suppose the Senator did not hear me say a little while ago in support of the position which I took in reference to this bill, that we had complied with the requirements of the Constitution in this case by the patentee first obtaining his patent for his regular time, and then by giving him an extension of it; and then an extension of it again which has yet ten years to run. I say, therefore, that in this instance our constitutional duty has been already performed.

The question was then taken on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it was found that there was no quorum voting.

Mr. BORLAND. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WALKER. I move a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. No such motion can be made under the rules.

Mr. WALKER. Do the rules exclude such a motion?

The PRESIDENT. The rules do not exclude it in so many words, but the Constitution provides the mode by which a quorum may be obtained.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was agreed to, and
The Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 15, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, on the subject of the disorders on the Rio Grande frontier, and recommending the further legislation which the report suggests, in order that the duties and obligations of the Government occasioned thereby may be more effectually discharged, and the peace and security of the inhabitants of the United States in that quarter more efficiently maintained; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

OUTRAGES ON SPANISH SUBJECTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, accompanied by a communication from His Excellency Senor Don A. Calderon de la Barca, Minister Plenipotentiary of her Catholic Majesty, claiming indemnity for those Spanish subjects in New Orleans who sustained injury from the violence of the mob in that city, consequent upon hearing the news of the execution of those persons who invaded Cuba in August, 1851. The President of the United States suggests that there may be one ground upon which this indemnity, which cannot be large in amount, may be granted without establishing a dangerous precedent, which is, to grant an indemnity to the Spanish subjects who have suffered from the violence of the mob in return for the act of magnanimity by which the Queen of Spain, in a case where the United States had no legal right to solicit the favor, restored many misguided youth of this country to their parents and friends, and submits it to the favorable consideration of Congress. The message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly called the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ADAMS presented the petition of Daniel Comfort, praying to be released from further liability as one of the sureties of Lewis Bond, formerly postmaster at Clinton, Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHIELDS presented two petitions of citizens of Illinois, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly called the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHARLTON presented a memorial of the Mayor and Aldermen of Savannah, Georgia, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the Savannah river; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. RUSK presented the petition of Samuel A. Belden, in relation to his claim against Mexico.

Ordered, That it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed in connection with the message of the President of the United States on the subject.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was Ordered, That the message of the President of the United States in relation to the claim of Samuel A. Belden against Mexico, communicated the 3d instant, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

RECESS.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns it be to Saturday next.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of Thomas Mullett, praying compensation as a surveyor of public lands, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred a petition of citizens of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, for the establishment of a daily line of mail-steamers between Louisville and New Orleans, reported a bill for the establishment of mail routes on the Mississippi river; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred various memorials in relation to the establishment of steam lines between certain ports, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to authorize the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the transportation of the United States mail in steam-vessels between the ports therein mentioned; which was read and passed to the second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the memorial of Henry Mankin, and the memorial of the Amazonian Steamship Company, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill providing for a contract to carry the mail between some southern port of the United States and the port of Para, on the river Amazon, and other ports; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the construction of military roads in Oregon Territory, reported the same without amendment.

PATENT LAWS.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. HAYES, its chief clerk, announcing that, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, it had returned a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts heretofore made for that purpose," approved July 4, 1836; and also "An act to provide additional examiners in the Patent Office, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1848.

Mr. HALE. That is a bill which the Senate yesterday requested the House of Representatives to return. It is now too late to move a reconsideration of the vote passing that bill, without unanimous consent. I made the motion to request the return of the bill yesterday, supposing that it would then be returned, and that I could move a reconsideration of the vote passing the bill. I rise now to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the purpose of making the motion.

The PRESIDENT. The motion cannot be strictly made at this time; but by unanimous consent the Chair will receive it.

Mr. HALE. I suppose there can be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT. The motion cannot be strictly made at this time; but inasmuch as a message was sent to the House of Representatives yesterday, and inasmuch as the motion to reconsider would have been made yesterday, if the House had returned the bill then, the Chair presumes that there will not be any objection to the reconsideration of the vote passing the bill. The Chair, therefore, if there is no objection, will receive the motion to reconsider.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I wish now to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, so that I may be able to offer an amendment to it. I am willing to let the motion lie over.

The motion was received and laid over.

WAR STEAMER FOR HARBOR DEFENSE.

On the motion of Mr. SEWARD, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the joint resolution authorizing the completion of a war steamer for harbor defense; which requires the Secretary of the Navy to have completed, without unnecessary delay, the war steamer contracted for with Robert L. Stevens, in pursuance of the act of Congress of April 14th, 1842.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, this resolution relates to an important subject. I am not prepared to vote for it as it now stands. This is an old contract with Mr. Stevens, in relation to which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Stockton] addressed us some time ago—a contract which has been suspended twice, I believe, and renewed. I have taken some pains to look into the papers connected with it; and although, I confess, I have not all the information which I should desire upon the subject, yet I have come to this conclusion, that I should be very willing to pay Mr. Stevens all that the experiment has cost him so far, but I am inclined to the opinion that we ought not to prosecute it further.

This contract, sir, arose out of a law passed in 1842, by which the Secretary of the Navy was required to contract with Robert L. Stevens for a ship to be built, mainly of iron, "according to the plan of said Stevens," and to be "shot and shell proof." The contract was made. Before the time expired, Mr. Stevens desired an extension of the time, and I believe the extension was granted by the Secretary of the Navy; but it was subsequently stopped, because he had not furnished the Navy Department with his plan. He insisted that he was not bound to furnish the Navy Department with his plan. They, on the other hand, took the ground that he was bound, and, I think, with propriety; because the law required the vessel to be built, "shot and shell proof." The Navy Department, therefore, had a right to know what the plan was, in order to ascertain whether it was or was not likely to be shot and shell proof.

Mr. STOCKTON. Facts are very important in this matter, and it is quite as important to understand them as we proceed. This must be my apology for interrupting the gentleman from Virginia. I know he does not design or wish to state anything which is not the fact. I insist that there is no official evidence that Mr. Stevens refused to show his plan. I have the contracts here in my hands, in which his plan is fully set forth. In my judgment that was a mere pretense on the part of the Department. I repeat, he has submitted his plans, and if the gentleman will read the contracts, he will there find them specified in detail, from beginning to end.

Mr. HUNTER. Well, sir, there is difference of opinion about the subject. I inquired of Commodore Morris and Commodore Shubrick, and I think they are of opinion that he failed to furnish a plan, or at least such a plan as was contemplated by the law. At any rate, that was the ground of objection raised by the Navy Department. In the original contract, I believe Mr. Stevens bound himself to build a vessel which should resist shot weighing not more than sixty-four pounds. I am told that the British Navy are already using guns which send balls of greatly more than that weight, and that a vessel which would only resist shot of that size would not be sufficient for the purposes of harbor defense, with the means of war that are now known. Under these circumstances it seems to me that it would perhaps be best for the United States, and as well for Mr. Stevens, not to prosecute the enterprise further. But, as it is a matter into which he has been led in part by the action of the Government, which made a contract with him, I am very willing to vote what may be necessary to compensate him for any outlay to which he may have been put, for the prosecution of the contract—not to give him any profit, of course, but to save him from all loss. I think, if we were to enter into the history of all these transactions, it would be found that that is as much as he ought to ask; and I think he ought not to desire to prosecute the enterprise further, if, owing to the discoveries in modern warfare, the discoveries in projectiles since that period, such a ship as he proposes to build would not answer the purposes contemplated.

I understand, Mr. President, that the gun invented by the Senator from New Jersey himself, sent a ball through the plates which were designed by Mr. Stevens for the construction of this steamer. That was a twelve-inch gun.

We have in use, I am told, ten inch guns, and the British Government are using eleven inch guns. At least I am so informed by persons better acquainted with this subject than I am. This makes it probable that this experiment cannot succeed for purposes of harbor defense. It is not probable that Mr. Stevens could make a ship which would resist the projectiles now known.

Mr. BAYARD. Are the eleven or ten-inch shot of which the Senator speaks, solid shot, or not?

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know; but I know that Commodore Morris told me they were shot of greater weight than sixty-four pounds; and I think, though I will not speak with certainty on this point, that he told me some of these shot would weigh one hundred and twenty pounds.

Mr. STOCKTON. If the Senator from Virginia will permit me, I can relieve him from all difficulty in regard to that objection.

The first objection made by the honorable Senator is, that Mr. Stevens refused to submit the plan of his steamer to the Department. Sir, I say again, the plan was submitted, and is now here before me. In regard to this other objection, as to the improvement of shot, I have to say that I am quite willing that the resolution should be so amended as to require Mr. Stevens to construct a vessel that will be proof against any shell or shot now in use in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. HUNTER. That would relieve the resolution in part. But it is to be remembered that this contract requires the Government of the United States to advance for materials as he goes along; and what security are we to have, in the event that he should fail in resisting any projectiles known at the time of the completion of the ship, that the money will be returned? Now, if it is designed to save the United States, there ought to be some provision in relation to that matter; for, by the time the vessel is completed, the Government will have advanced very nearly its cost, as I understand the contract. Therefore it seems to me that if the resolution is to take that shape, there ought to be some provision for refunding this money which will have to be advanced. In relation to the plan, I think there are certain things specified in the contract, but I do not think it specifies the thickness of the plates, or the mould or form of the vessel.

Mr. STOCKTON. The plates are to be four and a half inches thick.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that the thickness of the plate through which the Senator from New Jersey sent a ball with his gun?

Mr. STOCKTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I hope this resolution may pass. The contract with Mr. Stevens was made, not upon an assurance and a certainty that such a steamer as this could be built, but by way of experiment to ascertain whether it was possible; and to secure such a result, if it was possible. It was wisely made, if the character of Mr. Stevens for intelligence, sagacity, and science, gave a guarantee that he would ascertain this important result. No one can question that the character of Mr. Stevens afforded that guarantee. A more accomplished, scientific, mechanical engineer, does not exist in this, or any other country. The country is filled already with trophies of the success of his experiments.

It was wise, then, to obtain this measure of defense through this agency. And now I ask, whether anything has occurred to shake the confidence of the public in the success of the experiment? I submit that nothing has occurred; that the character of Mr. Stevens remains as unquestioned as before; and that he has prosecuted the experiment with diligence, with the most lavish expenditure of his own private means; and yet, at the same time, with caution marking every step—going across to England more than once for the purpose of obtaining materials there, which could not be obtained here.

This would seem, then, to be a question foreclosed, if the action of Congress ever forecloses debate. Congress went into this for the purpose of experiment. They went into it wisely. Having no substantial cause to recede, they are bound in good faith to him, and bound by considerations of the wisdom of the original proceeding, to prosecute it to an end. The question whether he submitted his plans to the Department, is a question that has passed. No material inconvenience or injury has resulted from it. If he did not at that time submit his plans, they are now before the Department. But we are told that Mr. Stevens cannot succeed in producing such a vessel as was contemplated. Sir, I remember that all the scientific men in England—and there are as scientific men there as anywhere—maintained that it was impossible to navigate the ocean between the two continents with steam. That was settled as a principle of science; established, it was supposed, by the savans of Europe, the very day when the Sirius and Great Britain arrived simultaneously from England in the harbor of New York. There is no way of knowing what cannot be done in science, but by trying.

Sir, I remember to have met a gentleman who told me that, in the year 1804, 1805, or 1806, when he was visiting Paris, at a dinner party at the American minister's, there was a young man exceedingly loquacious and offensive, because he engrossed too much of the conversation; and he confined his remarks to a single topic, and that was the subject of navigation by steam power alone. And he said to incredulous ears all around him, that if he could only get the sum of $10,000, he would, in two years from that date, have a steam-boat upon the Hudson river, which would navigate from the commercial to the political capital of the State of New York, at the rate of four miles an hour. He was voted an enthusiast. That young man was Robert Fulton. The Government did not furnish the means, but he obtained them from liberal patrons, and completed his experiments, and we have the vast result.

I remember also, sir, that when there was a project to establish communication by the use of the electric fluid, but a few years ago, it was maintained that that was impossible. Congress appropriated the money to be applied, in the hands of a scientific man, in whom the nation had confidence, that, if a desirable result could be obtained, he would produce it—and they gave it not grudgingly—to make the experiment between this city and Baltimore. In spite of incredulity here and elsewhere, the experiment was successfully carried through.

It would have been just as wise to have arrested Fulton in his first experiments, or to have given over the steam navigation on the Atlantic without an experiment, or to have arrested the progress of Morse in producing his invention, as it would be for you, in regard to Mr. Stevens's invention, to stop at the point where you are.

Mr. President, on the general question, it seems to me there can be no doubt. I remember, a few years ago, when the British Government demanded of the American Government the surrender of a subject of the Crown of Great Britain, who was arrested on a charge of crime in the State of New York, and intimations were made by the public newspapers and elsewhere, that, unless the demand was complied with within a given time, the port of New York would be bombarded by a British fleet; and British vessels were said to be on their way and hovering on our coast for that purpose. I remember the consternation and panic which was produced, not only in that great commercial capital, but throughout the United States, and that men were willing, without inquiring into the justice and merits of the question, or waiting to deliberate or debate upon it, to save the commercial capital of the country by surrendering to the demand of the foreign Power at once—to humble the nation at the feet of the mistress of the seas. That is precisely the condition in which we are to-day, and in which we shall be until we adopt some policy of defense for our great commercial towns; and I know no policy that can be adopted so wisely as to furnish to judicious, qualified, and scientific engineers the funds necessary to produce, if possible, a floating defense, to be used in aid and in coöperation with the stationary defenses of American ports. I hope, then, that the resolution may pass.

Mr. HUNTER. This case presents two questions. The first is, whether we have entered into a contract which binds us to proceed any further. If we have entered into such a contract, we are bound to go on. But so far as I have been able to determine, from the examination I have made with regard to that question, it seems to me that such is not the case. The law requires the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract to build a ship according to the plan of Mr. Stevens, which shall be shot and shell proof. I do not profess to have looked into all the papers relating to the proposition of Mr. Stevens, or to have examined them with great accuracy; but I have understood that the statement of the Navy Department is, that they suspended the contract because such a plan as they supposed the law to contemplate, was not presented to them. That is their ground, as I understand. If such a plan was not presented to them, I think they were justified by law in suspending the contract; because the law required Mr. Stevens to build a ship, composed of iron, which should be shot and shell proof. They had a right to look into the plan, in order that they might guard the Government against the loss which would be incurred by a visionary project.

Mr. STOCKTON. If the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] will excuse me, I must again and most positively insist that there is no evidence whatever to show that the Navy Department has ever even made that an excuse for not complying with the contract. If the gentleman has any official record to that effect in his possession let him show it. There is no such evidence. On the contrary, I believe that that never was the reason assigned for refusing to continue the payments to Mr. Stevens. If I understand the matter aright, that refusal arose simply from the fact that the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Preston, undertook to say that his predecessor had no right to continue the contract; and therefore he was bound to refrain from paying anything more, and to refer the matter to Congress. If the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] has any official information which can alter that state of the case, I should be glad to see it. I insist that the Secretary of the Navy was wholly wrong in his opinion, that his predecessor, Mr. Mason, had no authority to continue the contract; no doubt he thought so, and did not feel authorized to continue the payments, and therefore referred the matter to Congress; and that is the very reason why this resolution is now before the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. The statement which I made was drawn from Commodore Morris. The documents and papers which relate to the subject are very voluminous, and I have not had time to examine them fully, but I presume that the Navy Department would not discontinue the contract without some lawful ground. The reason which I have stated was regarded as sufficient, I believe. If my memory serves me correctly, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. STOCKTON] showed me the argument of the counsel of Mr. Stevens, in which he undertook to show that Mr. Stevens was not under the necessity of presenting his plan. At any rate, I think the Navy Department, consisting of a board of skillful, scientific, and experienced officers—gentlemen who thoroughly understood the business of their profession—had some ground upon which to act before they suspended this contract. And I say that if, under the circumstances, they were justified in doing it by the law, then the only other question which arises is, whether, admitting it was proper to suspend the contract, it would now be politic to enlarge or renew it. Here again we have only to rely upon the opinion of persons better skilled in such matters than I am. The Navy Department did not think it was politic to go on with this contract. I should suppose it would be satisfactory to all parties to compensate Mr. Stevens for what he has already laid out or lost, rather than to go on with it, especially as the contract calls for the construction of a battery or ship which would be able to resist a sixty-four pound shot. I believe a much larger projectile is now used than was in use at the time the contract was originally made. If this be so, then why should we build a ship, which, though it would have been efficient then, would not be so in the present state of naval science?

But the Senator from New York tells us that, because Fulton made great discoveries, and there were some very incredulous persons at that time, and because he succeeded, and because other men who have made discoveries have been met with incredulity, therefore it is improper to resist this application. That sort of argument would prevent us from opposing any scheme, no matter how visionary it might be. There was a better argument at hand, founded upon the reputation of this gentleman, who is a skillful engineer, and who has done a great deal for the cause of art, and something for that of science. But, sir, it seems to me that instead of adopting his opinion in relation to it, it would be a more prudent and cautious course to rely upon that which governed the Department; and therefore I was disposed to suspend the work till we have more information in relation to it.

I acknowledge that the opinion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Stockton] has great weight with me, because he, too, is an expert; and if there were not so decided an opinion upon the other side, and if I did not think there was substantial evidence as to the probability that this experiment could not succeed in the present state of naval science, I should go with him. But, as things now stand, I cannot vote for the resolution. If, however, it is so amended as to provide that Mr. Stevens shall be paid for the amount he has expended, or which he has lost in consequence of his experiments, I will go for that most cheerfully, because I think he was led into a contract by the Government. I do not think, however, that the contract, or the law, binds the Government to go any further, if the Department conceives that the experiment has failed.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I trust that this resolution will pass without the amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia. I know of no greater act of injustice that could be done to Mr. Stevens than that which is embraced in the proposition of the Senator from Virginia. A contract has been made with Mr. Stevens, by authority of an act of Congress. That contract has not been fulfilled; but the failure has not been on the part of Mr. Stevens, or in consequence of any negligence of his; but it has failed in its fulfillment because it was discontinued by the Department, and no reason for the discontinuance of that contract has yet been shown. No reason exists now why this law should not be passed which did not exist in equal force in April, 1842. I regard the construction of this vessel not altogether as an experiment; but if I did, I would still think the money to this extent would be well laid out, in order to test the principle. It is important that the United States should demonstrate that a proposition which has been maintained by scientific men of all nations—a proposition having an important bearing upon the defenses of this Republic—is either tenable or untenable. It has engaged the attention of Commodore Barron, General Gaines, and many other distinguished military men on both sides of the Atlantic; and it now comes from a man who stands at the head of his profession in this and in every other country—a man who has given the most valuable practical proofs of his knowledge. And shall we, when he offers to come forward, not with the view of making a job of it, not with any expectation of realizing pecuniary advantage to himself; when he lays before us the experience gleaned by a lifetime of observation, practice, and study, shall we cast his proposal aside because one or two naval officers who have, perhaps, never built a ship in their lives—shall we cast aside this suggestion because they may think it impracticable? I hope not, sir. No one entertains a higher respect for our naval officers than I do, especially when they confine themselves to their legitimate duties; and no one is more ready to listen to and appreciate their suggestions, when they speak of that which comes within the line of their proper avocation; but when they speak of things with which they are less conversant, and venture their opinions in opposition to those of Mr. Stevens, upon a question which he has so well examined, I must say, however highly I may estimate their talents in other respects, that their opinions are not entitled to any peculiar consideration.

Sir, the opinions of Mr. Stevens on this subject are more valuable than those of any person in the United States. When he first made this proposition, he found the coasts of the country, as they are to this day, comparatively defenseless. A careful examination has shown that every point upon our coast is vulnerable. The harbor of New York may be entered at any time, and the Empire city reduced to ashes, by the existing means of European naval warfare, notwithstanding the fortifications which you there have; and Mr. Stevens has brought forward his plan for the construction of a floating battery, designed to remedy this defect to some extent, and invited public attention to it. He made experiments, which were attended by a joint commission of military and naval officers; and that commission was fully satisfied that his proposed battery would resist any shot or shell used in naval warfare. The members of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York examined it, and have approved of it in terms equally strong. The navy commissioners examined it in the samelight, and recommended it for the same purpose. When, therefore, the proposition of Mr. Stevens was brought forward, it had been as carefully tested as it was in the power of man to test it. We had more information on this subject than is usually entertained in relation to matters that have not been practically developed in all their details.

Now, sir, permit me here to remark, that while every port we have is open to an enemy, the coast of France is so perfectly fortified and protected that no hostile fleet, from the year 1798 to the year 1815, notwithstanding all the efforts of the British, was able to enter any of their ports.

The design of Mr. Stevens will be understood from the following proposition laid before Congress in 1842:

WASHINGTON, January 25, 1842.

The steam battery or vessel above referred to is to be constructed on a plan entirely new, invented by the writer, and is to be shot and shell proof. She is to have greater speed than any vessel of war now afloat. The engine and propelling parts are to be so placed as that the latter shall be submerged, and the whole engine out of the way of shot from the vessel of an enemy. Her guns are to be large, and adapted both to shot and shells. Her burden not to be less than 1,500 tons.

The practicability of rendering such a vessel proof against shot and shells is not a theoretical assumption, but has been proved by the tests of positive experiments. These experiments were recently made at Sandy Hook, under the superintendence of Messrs. John C. and Edwin A. Stevens, and in the presence of a joint board of Army and Navy officers appointed by the Government. From the result, no doubt whatever remains of the fact that a series of wrought iron boiler plates, riveted together, and placed upon each other until the strata amount to four and a half inches in thickness, will effectually resist the force of sixty-four pound shot when fired with battering charges at the distance of thirty yards. Fifteen or twenty shot were also fired at this distance, and from guns of different calibers, against a target thus constructed, and were made to strike it in a fit state to protect anything in its rear against a similar force. Shells fired from the same distance scarcely indented the iron; and both shot and shells were invariably broken into small fragments.

The above-named experiments were tried under the supervision of the officers of the Army and Navy. At the last of these the writer, who had just returned from Europe, was present, and trials were then made upon the effect of shells of a peculiar construction, which were prepared by him. These shells are hermetically sealed, and are effectually secured from accidental explosion, either from fire or from violent concussion. They are perfectly safe also from injury by submersion in water. They are so constructed as to explode after having penetrated the object against which they are discharged; and, being elongated, contain three times as much powder as the common shell of the same caliber. They do not require the use of mortars, but may be fired from the guns in ordinary use. Out of twenty of these shells which were discharged into timber, or into banks of sand, nineteen exploded in the manner anticipated—rendering the action sufficiently certain, and evincing the possession of properties not possessed by any other shell, and producing effects which were actually tremendous.

It will be manifest that a steam-vessel, or battery, fortified in the manner above described, and furnished with the means of rapid propulsion, would be able to approach an adversary's vessel so securely and so closely as to render it practically impossible to miss her with shells fired horizontally; and it does appear that a vessel possessing the properties above enumerated, would be able to attack and destroy any fleet of steamers, or of sailing ships, as now constructed, which might be sent to attack a city, or to blockade a port. The ports of such a vessel through which the guns are fired, having a thickness of four or five inches only, might have port-holes but little larger than the muzzle of a gun; and yet allow it to be fired at any desired angle. These port-holes may be readily protected from canister, grape, or other shot, by means of movable screens, so constructed as to be removed and replaced with facility.

A single shell of large dimensions, and of the kind prepared by the writer, will suffice to sink the stoutest wooden vessel, if exploded within her sides, anywhere near the water-line. The effect of such a shell upon a structure of wood, was fully tested under his superintendence, upon Governor's Island, in the harbor of New York, upwards of twenty years ago. The experiments were made by order of the Government, in the presence of the late Colonel House, and of several other officers, with the following result: A target of white oak was constructed in the strongest manner, by one of the best ship-builders; it measured five feet in thickness, and the timbers were secured together by iron screw-bolts, passing entirely through the whole. This target was perforated by the explosion of a single shell, a hole being made in it through which a horse might have passed. Seven timbers of white oak, each measuring twelve by sixteen inches, were torn into shreds, and scattered to a great distance.

The foregoing plan of constructing and arming a vessel, with most of its details, has been matured for many years, and the delay in bringing it forward has resulted from a conviction that a period more favorable to its adoption than any that has heretofore occurred would arrive, and it is believed that it has now actually arrived. The advantage of being the first to construct a vessel of this description would be very great, as it must render us secure for a long time against the vessels of war of other nations, as these would require to be built anew. As a means of defense, it would be cheaper than any other; and, in time of peace, such a vessel would suffer but little from the ravages of time, and but few hands would be required to keep her in a proper condition for use. Her ventilation would be artificial, and constantly and thoroughly applied. In actual service, her crew, of all grades, would not probably exceed one hundred and fifty. She would need no rigging. With anthracite as fuel, she would not be rendered visible, either by smoke or by sparks, and would therefore attract the notice of an enemy less, either by night or by day, than any other vessel.

Although a vessel or battery of the kind described is equally adapted to the protection of all our ports, the harbor of New York will probably be considered as one of those the best fitted to an experiment with it, if experiment it may be called. Its spaciousness, its great depth, and its vicinity to fresh water, which will render it easy at any time to free the bottom of the vessel from barnacles, concur in pointing it out as a suitable place for the purpose.

The knowledge of the existence of such a vessel would suffice to deter most commanders from risking an attack with a vessel of wood, where the chances were so decidedly against them.

ROBERT L. STEVENS.

The construction of floating batteries for the protection of harbors is no original idea with Mr. Stevens. It has been entertained by the first military and naval men for the last two hundred years, but the United States is the first nation which ever entered upon the direct road to attain this important object.

It will not be contended that a general system of floating batteries is applicable to harbor defenses in this country. It is only applicable to the bay of New York or other large bays, where permanent works, within proper ranges of channels, cannot be constructed. In such places only these batteries would be wanted.

To show that a gun upon a battery of this kind is superior to guns afloat on shipboard, I have only to refer to the history of naval warfare within our own knowledge. It is proposed to construct a floating battery of iron boiler plates, capable of resisting a sixty-four pound shot, at a range of thirty yards. It is to be scarcely elevated above the water-line, and will have so much steadiness as to give the guns scarcely any motion. It is to be nearly equivalent to guns on actual battery on shore; and what guns in actual battery on shore will do in comparison with guns afloat, is well known.

Let us recur again to the experience of the present generation:

"The name of Martello tower was adopted in consequence of the good defense made by a small round tower in the bay of Martello, in Corsica, in the year 1794, which, although armed with one heavy gun only, beat off one or two British ships-of-war, without sustaining any material injury from their fire.

"Sir Sidney Smith, in the Pompey, an eighty-gun ship, the Hydra, of thirty-eight guns, and another frigate, anchored about eight hundred yards from a battery of two guns, situated on the extremity of Cape Lecia, and protected by a tower in which were five-and-twenty French soldiers and a lieutenant. The line-of-battle ship, and the frigates fired successive broadsides till their ammunition was nearly expended, the battery continually replying, with a slow but destructive effect. The Pompey, at which alone it directed its fire, had forty shot in her hull, her mizzen top-mast carried away, a lieutenant, midshipman, and five men killed, and thirty men wounded; at length, force proving ineffectual, negotiation was resorted to, and after some hours' parley, the officer, a Corsican, and relation of Napoleon, capitulated. It then appeared that the carriage of one of the two guns had failed on the second shot, and the gun had been subsequently fired, lying on the side of the embrasure; so that, in fact, the attack of an eighty-gun ship and two frigates had been resisted by a single piece of ordnance."

Within our own knowledge, upon our own coast, both in our revolutionary struggle, and during the last war, particularly at Mobile Point and at Sullivan's Island, it was shown that one single gun on shore is worth twenty-five guns of the same caliber afloat.

But I will refer to an occasion which must be within the memory of all of us. At the taking of Vera Cruz—

"The Mexicans brought nineteen guns only into action, and many of these were of small caliber, there being only one twenty-four pounder, and the remainder consisting of twelve, sixteen, and eighteen pounders, with one eight pounder. These reduced into twenty-four pounders, the smallest size of guns generally used on ship-board, make the nineteen equivalent to twelve guns.

"The French ships mounted one hundred and eighty-eight guns, or computing only one broadside, ninety-four guns, and four sea mortars.

"The Mexicans permitted the French to be towed by armed steamers into position, without molesting them, and the firing commenced on the part of the assailants."

I refer to this action because even among military men great misconception prevails in regard to the affair at Vera Cruz:

"Early in the action, a shell from the fleet caused the explosion of a magazine in the castle, which dismounted three of the nineteen guns. The French fired eight thousand two hundred and fifty shot and shells, and, but for the explosion caused by the negligence of the besieged, there is nothing to account for the surrender of the fort. The exaggerated statements of injury inflicted on the walls by horizontal shells, are not sustained by the official report of the engineer of the expedition, although the works were built of a stone much softer than any used in such works in the United States.

"Of one hundred and eighty-seven guns found in the fort, one hundred and two were not serviceable—twenty-nine only having been dismounted by the French fire. The heaviest injury was sustained in the batteries where the explosion took place—an accident that cannot occur from like causes in our forts. The works were out of order, the guns old and neglected, and the garrison inexperienced and ignorant of military defenses. No idea of taking the place was entertained by the admiral in this attack; he designed to weaken the defenses somewhat—to dispirit and annoy the garrison, preparatory to a general assault at night. But the culpable, inconceivable neglect of the Mexicans, rendered further efforts, on his part, unnecessary. Only sixteen guns were engaged in the fight, and such was the inefficiency of their fire, that, although three French frigates were struck in their hulls about three hundred times, they lost but thirty-three men in killed and wounded. The Ipigénie was hulled one hundred and sixty times, and yet but thirteen men were hurt! Very few, therefore, of these one hundred and sixty balls could have passed through her sides; and yet, in proportion to the guns engaged, the loss of the French here was upwards of four times as many as that of the English at Trafalgar. Few, if any, of the guns exposed to the direct action of the French broadside, were dismounted or silenced, 'which continued to fire till the end of the action. Of the twenty-nine guns dismounted, 'five were blown up, and the remainder were on the opposite side of the work, and struck by shot or shells, which 'had passed over the walls facing the ships.' From the position taken by the French, only sixteen guns were actually brought to bear against them from the fort.

"Had the Mexicans thrown their powder into the sea, or carried it to their barracks, and every man, making a pillow of the keg, slept through the whole cannonade, (as might have been done safely,) in their quarters in the curtain casements, the castle St. Juan d'Ulloa would have, we doubt not, been as competent to resist the projected assault as it was when the French first arrived before it."

I will not read the whole of that account, but I refer to it to show the importance of guns on batteries over guns which are afloat. The importance of building a battery of this kind may be judged of by the forces that may be brought against our harbor defenses; for, unless a force can be brought against our harbor defenses which we cannot now resist, no satisfactory argument can be given why floating batteries should be built; but I must also inform the Senate that within the last six months the British Admiralty have given orders to build no more sailing ships. No more sailing ships are to be built, and they are now altering their line-of-battle ships and their larger frigates into screw propellers, of which they have twenty-nine, giving to them an auxiliary power of from five to seven knots. These twenty-nine ships average each thirty-four guns, and a burden of one thousand six hundred and four tons. Three of these ships are larger than the United States ship Pennsylvania; and one of them carrying one hundred guns, and being three thousand three hundred tons burden, could blow our whole steam navy out of the water. All the machinery of these screw propellers is below the water-line, and therefore invulnerable to any but a plunging shot. Such are the vessels, armed with ten-inch shell guns, which will be brought against our harbors in the event of a naval war with either of the great Powers of Europe.

It is proposed by Mr. Stevens to build a battery which shall be shot, ball, and bomb-proof against sixty-four-pound shot; and there will be no objection to the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, so as to conform its resistance to any kind of shot which may now be used by the Navy of the United States. There can be no difficulty in regard to that, because Mr. Stevens tells us how the ship is to be built. To resist sixty-four-pound shot, it is to be built of boiler plates, riveted together to a certain thickness, and all that is necessary is to increase the thickness of the mass in order to increase the power of resistance.

I will remark, that this opposition seems to come from the Navy Department. I do not mean by this that it comes from the Secretary of the Navy. As that Department is now administered, the Secretary of the Navy is its responsible chief; but the business of the Department is parceled out to naval officers at the heads of its several bureaus. When the honorable Senator from Virginia, therefore, quotes the adverse opinions of the Department upon this measure, it must not be understood to come from the chief of the Naval Department, but from the naval officers themselves; and in this resolution, which we propose, we are willing to let the opinions of Mr. Stevens stand side by side with the opinions of any naval officer in our service.

As I said before, this proposition comes recommended to us not only by some of the first naval and military officers of the age, but it comes from a man who has made the greatest improvements in ship-building and in the application of steam to vessels; and in view of the immense importance of the matter if we should fail, the $240,000 will be well expended. If we demonstrate by actual trial that it cannot be done, we shall have proved that to be impracticable which some of the first military men of the age have declared to be important and practicable.

Mr. TOUCEY. I will detain the Senate a very few moments only. I acknowledge I am somewhat surprised at the apparent opposition, which exists in this body, to the introduction of steam power into our system of naval defense. I cannot bring my mind to believe that there actually is any such opposition. In this age of the world, at this late day, after this mighty element has revolutionized almost every department of business, has revolutionized the face of the world, can there be any opposition in any quarter to the introduction of it into the Navy of the United States? I do not believe that any such opposition really exists. If it does not, in what way is this element to be introduced? The Government, in the first place, entered into a contract with Robert L. Stevens, to construct a war-steamer of the character described. It was recommended by a board of officers of the Army and of the Navy; by the late Board of Naval Commissioners; by the Board of Commerce of the city of New York; and it was then authorized by Congress, and a contract was entered into, under which a very skillful and distinguished gentleman, who made the contract with the Government—not a speculator nor a jobber, but a man of undoubted skill, of the highest skill, and of the highest reputation of any man in this particular department—entered upon the undertaking. Shortly after he had entered upon it, it was arrested by the Secretary of the Navy. I think Mr. Secretary Henshaw suspended the payments. Again a new contract was entered into by the late distinguished Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Mason, of Virginia; and within a short year after he had entered into that contract, it was suspended again, and it continued suspended until application for renewal was made in 1847. And then, in the month of June or July, 1848, the contract was again renewed by the same Secretary, after full and deliberate consideration. That contract is in force now. Why shall it not be carried into execution? It has been suggested here that it was supposed that Mr. Mason had not authority to enter into it. I should like to know upon what ground? None is stated—none is intimated. I cannot take it upon presumption. That Secretary was among the most eminent and distinguished lawyers of this country, and was long upon the judicial bench. I venture to say that he did not, during the recent Administration, enter into a contract of this importance, in behalf of the Government, without full authority to do it.

This contract, then, was renewed by the Government in 1848, giving Mr. Stevens the period of five years to construct this steamer. Unless some Senator can point out a defect in the authority which was exercised, what course must the Senate pursue? Why, sir, the faith of the Government is already pledged. The question is a past question. We have gone into the measure; Congress has adopted the policy, and it has been executed by a contract. The good faith of the Government, I repeat, is pledged for the execution of it, and yet it has been suspended, and it has been referred to Congress to say whether the Executive shall go on with the payments. The time has not yet arrived when this war steamer was to be delivered. The contract is in force; and as to any delay that has occurred, it was occasioned by the experiments which he made, by the investigations entered into by the contractor for the purpose of accomplishing the undertaking in a manner most conducive to his own fame and to the object which Congress had in view. If there were any delay, the Government has waived it. The late Administration acted upon it, and extended the period to five years from the summer of 1848. That was done upon consideration and deliberation; and it was done because the Executive Department believed it to be their duty to carry out the contract that had been previously made under an act of Congress. What are we to do? Where is the remedy? This Government cannot be brought before a judicial tribunal. The party with whom we have contracted has no remedy except to appeal to the sovereign will of Congress; and it is clearly a question now of good faith on the part of this Government in carrying out a contract which was deliberately made upon a most important subject. Shall that good faith be kept inviolate, or shall we simply neglect it altogether? There is, I think, no subject here for debate, unless it be whether this Government will observe good faith in its contracts. Unless that be a question, there would seem to be no question before the Senate.

But suppose it were an open question in this particular instance, still the inquiry arises, what line of policy is it expedient to adopt? The Government has entered into an arrangement with Messrs. Collins & Co. by which, with comparatively little cost, we are entitled to the steamers of that line whenever the exigencies of the country shall require them. We called to our aid the energy, activity, and power of commercial enterprise. By the arrangement we incur no expense beyond a remuneration for transporting the mails until we take the vessels and pay the appraised value.

It is my conviction, in regard to that line of steamers, that when the termination of the contract shall have been reached, the Government will have incurred little or no expense; and yet it will have those steamers, at command, constructed after a model directed by the Government. But when the question of sustaining this line came up, it was resisted in the Senate. Some here were not willing to concur in that mode. There was an opposition in the Senate to that mode of introducing the element of steam into the Navy. It may be well founded. I gave my vote to continue the contracts, and carry them out, because the Government had pledged its faith to do so; and, having embarked in the enterprise, I would go through with it in the face of the British competition, over which it had signally triumphed.

But here is an arrangement of a different description, where the Government has entered into a contract to construct a vessel that shall be shot and bomb-proof, with a responsible individual, the most skillful and accomplished man in that department in this country; and that is resisted and opposed here. There is only one other mode of accomplishing the same object, and that is, for the Government to construct its own war steamers, to sustain them in commission from year to year, to rebuild them when necessary, and then at last, when war comes, to reckon up the cost. Of all modes of constructing a steam marine for war purposes, this doubtless is the least economical, and would bring the heaviest charge upon the Treasury. The cost of them will be immense. Be it so, however, if it be necessary for the defense of the country; because that is an indispensable consideration, and one that outweighs every consideration of a pecuniary character. But the Government has not adopted that policy. The Governments of other nations are introducing this element into naval warfare, and we are told by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Stockton] that our coast is now perfectly defenseless against war steamers. What, then, shall we do? I speak to those who oppose this measure. You will not call the skill and power of commercial enterprise to aid you in the construction of war steamers; you will not enter into a contract with the most accomplished, experienced, and reliable men to construct them according to their own judgment, and of a description specified in this contract, or perhaps any other contract, and you will not propose that the Government embark in the construction of them by its own officers or agents—a course undoubtedly the most costly, and perhaps most extravagant, to which, however, if it be found necessary, I have no objection.

One point is settled in my mind. This element of steam must be brought into the Navy of this country. It is indispensably necessary. There is not a city upon the coast; there is not a State in the Union, upon the Atlantic board or upon the Bay of Mexico, that is not directly interested in the measure; and we should be behind the age in which we live, were we not cheerfully and readily to go forward and avail ourselves of it. I say, there is no choice. It must be done; it will be none. There is only a question as to the manner in which it shall be done. I would refer to the South. There is an excited feeling in the public mind, not only in this country, but abroad; and in case of a war with a European Power, can the coast be left defenseless? Is it not important to them—is it not important to every portion of the country bordering upon the ocean, and upon the Mexican gulf—is it not important to the whole country that you should have this description of naval marine, that in a few days could be sent to any point upon the coast for its security? Sir, I dislike to see the vessels of an enemy, riding safely in our waters, month after month and year after year, in the event of war. We have seen it once. I hope we shall never see it again. And how are you to avoid it? You must adopt this system which has been adopted by all other countries having occasion to introduce it. You are now by the element of steam able to throw upon any one point one hundred thousand men where but yesterday you could throw scarcely ten thousand. On land we have power enough through this instrumentality. What you want, and what you must have, is the same power upon the water.

For my part, I propose to go on with the contract which the Government has made, until it is accomplished. If one mode does not meet the object, I would adopt another. The object is too important to be permitted to languish, or not to be accomplished, by differing about the mode. I would resort to every mode. It is a matter of experiment; and, when you are certain what is the best mode of doing it, follow out that mode. The end must be obtained. So that, were this an open question, I should myself entertain no doubt that, as the object is one that must be accomplished, we should carry out the mode adopted in this particular instance, unless an insurmountable objection can be shown to it. But, having adopted this, and one other mode, without any proposition to adopt still a third one, I shall support this resolution. I go for it, because I approve the object of it; because I have the highest confidence in the distinguished gentleman who has undertaken the task, and whose honor and fame are pledged to the accomplishment of it; because the object is indispensable, and the time has come when something ought to be done, and these delays should cease; and because the faith of the Government is pledged for it, if the Executive, in pursuance of the clear provisions of an act of Congress, is capable of pledging the faith of the Government. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will pass this joint resolution. I have confidence in the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, who reported it, and is perfectly familiar with the subject; and I take leave to say that I think Senators will do well to confide in his judgment. And when this measure comes here thus supported and recommended, I think we should commit a fatal error—not fatal; I speak too strongly, perhaps—but a very great error, if, in violation of the pledged faith of the Government, we should defeat an enterprise of this high character. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not adjourn without adopting this resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. Without entering into the obligations of the contract, or the considerations of that description, there are but two ways in which the Senate can very well deal with the subject—it being an experimental contract. If such progress had been made in the matter as to satisfy the Government that the experiment will be a failure, then I should be for putting an end to it; but not without a suitable compensation to Mr. Stevens. If the experiment has not been tried so as to reach a result which justifies that conclusion; if there is no good reason why the experiment should be abandoned, then I think it ought to go on to its completion. I concur with the honorable gentleman who has just taken his seat, that the time has not only come, but that it has long since been here, when it is the duty of the Government to take up and consider the matter of the defense of the country by the agency of steam. I think, for a period of at least thirty years, and I do not know but longer, a shot and shell-proof floating battery has been esteemed an object of great importance to this country. There have been many devices and many schemes to attain this object, and there have been many inventions in regard to it. Without entering particularly into that, it is manifest to every man of observation that steam enters necessarily into the defense of this country, as an important and essential element. The agency of steam, coupled with that of the telegraphic wires, will almost necessarily work out an entire revolution in the defenses of almost every country. The means of transmitting information, with the facility of locomotion, must bring about a result of that description.

My motive for sustaining, in the first place, the Bremen line of steamers, as offered here for our consideration, was not that I wished to put that line in competition with the trading merchant; not that I wished to put it upon the ocean as a company of trading steamers; but the great and leading sentiment in my mind was to adopt some scheme by which the Government and the people of this country should become more thoroughly acquainted with the uses of steam and the means of employing it. I thought then, and I think now, that we were behind many important commercial countries in this particular; and being ourselves one of the largest commercial people upon earth, and promising soon to be second to none, it seemed to me that if this principle was important to any country, it was to the United States. So it was when the Collins line came up. I would very gladly have expressed my sentiments upon that subject when it was under consideration, but I thought it had been debated enough, and therefore I forbore to do it. When we voted for that line, and when I voted for the additional grant to it, I proceeded upon the principle, that we were acquiring knowledge which was indispensable to the defense and security of this country, both in the use of machinery and in the construction of vessels; and I will hazard the opinion, that in the simple point of naval structure, we obtained enough by that grant, when by one step we surpassed all countries in the construction of ships, to compensate us for all we have paid. Would I drop down a thing like that, as a thing that was worthless and unworthy the consideration of the country? No, sir. I would go on until the experiment were fairly tried.

In this matter the same principle governs me. I see that there may be progress made. I see that there may be useful results by experimenting; and I see that the only way in which we can attain that object is by an experiment. That experiment may fail. The money may be lost. It is a contingency by no means improbable. But still, the end may be attained; and I know of no other mode of reaching it. I wish attention turned to it. I wish the active minds of enterprising men to be brought to it, to consider it, and meditate upon it; for that is the way to obtain the result which we are after. As I have seen nothing disclosed in this matter which leads me to suppose that the contract has been suspended because of the probable failure of the scheme of the contractor, I am disposed to go on, although it will cost some money to do so. I deem it important to this great and extensive country that we should have the best and most efficient means of defending and protecting both the sea-coast and the lake-coast. Our security depends upon it. The extent and magnitude of our fortifications depend upon it. It is so closely connected with the defenses of the country, that we can hardly measure the necessity of fortifications, until we discover the extent and practical use of steam. Under these circumstances, I am quite willing to vote for the measure which is now before us. I regret that the main object should have been frustrated from time to time; still I am not disposed to cast reproach upon anybody. I dare say, the gentlemen who suspended the contract, suspended it for reasons which they believed to be justifiable and imperative upon them at the time; but surely their opinions, founded upon ideas of that sort, need not influence us here; and we are at liberty to proceed and act upon the subject according to our best judgment and understanding. I hope the joint resolution will pass.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If any gentleman can give me the information, I should like to know how much money has already been expended in the prosecution of this contract, and how much will be required to fulfill it?

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and the question was stated to be on ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. CHASE. I should be glad to have the joint resolution lie over. It is a matter of some importance, and I should like to look a little further into it. I move that its further consideration be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. STOCKTON. I hope the Senator will reconsider that wish. I expect to leave this place for a short time, and desire to have the question taken. It has been hanging in the Senate I think for two months.

Mr. CHASE. The joint resolution must necessarily go over upon its third reading; and as the Senator from New Jersey desires it to be ordered to a third reading now, I have no objection to taking the question upon it. I therefore withdraw my motion to postpone.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was subsequently read a third time and passed.

CRIMES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up House bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the punishment of crimes in the District of Columbia,'" which aims mainly at reckless and criminal incendiaries.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It declares that whereas it has been represented that so much of the act of which it is an amendment as provides a punishment for the malicious, willful, or fraudulent burning of stores, barns, or outhouses, not adjoining a dwelling house, has been construed to apply to the cases of burning such houses only when they contain merchandise, tobacco, grain, or hay, whereby offenders have escaped punishment for burning buildings in which neither of said articles were kept; therefore it enacts, that from and after the passage of the act, if any person or persons shall maliciously, willfully, or fraudulently set on fire with intent to burn, or burn any house or outhouse in the District of Columbia, whereby any other person or persons, or body politic or corporate shall suffer loss or injury, although the said house or outhouse shall not, at the time of such setting on fire, be occupied as a dwelling, store, warehouse, or for any other purpose, he, she, or they, on conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to suffer the same punishment of labor as provided in the said third section of the act to which this is an amendment for the offenses therein committed.

Mr. BUTLER. I move, as an amendment to the bill, to strike out the words "set on fire with intent to burn, or burn any house, or outhouse in the District of Columbia, whereby any other person or persons, or body politic or corporate, shall suffer loss or injury, although the said house or outhouse shall not, at the time of such setting on fire, be occupied as a dwelling, store, warehouse, or for any other purpose," and insert in place thereof the following:

"And with intent to injure or defraud any other person or persons, or body politic or corporate, burn, or set on fire with intent to burn, or attempt to set on fire or burn, any house or outhouse in the District of Columbia, though the said house or outhouse shall not, at the time of such burning or setting on fire, or attempting to set on fire or burn, have any goods, tobacco, hay, or grain therein, nor be adjoining to any dwelling-house, nor be occupied or used for any purpose whatever."

Perhaps I had better read the clause in the act which it is proposed to amend, so that it may be done intelligently. It is that for the punishment of arson, and is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That every person duly convicted of the crime of maliciously, willfully, or fraudulently burning any dwelling-house, or any other house, barn, or stable adjoining thereto, or any store, barn, or outhouse having goods, tobacco, hay, or grain therein—although the same shall not be adjoining to any dwelling-house—or of maliciously and willfully burning any of the public buildings in the cities, towns, or counties of the District of Columbia belonging to the United States, or the said cities, towns, or counties; or any church, meeting-house, or other building for public worship belonging to any voluntary society, or body corporate; or any college, academy, school-house, or library; or any ship or vessel, float or building; or as being accessory thereto, shall be sentenced to suffer imprisonment and labor for a period of not less than one, nor more than ten years for the first offense, and not less than five nor more than twenty years for the second offense."

I propose to amend this clause by the provision which I have read. It has been very carefully prepared, I believe, by the district attorney for this District, and I have no doubt that it is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

A verbal amendment was made, on the motion of Mr. BUTLER, by striking out the word "neither" and inserting "none."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill was ordered to a third reading.

IMPROVEMENT IN LIGHT-HOUSES.

On the motion of Mr. SEWARD, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution, which was submitted by him on the 12th ultimo:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to the Senate a communication from J. W. P. Lewis, under date of the 7th of May, or thereabout, with the accompanying documents, relating to the subject of the improvement of light-houses.

Mr. SEWARD, in answer to inquiries from Mr. DAWSON and Mr. WELLER, said: We have the whole subject of light-houses before the Committee on Commerce, and these papers are wanted by that committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. The whole matter relating to light-houses is before the Committee on Commerce. It is advisable and necessary that the subjects contained in the communication referred to in the resolution, should be obtained by the Senate, and be referred to that committee. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. WELLER. I believe there has been a report made by the light-house board on this subject. It has been presented to Congress, and printed. I should like to know something about the character of this communication before I vote to send for it. I should presume that the Committee on Commerce have all the information necessary to enable them to act in regard to our light-house system in the report to which I have alluded.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say a word in reply to the objection of my friend from California.

Mr. WELLER. I was not objecting to the resolution; but before I vote for it, I wish to know something of the information which is to be brought out by its adoption.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is very true that under the provisions of a law passed a year ago, a light-house board was instituted, and that board has made a very full and voluminous report. As one member of the Committee on Commerce, I am prepared to say that there are many of its suggestions which meet my approbation. But because the light-house board have reported upon this subject, I do not think we are bound to follow them blindly, without listening to any suggestions that may come from other quarters. This Mr. Lewis is a man who has long been engaged in the construction of light-houses, and in connection with them one way or another. I hardly think it is either just or proper to adopt the principle, that because we have had a report from the light-house board, we are not to listen to suggestions from others. I would have all the information upon the subject laid before the committee, that they may form their opinions with the aid of all the lights that may be shed from all quarters.

Mr. WELLER. I should like to know upon what particular point the report bears?

Mr. SEWARD. All I can say upon that subject is, that various communications were presented to the light-house board, containing the views of different parties—the views of persons who entertain different opinions on the subject of organizing our light-house system. This communication was presented among the rest. The report which the light-house board have sent to us, embraces what that board thought proper to adopt with the materials to support their own report and other views which they resolved to accept. The views of Mr. Lewis were not submitted to us by the light-house board. We want to see what they are, for the purpose of judging fully of their merits. This was the whole object of the Committee on Commerce, and this was my object in offering the resolution.

Mr. WELLER. Is the Senator able to inform me upon what point in regard to the construction of light-houses, the report of Mr. Lewis, which it is desired to obtain, differs from the views adopted by the board?

Mr. SEWARD. We do not know, and therefore we want to see what it is.

On motion, the Senate adjourned to Saturday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 15, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered on the bill reported by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT], granting land to the several States for educational and railroad purposes.

RECESS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move that, when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it in order to move to amend that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not amendable.

Mr. ROBBINS. I desired to amend it so as to provide that, when we adjourn to-day, we adjourn to meet to-morrow, and then adjourn over until Saturday.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order if this should fail, as an independent motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That motion is not in order, for the simple reason that it provides that, when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet to-morrow, and that is the standing order of the House. The resolution cannot be amended in that way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that the amendment was not in order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would not willingly throw anything in the way, if it is the desire of the House to adjourn. But I would suggest that we might, in the next three days, by a special order, devote the time of the House to receiving reports from committees, without interfering with the object of any gentleman who desires to go to Baltimore. Our desks are crowded to overflowing with these reports, and if the House would make this order, it would afford us an opportunity to present them, and have them referred and printed.

Mr. VENABLE. I will remark, that if we were to make this order, the moment we are to divide the House—as no doubt some gentleman would call for a division—and there was found to be no quorum present, we should have great confusion, and be compelled to adjourn. I think, therefore, we had better adjourn till Friday.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We had a very fair show of opposition when the House voted to adjourn for the other convention. Now, let us have a fair vote on the other side.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the resolution, and it was carried in the affirmative.

So it was ordered that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

PRE-EMPTION TO ACTUAL SETTLERS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is a bill lying upon the Speaker's table, a bill granting preemption rights to actual settlers upon lands on the line of the Central Railroad and its branches in the State of Illinois. I am sure no gentleman can have any objection to it. If it is not passed within a few days it will be of no use to the settlers. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take it up and pass it, if we can pass it, and if not, to let it be defeated.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois. But I ask him first to let me make an appeal to the House to give unanimous consent to a motion to allow the bill which is now the special order to be postponed until next Tuesday. I ask it because the House is thin this morning, and many more expect to leave this morning for Baltimore. I ask that by unanimous consent it be permitted to lie over until Tuesday next.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the bill to which I have alluded, granting preemption rights to actual settlers upon the Illinois Central Railroad.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly taken up and read through by the Clerk.

Mr. MEADE. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order, because the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. MEADE. I have not heard a word of that bill, and I protest against its being put upon its passage in this manner.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not call for the previous question upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] demanded the previous question upon it.

Mr. HALL. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw that demand in order to enable me to say a very few words upon it, and I will then renew it.

Mr. STANLY. I will withdraw it. I was not aware that I had demanded it.

The SPEAKER. The record so shows.

Mr. HALL. I only wish to offer a few words upon the subject of this bill. When the bill was passed granting lands to the State of Mississippi, Alabama, and Illinois, for the purpose of aiding those States in the construction of certain railroads—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment until the matter of the demand for the previous question can be settled. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLY], as will be seen by the Journal, demanded the previous question, but withdrew the demand. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FREEMAN] then renewed it, and no quorum voting, the House then adjourned. That gentleman, however, is not now in his seat, and perhaps the House will indulge the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] in his explanation.

[Cries of "Agreed!"]

Mr. HALL. I will state, that when the bill was passed, as I have before mentioned, persons were living upon certain sections of the land affected by that bill; that is, the part of the lands granted to the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Illinois. The part reserved to the United States also had settlers upon it. The State of Illinois, in order to secure the right of those settlers upon the lands granted to her, and who were not entitled to a pre-emption right under the act of 1841, but who, nevertheless, had made settlements upon the land, passed an act precisely similar to the one now before the House for its consideration, by which it was provided that those settlers might have a pre-emption right to the lands upon which they had settled and made improvements, at $2 50 per acre, provided they made their payments within twelve months; and provided further, that if they did not make their payments within that time, that the land would be subject to entry by any other individual.

The Committee on Public Lands proposes precisely the same regulations with regard to the United States lands, reserved by the act I have mentioned, which the State of Illinois has adopted in regard to her lands. Those provisions are, that these men, who were living upon this land at the time the Illinois land bill passed, but who were not entitled to pre-emption under the act of 1841, might still have a pre-emption right to the land to the extent of a quarter section, upon paying the Government $2 50 per acre, and if not paid within twelve months, then the land to be subject to entry by any other person.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, whether this bill applies to any other persons than those who were settlers upon the land adjacent to the road, at the time when the bill passed?

Mr. HALL. It does not. The bill expressly confines its provisions to those persons who were living upon, or had made improvements upon these lands, at the time of the passage of the Illinois land bill.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I can see no objection to the bill if that is the case.

The previous question then received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question then being on ordering the bill to a third reading, it was put, and agreed to; and the bill was read the third time and passed.

TERRITORIAL BILLS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, there are several bills now lying upon your table, which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There are none of them, I believe, that will lead to any discussion whatever. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take them up. Should there be any bill among them, when taken up for consideration, to which there is objection, I shall not press its passage. I only ask, that those to which there shall be no objection, be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the execution of the special order. I have great anxiety to get through with the reports of the Committee on Public Lands, which I hope we will be able to do to-day.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to give way a moment, until I can offer certain resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts.

Mr. MEADE. I object to that, unless I am allowed the same privilege.

Mr. JONES. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to withdraw his objection to my proposition, for the morning hour will be devoted to reports from committees, and it is important that these bills should be considered.

Mr. JONES. I shall have no objection to take up these bills, when we get through with the reports of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill in relation to preemption rights upon lands along the line of the Illinois Central Railroad was just passed, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] has already submitted a motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put, upon the bill submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] making a grant of lands to aid in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes.

Mr. BENNETT. I move to lay that motion upon the table, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair before that motion is put. If the vote is reconsidered by which the main question was ordered to be put, will it not be competent to submit a motion to the House, that the further consideration of the bill be postponed to this day week?

The SPEAKER. That motion certainly will be in order after the reconsideration of the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

Mr. STEPHENS. I hope the House will not lay the motion upon the table, but will reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, reconsider the second to the previous question, and then postpone the further consideration of the bill until next Tuesday.

Mr. MEADE. I beg leave to state to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] that my object in moving this reconsideration, is to have the bill referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where we can take such action upon it for the future as we may think necessary. I think that would be the better order to make in reference to it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am opposed to the reference, and in favor of passing the bill. But the House is thin, and I think there can be no objection to allowing the matter to go over, by common consent, to Tuesday next.

Mr. MEADE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] to withdraw his motion, and to the House to let this bill go over to next Tuesday.

Mr. BENNETT. I will not object to this subject going over to next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. COBB. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS. I made an appeal to the House, that by unanimous consent, this bill shall be postponed until next Tuesday.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object.

Mr. BENNETT. I renew my motion.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I would inquire if a motion to postpone is in order?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order in the present condition of the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] moves to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote ordering the main question to be put.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Would it be in order to move to lay this whole subject upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be in order.

Mr. JONES. Then I make that motion.

Mr. MEADE. I rise to a question of order. It seems to me that the motion I made is a privileged motion, and takes precedence of the one submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES.]

The SPEAKER. All three of the motions pending are privileged questions. The motion to reconsider is privileged, the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table is privileged, and the motion to lay the whole subject upon the table is privileged, and of a higher grade than either of the others, and takes precedence.

Mr. MEADE. It seems to me that the question now before the House, is the motion to reconsider the vote ordering the main question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] moves to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. MEADE. Does it not take precedence of the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee to lay the whole subject upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states that all three motions pending are privileged ones, and in the opinion of the Chair, the one made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is of a higher grade, affecting the entire bill.

Mr. MEADE. I would simply suggest to the Chair, that the question to which his motion refers is not now up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before this body, and is the first thing in order this morning. The gentleman's motion to reconsider would make it so, if nothing else, and, in the opinion of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee should be first put.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I was about to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MEADE] that the Speaker is clearly right, because such motion disposes of the whole subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very clear on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Stale and unprofitable as this whole debate is, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion. I wish we might adjourn if they intend to pass a vote upon this bill in the present thin condition of this House.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and it is too late for the gentleman to withdraw his call.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then I hope the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] will withdraw his motion to adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS. Now, I renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 73, nays 87.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Is it in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. The motion pending, and first to be put, is the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will present a proposition to the House which I trust will meet with general acceptance. I ask the unanimous consent of the House this morning to permit to be taken up and passed the territorial bills which were reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, now lying upon the Speaker's table.

Objection was made.

Mr. STANLY. I shall have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois after the expiration of the morning hour. I hope by unanimous consent the consideration of the bill reported by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] may be postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. STUART. I object to that.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is not now in order, for the reason that no regular business has intervened between the submitting of the present, and the rejecting of the same motion a few moments ago.

Mr. BENNETT. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. BENNETT. I take an appeal from that decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOWE. I demand the yeas and nays upon the appeal.

The SPEAKER. A motion was submitted for a call of the House, which the Chair decided to be out of order. From that decision an appeal has been taken by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] and upon that appeal, the yeas and nays have been demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOWE.]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOWE. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the House resolved to adjourn until Friday?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Not pending this question to adjourn, I take it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move, then, to lay that motion upon the table, and demand the yeas and nays thereon.

Mr. JONES. I have not submitted the motion yet.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I renew it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MARSHALL of California, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then put, and the tellers reported—yeas 80, nays 47.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn, and it was disagreed to—yeas 72, nays 87.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not expired.

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay upon the table the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It lacks only a minute or a minute and a half of the expiration of the morning hour, if I am correct, and I therefore, with the unanimous consent, move that the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table. There are upon the table Executive communications which should be referred.

There was no objection, and the House proceeded to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress a report from the Secretary of State on the subject of the disorders on the Rio Grande frontier, and recommend the legislation which it suggests, in order that the duties and obligations of this Government occasioned thereby may be more effectually discharged, and the peace and security of the inhabitants of the United States in that quarter more efficiently maintained.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, June 11, 1852.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed; which motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA MINT BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to know of the Chair whether the California Mint bill does not come up this morning as the unfinished business of yesterday?

The SPEAKER. It is the unfinished business of yesterday, but, by unanimous consent, the House proceeded to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think it was the unanimous consent only to pass from the morning hour. I do not think there was any intention to interfere with the unfinished business of yesterday. I ask that that bill be taken up.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I trust that will be done, and we then will have no more difficulty.

The SPEAKER. Unless objection be made, the California Mint bill will be considered.

Mr. BROOKS. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business of yesterday is the California Mint bill, but by unanimous consent the House proceeded to the business upon the Speaker's table. It is now moved to take up for consideration the Mint bill; to do that unanimous consent is required.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to make a bargain with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. I am not opposed to the Mint bill, but there is an item in it which it is necessary should be understood and discussed by the House. If he will withdraw his call for the previous question, after submitting a few remarks upon the item I have alluded to, I will renew it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. Any remarks addressed to that section of the bill, would not be objected to, so far as my colleague and myself are concerned.

Mr. BROOKS. I only want a fair vote, that is all.

The SPEAKER. Is objection made to the taking up of the California Mint bill?

Mr. BROOKS. I will not object, if it is the understanding that the previous question is to be withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to bargains.

Mr. BROOKS. If I cannot have that understanding I object.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I object, unless they give us a tariff also.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is competent to submit a motion to proceed to the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. HOUSTON. I then submit that motion.

The question was put, and while the House was dividing,

Mr. BROOKS said: Is it in order to move to suspend the rules and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? If it is I submit that motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. Not while the House is dividing, I think.

Mr. BROOKS. The shortest way to settle this difficulty will be for the gentleman to withdraw his call for the previous question and allow me an opportunity to submit a few remarks upon this bill. I am not opposed to it. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a point of order, which I did not intend to make had not the gentleman from New York called for the yeas and nays. I cannot see by what process he gets between me and the motion I have made while the House was dividing and the Chair had received the affirmative vote.

Mr. BROOKS. Now, I appeal to the chairman on Ways and Means—

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I present the point and ask for the Chair's decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if called upon to enforce the rules strictly, decides that the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] is out of order, for the reason that the House was dividing upon a different proposition.

Mr. BROOKS. I made the motion previously, but it was my misfortune the Chair did not hear me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the motion at all.

Mr. BROOKS. I will not occupy twenty minutes. I do not want to oppose the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call the gentleman to order. There is no debatable question before us.

The question then recurred upon the motion to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. BROOKS demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. GOODENOW. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was then put upon the motion to adjourn, and upon a division, there were yeas 62.

Mr. GOODENOW. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BROOKS. I renew it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I ask if it is possible to withdraw the previous question so as to allow any gentleman to discuss the single section of the bill, and to move to put the remainder upon its passage?

The SPEAKER. The bill is not now before the body. Motion is made to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. MARSHALL. I wish simply to know if it is possible to withdraw the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. A simple demand for the previous question may be withdrawn when the bill is taken up.

Mr. BROOKS. That is all that is asked.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Brooks to adjourn; and there were on a division—yeas 65, noes 64.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROOKS. I believe the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] withdrew the demand for the previous question. If so, we are willing to withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. If gentlemen are willing to take up this matter, and the call for the yeas and nays be withdrawn, we can then go on with it.

The SPEAKER. The call for the yeas and nays cannot be withdrawn except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] can withdraw his motion, and then make it again, which will get clear of the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOUSTON. I withdraw the motion, and now make the same motion that the unfinished business of yesterday be taken up.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I understand this question is open for discussion. I promise to renew the demand for the previous question.

I am sorry to have been the means of delaying the business of the House for a few minutes; and, before I proceed to a discussion of this bill, I wish to say to the gentleman from California, [Mr. MARSHALL], in good faith, that I do not rise to oppose his California Mint bill, or to propose any amendment to it; but I rise to discuss a single question, not brought to us from the Senate, but introduced into this bill by a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. I ask the attention of the House to one single subject, because I think it is a subject of great importance; and, although I have not the vanity to presume that I can instruct the House upon any subject whatsoever, yet, as a condenser of facts, and a reflector of what I have read, I may say something which will be of service to gentlemen who have not the time to give so important a matter the proper consideration.

The first proposition before this House is for the establishment of a Mint in California. The second proposition is an amendment from the Committee on Ways and Means, establishing seigniorage upon the coinage of the country. Perhaps no more important subject can ever come before this House for discussion. Sure I am, that I know of no subject so important which is now before this House, save the public lands, as this of seigniorage. It involves a discussion of the whole matter of currency, coinage, bullion, and of gold and silver production; and whatever affects the currency of a country, whatever touches its gold and silver, has a direct and powerful influence upon all the commerce, manufactures, and agriculture of the country. No wise legislator ever proposed to touch the coinage or currency of his country, but upon a full, deliberate, and keen examination, either by himself, in his study, or after long debate before a public body.

This word "seigniorage," Mr. Speaker, is a word almost unknown in our country, and it strikes the American ear as a novelty. It is not even of English birth, but it comes to us from the French, and is a relic of the reign of feudalism. The droit du seigneur is well known in feudal law, in the history of the Middle Ages, but it never before appeared in these United States, and never before was attempted the transplantation.

This right of seigniorage was imposed by the old feudal barons as sovereigns in Europe, called seigneurs, upon the coinage of their realms in two ways: sometimes by adulteration of the coin, and sometimes by charging upon the depositor a certain per cent. of the gold and silver he was compelled to deposit to be coined. This relic of feudalism exploded, however, long ago, and it is unknown now, and it has been unknown since the reign of Charles II., in the maternal, or paternal Government whence we come—Great Britain. This seigniorage—this relic of feudalism, it is proposed now for the first time to introduce to the American people—why and wherefore I have been unable to comprehend. Englishmen have exploded it, I repeat, since the days of Charles II., when all feudalism was exploding with it. Since his reign this right of seigniorage has not existed in our father-land, and nobody dreams of reestablishing it there at this day. It does not exist to any extent at this moment—to the extent now proposed—in any commercial and civilized country whatsoever; and where known at all, it is best known among barbarians. Seigniorage, then, is fit only for the dominions of the "Grand Seigneur." But the question before us is, Shall it be established here? When I say it is the reversal of the whole policy of this country, I but recite a fact known to everybody. The great and wise effort of all parties in this country has been, as much as possible, to lure the precious metals here, in order to check the making and circulation of paper money, and thereby to establish a sound and solid basis of circulation with our gold and silver. It was the policy of the gold bill in 1834 to keep the gold in the country by overvaluing it in comparison with silver nearly three per cent. This was the policy of the great party which then had the government of the country, and this has been the Whig policy, and is the policy of all right-thinking and wise men, to keep as the basis of circulation as wide, broad-spread a foundation as possible for the superstructure of paper money.

Now, the tenth section of the bill before the House reverses all the old policy of all parties in this country, and of the gold bill in 1834. For it charges upon the gold productions of the country a seigniorage at the Mints of the cost of its coinage not exceeding one per centum, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Another bill, not now before the House, which has come down to us from the Senate without one word of discussion there, proposes a seigniorage of one half of one per cent. upon all gold or silver deposited in the Mints, whether coined, or cast into bars or ingots. This bill will soon be before us for action, and the principles involved in both of the bills now deserve our grave and calmest consideration.

Before I go further, Mr. Speaker, as this is a point upon which there is some dispute, I wish to establish the fact—that in Great Britain no seigniorage whatever is levied upon coin. There is some controversy on this important point, or some misunderstanding; and it is necessary at the start to ascertain whether or not we shall take a step which holds out to dealers in gold and silver a premium for the exportation of gold and silver from this country to Great Britain. Innumerable authorities might be cited, to show that there is no seigniorage on gold at the British Mint; but to save the House from the recital of them, I propose only to call attention to the last act of the British Parliament on this subject—the fourth clause of the 4th and 8th Victoria, chap. 32, which runs thus:

"And be it enacted, That from and after the 31st day of August, 1844, all persons shall be entitled to demand, from the issue of the department of the Bank of England, Bank of England notes in exchange for gold bullion, at the rate of three pounds seventeen shillings and nine pence per ounce of standard gold: Provided always, That the said Governor and Company shall in all cases be entitled to require such gold bullion to be melted and assayed by persons approved by the said Governor and Company, at the expense of the parties tendering such gold bullion."

Now, by this act, the Bank of England is compelled to pay £3 17s. 9d. per ounce for standard gold—about its full value; and so any holder of bullion can go to the Bank, and demand its value in bank notes or sovereigns for all the bullion he has. Hence I am authorized, without citing any other authority than this act, to say, that under the laws of England, there is no cost in exchanging bullion for coin there. I trust that this act will be held conclusive; if not, I am prepared to go beyond the law, and to cite such authorities as McCulloch and Henry James. (Essay on Money, Exchanges, and Political Economy.)

The idea that the British Government imposes a seigniorage arises, I suppose, from such a clause as that which closes the extract from the act (4th and 8th Victoria) which I have quoted above. The Bank of England requires, on receiving its bullion in exchange for notes, that it be prepared for the Mint by the depositors at their expense. The act of Congress (1800) requires of our depositors at our Mints a like preparation, at the expense of the depositor, and the cost of the preparation is deducted from the amount deposited. We stand in the United States and in England upon the same ground. The Mints of both countries require the "dust" or "bullion" to be prepared for coinage at the depositor's expense. But the bill now before us—the bill for seigniorage—clothes the Secretary of the Treasury with the power to add on to that expense another tax of one per cent.

Another fact has impressed some gentlemen with the idea that a seigniorage is exacted at the British Mint, and that is, the fact that the British Government buys the pound of silver at its market value, a standard bullion value of sixty shillings, and issues it, with the impress of the realm, to applicants at the rate of sixty-six shillings; and silver is made a legal tender only to the amount of forty shillings. There is no seigniorage here—no tax on the depositor. The Government gives the full market value (sixty shillings) for the pound of silver, and issues it in half-crowns, shillings, and sixpences, at the rate of sixty-six shillings the pound—that is, increases its value ten per cent.; but at no expense, remember, to the depositor. The coinage then becomes a token of local value, and it enters into general circulation throughout the kingdom. No foreign or other silver coin passes current there. The community enjoy the convenience of an ample supply of small change; but no man is obliged to receive these tokens to offset a debt beyond the amount of forty shillings. Such are the facts as to the British silver coinage; but these facts are misunderstood by some to be a seigniorage exacted from the depositor. The relative value of coin in Great Britain is as 1 to 14.288, but that is not the relative value of gold and silver, which is about 1 to 15.716.

I think it may therefore be taken for granted now, with these facts before us, that there is no seigniorage upon coinage in Great Britain. When these facts are understood, and misconceptions corrected, I think no man will say, that in Great Britain there exists any such thing, any such tax, as this lurking in the tenth section of this California Mint bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I might go further, and show that such a seigniorage as is here proposed, exists in no other commercial country; but it is enough for me to maintain, that the British Government exchanges British coin for bullion, without cost to the depositors, because in maintaining that, it follows, what I propose to illustrate, that a seigniorage in the United States of one per cent. or one half per cent., is a premium of one per cent. or one half per cent., to export gold and silver bullion from the United States to Great Britain. Before I go further, however, I wish to say, that in the French Mint, where did exist in 1837, perhaps now exists, what is called a "remedy" on gold, there was something like a seigniorage, but the "remedy" came not out of the depositor, as I understand it, but it was an advantage taken of about one thousandth in fineness, which operated as a charge of about eleven hundredths per cent. The coinage of France, however, was principally in silver, until the last year; and now, that gold has become so plenty there, it is stated to me, on authority I credit, but no statute or ordinance is within my reach to demonstrate it, that no seigniorage, whatsoever, now exists at the French Mint on gold bullion.

The point I now arrive at, Mr. Speaker, is to demonstrate, that if we affix a tax of one per cent. or one half per cent. on our gold coinage, we give to a premium of one per cent. or one half per cent. our British rivals to take from us our gold. Nothing is clearer than that bullion will avoid and evade taxes, even the slightest, and seek that manufactory, that mint, where it can be worked up into coin for nothing. It is so clear a proposition that I scarcely need stop to dwell upon it. It is evident, then, that if we establish the seigniorage, we turn the gold current of California, when it reaches Chagres, or Aspinwall, on the Atlantic coast, to the British Mint, and the silver of Acapulco, and of Chili, Peru, and Bolivia, in the same direction. No holder of bullion standing side by side of an American steamer and British steamer there, will hesitate to send that bullion to England, to be coined for nothing, when the cost of coinage will be one per cent. or one half per cent. in Philadelphia, with the addition of the cost of transportation to and from Philadelphia and New York, in many cases one half per cent. more. This important fact cannot be got over, or got under, unless it can be shown that it is cheaper to transport gold and silver to New York than to London—as much cheaper, as is the seigniorage and extra transportation. To show that this is not so, nay, to show that it is now cheaper to carry gold from San Francisco to London, than from San Francisco to New York, I lay before the House the following table, from one of the largest express companies, (Adams & Co.,) carriers of gold dust or bullion, in the United States:

Estimate of the cost of transporting $100,000 bullion from San Francisco to New York, and the same to London.

SAN FRANCISCO TO NEW YORK.
$100,000—San Francisco to New York, steamer freight, 2½ per cent.....	$2,250 00
Primage, 5 per cent. on $2,250.....	112 50
Transportation from Panama to Chagres, ¼ per cent.....	250 00
Insurance (N. Y.) San Francisco to New York, 2 per cent.....	2,000 00
	$4,612 50
SAN FRANCISCO TO LONDON.
$100,000—San Francisco to Panama, freight, 1½ per cent.....	$1,250 00
Panama to London, freight, 1½ per cent.....	1,375 00
Primage, 5 per cent.....	131 25
Insurance, (English,) San Francisco to London, 1½ per cent.....	1,250 00
	4,006 25
Difference.....	$606 25

Difference in favor of London, $606 in the $100,000, or $6,000 in $1,000,000. To which add the proposed tax of ½ per cent., or $5,000, and we have a difference of $11,000 per million in favor of the London shipment.

Now, to get over and to put down such startling facts as these, it is argued that an American eagle is coined but to go into the British Mint; and that it may as well go in bullion from Chagres (or Aspinwall) as from New York. It is to be hoped, Mr. Speaker, that some day or other we may not be diggers of gold always for the British Mint, only to have impressed upon the golden product of the California miner the impress of British sovereignty; but if this fact be so now, there is no reason why we should give a premium of one per cent., or one half per cent., to prolong such a state of things. Besides, sir, no nation can ever reach the summit of trade and commerce if it digs gold but for another nation to coin it. Where goes the bullion, and whence comes the coin, there go also—such is the law of trade—the trade and commerce of a people; for coinage is the representative of trade and commerce, and where the representative is, the substance is also. I should hold, then, the premium which sent gold to England to be coined, to be the premium also for sending, and concentrating there the commerce and trade of the Atlantic, as well as of the Pacific States. All nations, more or less, have always acted upon this principle. The British Government spares no pains to concentrate in London the bullion trade of all the world, and no effort to spread the British sovereign throughout that world. She frowns upon an American eagle when it appears at the British Mint, and insists upon taking off the eagle and putting the British emblem on. She discourages the circulation in England by all the artifices of coinage. She reasons, and she reasons well, that wherever the precious metals are coined, there, a larger portion will remain for purposes of circulation or hoarding, than would remain in the crude condition; for, says she, where there is no coinage there will not be apt to be retained any material amount of precious metals. They seek to find their way to countries where the coinage exists. To show that this is the policy of England one fact need only to be stated. The price of standard gold is fixed by law at £3 17s. 9d. sterling per ounce, and this rate the Bank of England is bound to pay, or allow for standard gold, as I have shown before. The Bank knows exactly how much standard gold there is in one of our eagles, or ten-dollar pieces; and yet, if a box of newly-coined eagles is carried to the Bank of England, the price per ounce they may weigh is £3 16s. 2½d. sterling, which they say is equivalent to the quantity of standard gold in our gold coin; and yet that same box or parcel of gold, melted down by a private assayer, and reduced to "standard gold," will be taken at the bank at the legal price, of £3 17s. 9d. per ounce, and the result is a small profit after paying the expense of melting—enough, however, to induce the melting. The following is a statement illustrating this:

Copy of a London statement of sale of American gold, September, 1850.

The whole tendency of these movements is to compel the melting of our coins for the purpose of converting them into British sovereigns, which the British Government in a wise policy does for nothing. In Great Britain no coins but British coins are a legal tender. Discredit is thrown upon all others. In the United States all foreign coins are a legal tender at fixed rates. Beside such facts as these, charges are made, and with no inconsiderable success, to discredit the accuracy of the assay of the gold coins issued from the Mints of the United States. (See correspondence of the Hon. Abbott Lawrence, our Minister to England, with Mr. Webster, Secretary of State.) "I was told 'at the British Mint,' says Mr. Lawrence, 'that considerable quantities of American gold had been assayed and recoined, from time to time, and had not always been found to come up to our own standard.' This, Mr. Eckert, the Director of the Philadelphia Mint, it is proper to add, seems most thoroughly to disprove. (See letter to Secretary of Treasury, April 2, 1852.)

It is unnecessary, however, for me, Mr. Speaker, I suspect, to go into any further exposition of the effort of the British Government, or the British people, to concentrate in London the bullion trade of the world, for I may take it for granted, such a remark will be admitted as fact. The pride as well as the avarice of that great nation is concerned in this concentration. Both are directed toward it, with unwavering energy; and one of the struggles which we are yet to have with our father-land, is for dominion over gold and silver, and coinage, the representative of commerce and trade, as well as for dominion over the seas, by steamships, and clipper ships, those new winged monsters of the deep. New York and London are yet to have a mighty contest for the gold of California, and the silver of Mexico, and of South America, and the palm will not be yielded on the part of Britons without a struggle earnest and prolonged. To keep up her monopoly over the South American silver mines, she has extended her steam-packet service in the South Pacific, from Panama to Valparaiso, and to hold on to the mines of Mexico, she intrigues against us, and obstructs our movements, from the capital of Mexico to Vera Cruz, on one side, and to Acapulco on the other. The day is coming, if no new-fangled notions of seigniorage beset the two Houses of Congress, and our system of mintage have a free, fair, and full play, (which it has not now,) when New York will take the place in the New World over bullion and coins, that London has in the Old, and then our Republic will begin to obtain the dignity and grandeur of its destiny.

To levy a seigniorage, then, on gold and silver now, when we are in the beginning of this contest, nay, when, as we are scarce of silver, we should rather give a premium to tempt silver here, is the very error of the moon. A proposition, under existing circumstances, more preposterous, as it seems to me, never came from erring man. My resistance to it springs, not only from the tax it imposes upon the California miner—for in such a case the miner is the man who pays the seigniorage if his gold is coined at home—but because the mischievous act would reach our commerce, our freighting trade at the Isthmus of Panama, our insurance offices, our bullion dealers at home, and send the gold and silver in one continuous, overwhelming stream to the British Mint. If, even for the sake of a Mint, the Representatives from California could submit to such a tax, it is not less my duty to cry out against it in behalf of every interest I represent, and in behalf of all the returned Californians, who, in their own persons, bring back their little heaps to be sold in New York bullion offices, before they get home to their wives or families. The whole weight of authority I have, or can have, from practical businessmen, is against the imposition. I have in my hands remonstrances from the most faithful express companies. The presidents of the leading banks in New York, among them the Hon. C. W. Lawrence, once a member of this House, write me, that under such a bill "as far as he can judge, a large portion of the California gold will be driven to the European Mints, while the conversion of foreign gold into American coin will be entirely prohibited."

Mr. Speaker, before Congress thinks of taking any steps in the way of a seigniorage, it should think of what vast power it is exercising now, under the Constitution of the United States, over the gold and silver property, the miner or the trader in the precious metals happens to hold. Government seizes no man's cotton, no man's tobacco, hogs, or horses, and insists upon imprinting upon them its stamp of sovereignty before they can be efficiently used in general commerce and trade. But the Constitution does seize the product of the gold miner's labor, and declares, "Congress (alone) shall have power to coin money, and regulate the value thereof." "No State shall coin money." "No State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." Bullion cannot pay a debt. Gold dust is no legal tender. The miner himself cannot coin it or make it money. All this is against the Constitution and the law. Government monopolizes the raw material, so to speak, of money, in its own Government-created Mints, and the miner may be as rich as Croesus in silver or gold, but he can discharge no man's debt till his gold or silver has put upon it, in that Mint, the Government stamp. To levy a tax, then, upon a species of property thus monopolized by the Government, and to levy it, because of the monopoly, or because of the cost to the Government of the monopoly, is crying injustice, such as should not be thought of for a moment. Tell me not it is like the toll taken from a grist sent to a mill. The corn grist voluntarily goes to any mill; but the Government monopolizes the only mint-mills there are, and your money grist is not to be sent to some neighboring village to be ground, but you must send it hundreds of miles, perhaps, to New Orleans or Philadelphia, and pay all the cost of freight, insurance, and commission to have your money grist ground in the mint monopoly there. Your bullion is discredited till it has the Government stamp, and if you imprint that stamp upon it, fine or imprisonment is your fate. No, sir, it is the first duty of all Governments holding this mint monopoly, to use it without cost, for the public good only, and in the most convenient places, to enable the owner of dust or bullion to reach them at the least possible expense.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) I do not expect to say a word upon this subject, but I ask that, as a justification of the Committee on Ways and Means, a very short paragraph from the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury may be read to the House. It is in direct conflict with the statements made by the gentleman from New York.

The paragraph was read, as follows:

"The expenses of the Mint and branches have, of course, greatly increased since the accession of California, and will be still further augmented in case Congress should determine to establish two additional branches at San Francisco and New York. I would, therefore, suggest, for the consideration of Congress, the propriety of authorizing a small seigniorage on the bullion deposited by corporations or individuals, for the purpose of covering the actual expenses of coinage, instead of allowing the latter to remain as an exclusive charge upon the Treasury. This, it is believed, is the universal usage at all other national Mints, and the charge would be but a mere fractional percentage, amounting only to a very few cents per ounce."

Mr. BROOKS. I was aware of this article in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury; but it will be remarked that the Secretary uses the very cautious words, "it is believed" that this seigniorage "is the universal usage," &c. If the Secretary means to say there is a seigniorage in the British Mint on gold, he is mistaken, as I have already shown; and all he can mean is what I have stated, that the British Government buys silver at sixty shillings the pound, and sells it in coin at sixty-six shillings, which is no tax on the depositor, no such seigniorage as the Ways and Means propose. I was not mistaken in my facts. Indeed, there is no dispute among practical men about them. The Secretary's recommendation of a small seigniorage, not a large one, as the bill proposes, undoubtedly comes from his impression that the over-valuation of British silver coin was a seigniorage, or from supposing that the preparing the precious metals for the Mint was not at the cost of the depositor in the United States as well as in England. The Director of the Mint (Mr. Eckert) states positively, in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as to the Committee on Ways and Means:

"In England, the gold is coined at one half per cent., the silver at two and one eighth—these charges, however, being paid by Government, and not by depositors."

I think I may repose now, Mr. Speaker, on my facts, and proceed to another branch of this subject, and that is the silver part of it. The themes are precious ones, and there is nothing more attractive than money; but I fear the House is just now so confused in presidential topics that even gold and silver, as topics of discussion, lose their charm.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman from New York appears to be well posted upon this subject. I desire to know of him what proportion of the expenses of coinage is paid by the alloy?

Mr. BROOKS. None, that I know of. Both our gold and silver coins are nine tenths fine. An ounce of gold, nine hundred one thousandths fine, is equal in value to $18 60.46-100. I do not know that I quite comprehend the interrogatory of the gentleman from South Carolina. Alloy must be mixed with gold to harden it for circulation.

Gold, in the plethora of it just now in California and Australasia, might possibly stand some small, very small, seigniorage; but it is clear, that in the present premium for silver, we ought not to tax the coinage of that here. The silver currency of our country has been for some time past going to Europe, in consequence of the fact that a higher value was set upon it there than here. The relative value of gold and silver as established by law is,—

1 to 15.988.....in this country.

1 to 15.716.....in England.

1 to 15.479.....in France.

By which we rate silver one seventy-two one hundredths per cent. lower than England, and three per cent. lower than France. Hence, as the balance of our commercial debt can only be paid in bullion, it follows that neither to France nor to England will gold be sent until silver is exhausted. This exhaustion of our silver has raised what is left to a premium at one time of three and four per cent., but at the last dates American silver was at only one to one and a quarter per cent. premium. The premium on silver has now for some time been on the decline, and it is believed by many that if things are left to themselves, the premium will soon cease to exist. A seigniorage upon silver, however, would aggravate all the difficulties in change, for it would be a premium for its exportation from South America and Mexico to England, and for its avoidance of the United States.

This is not an improper place, Mr. Speaker, to invite the attention of the House to the state of the silver trade in America. The discovery of quicksilver in California, so indispensably necessary in the working of silver ore, has broken down the monopoly which the Rothschilds had for so many years of the quicksilver mines of Spain, the most valuable quicksilver mines, till of late, known in the world, and the price per quintal has fallen full one half. The fact has given new stimulus to the working of the silver mines of all America, but especially in Peru. Once worthless ore can be washed at a profit now. Steam machinery, too, is coming into use, particularly in the extensive and valuable mines of Paseo, by which they are effectually kept clear of water, hitherto rendering them unproductive. A railroad has also been established from the coast through the mineral districts of Peru, which is having considerable influence in opening up new and abundant sources of supply. The silver of the world comes mainly and annually as follows:

	1st estimate.	2d estimate.
From Chili....	$3,000,000, in bars	$4,500,000
From Peru....	1,500,000, do	2,500,000
From Bolivia..	1,000,000, in coin	1,500,000
From Mexico..	12,000,000, do	33,000,000

This discrepancy in the Mexico estimate comes from the fact, that as there is an export duty, the smuggling is large, and the estimate is, therefore, but a guess. The greatest portion of this silver (three fourths of it) goes to England in the British Chagres steamers, or in the British steamers from Vera Cruz; the rest to China, France, or Germany—very little to the United States. One reason why it does not come here is the expense of transportation for so heavy and bulky an article from New York to the Mint in Philadelphia and back; but the chief reason is, that the British, by their steam packets, have fixed the habits of trade towards England. To levy, then, a seigniorage of any kind in the Philadelphia Mint, or the New Orleans Mint, upon silver, would be but adding to the expense of transportation already existing, the premium of whatever was the per centum of the seigniorage to drive off all the little silver there is left us. An American steamer up and down the southern ports of the Pacific, and a steamer from Vera Cruz to New Orleans, would bring here large masses of this silver, if we impose no tax upon its coinage. For I look upon the whole silver trade, Mr. Speaker, as of right ours, from its proximity, if we but struggle for it, and gentlemen will but aid our commerce in the struggle. Chili, Peru, Bolivia, and the Pacific coast of Mexico are here but at our doors—nearer than Texas is practically, considerably nearer than Oregon or California. I hope the discovery of the quicksilver mines of California is going to enable us to develop the silver mines of our continent, pari passu, with the gold mines of California. I hope to see the day when the rich argosy of silver now freighted to England under the British flag, will be freighted to New York under the stars and stripes, increased in quantity ten times over. Oh, that I could inspire my countrymen with a proper sense of the priceless treasures just before them, in all parts of South America, on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and arouse them to a worthy effort to snatch from the proud mistress of the seas the wealth that passes through our hands to her coffers!

And now, Mr. Speaker, I am done with this subject, but sketched, briefly sketched, rather than discussed. I feel how inadequate are my studies, or is my knowledge, to begin even to do justice to so abstruse and so intricate a topic as is involved in this whole discussion. Sure I am, it is beyond my power to do justice to it here, in this Hall, amid the excitement at this period of the session. It needed the closet, and the quiet study of the scientific or practical man. All I have expected to do is to awaken the House to the dangerous item lurking quietly in a section of this bill. All I have hoped to do is to create a pause in the velocity of action threatened under the previous question, and to start some new thought in the mind of somebody. The very novelty of a business discussion here should have some interest for your ears. But before you act further to-day, before you vote on this bill, I invoke you to remember the miner toiling in California, and impose no such strange tax as seigniorage upon him. I invoke you to remember your duty to guard and protect the commerce and trade of your country; but above all, for the sake of national honor, or of national pride, I beg you to guard your own eagle, your own emblem of sovereignty, from the British lion, and to feel, at least, as the Englishman feels, when he puts the British emblem upon your gold production, at no cost to the depositor, that he is paid, richly paid, for the slight tax on himself, by the universal circulation and dominion he thus gives that British emblem the wide world over, wherever British gold goes, or Briton travels; for the day is coming when the American eagle—I mean no eagle emblazoned on any warlike standard—will thus traverse the world with this British sovereign, and, if I mistake not, in triumph over him, if you throw no obstructions in the path of his victory!

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether the question can be separated, so that a distinct question may be taken on the proposition which my colleague has just discussed with so much ability? If it be possible I hope that will be done, for I think the House must now be convinced that that section ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. A demand has been made for the previous question, and therefore no discussion is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I wish to ask for information, if it is not possible, under the rules, to have a separate vote—

The SPEAKER. Upon every amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is there a motion pending to strike out the amendment which has been discussed by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the amendment reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The House will first be brought to vote upon the amendments reported by that committee.

Mr. MARSHALL. Then is it a motion to insert that amendment or to strike it out?

The SPEAKER. There are various amendments reported by the committee, which must all be acted upon.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I would inquire of the Chair whether, if the previous question is now sustained, it will prevent us from having a separate vote upon that particular amendment?

The SPEAKER. Each amendment proposed by the committee will be voted upon separately.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not intend to delay this bill by making any remarks upon it.

A MEMBER. It is not in order for you to do so. Mr. HOUSTON. I am aware that the previous question is called. I wish, however, to say to the House—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order pending the demand for the previous question, as the gentleman from Alabama must be aware.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have a right, I presume, to make an hour's speech, even after the previous question is sustained, but I do not intend to make a speech at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will come to order. A demand is made for the previous question, and the Chair is bound to decide that during the pendency of that proposition all debate is out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not want to make a speech; I merely wanted to state a fact.

The SPEAKER. When the main question is ordered—if it shall be—the gentleman from Alabama, having reported the bill, will have a right to make an hour's speech, as everybody knows.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not intend to make a speech, although I have a right to do so. I do not intend to delay or endanger the passage of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] a simple question, merely for the sake of information. It is simply whether this bill proposes any specific amount for the erection of this Mint in California, or does it go on to provide for the erection of the Mint without specifying the appropriation at all?

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. It specifies a limited sum.

Mr. HOUSTON. The eleventh section of the bill, as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, restricts the amount which may be expended under the bill, if it should become a law. It provides that "it shall not, in any contingency, for buildings, machinery, and everything that is necessary to put the Mint in perfect operation, exceed $300,000." That section also requires that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not proceed, or take any steps under any of the provisions of the bill, for the establishment of that Mint, until he shall have made contracts for the entire expenditure which may be necessary for the buildings, machinery, and everything else, to enable him to put the Mint in full operation; which contracts are to be approved by the President of the United States; and which expenditures or contracts shall not exceed the sum of $300,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. In this connection I want to ask another question. Does this bill appropriate that amount, or any other amount?

Mr. HOUSTON. It appropriates no amount at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. How do they get the money then?

Mr. HOUSTON. That depends upon future legislation by Congress.

As I said before, I do not intend to argue the point presented by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks.] I intend, however, to say to the gentleman, and to the House, that according to my examination and understanding of the facts, his statement is wholly incorrect, and can, to no essential extent, be sustained. His statement of facts is entirely incorrect and unreliable, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] read to the House a few moments since—wholly incorrect, according to the report of the chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Senate, [Mr. HUSTON,] who has given to this subject a very thorough and elaborate investigation. Both of those gentlemen say that seigniorage is charged upon the coinage of other civilized Governments. And I undertake to say that such is the fact, which any member of this House will see by an examination of the subject. The law which the gentleman read, shows the same fact; and if he had read the whole of it, he would have established my proposition. Now, sir, the only doubt I have ever heard expressed about this matter is, whether there is any seigniorage charged by the British Government. The gentleman says no civilized Government in the world charges it. France may not be a civilized country, in the gentleman's estimation, but there is no gentleman who has examined this subject, except the member from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] who will say that France does not charge seigniorage. There is in the minds of some a question about the practice of Great Britain.

But the law produced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] shows, that while a bullion holder may go to the Mint and receive coin for his bullion, yet it is only when the gold dust has been assayed and brought to the standard fineness required by the British statute. When it is in that condition he can get a certain amount of coin for it; and to get it to that standard fineness much the largest expense is incurred which would be charged for under this bill, all of which is paid by the bullion holders to some assay office approved by those who control the Mint. Our Mints assay gold and carry it through all the necessary stages for coinage, and then coin it. We propose, for that service, a small charge to be paid to our Government, towards defraying the expenses of the Mints. The British Mint refuses to perform that service, and requires the bullion holder, at his own expense, to have it done by some assay office, which its officers may designate, before they will receive it. The additional expense necessary to stamp it is very trifling, and that, I believe, they are to some extent compensated for, by the amount of coin they pay out; but that is immaterial. So the same expense which this section requires the bullion holder to pay, is paid by him in England, and that it may not go directly into the coffers of the British Government, is not the question at issue here? The proposition which I am endeavoring to establish is, that the bullion holder pays that expense. The honorable member from New York [Mr. Brooks] maintains the contrary, if we understand him; and that being the issue, I am willing that his law shall decide between us. It matters not whether the bullion holder pays the expense to the Government or a subject of Great Britain. He pays for that service, and pays it to whoever renders the service substantially, as we propose by the tenth section of the bill before us.

Mr. BROOKS, (interrupting.) The gentleman mistakes the facts.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know what the facts are, and I am stating what the books show. I felt it due to say thus much, in justification of the action of the Committee on Ways and Means, who reported the section controverted. But allow me to read the law, so that there may be no cavil about it hereafter:

"And be it enacted, That from and after the 31st day of August, 1844, all persons shall be entitled to demand, from the issue department of the Bank of England, Bank of England notes, in exchange for gold bullion, at the rate of three pounds seventeen shillings and nine pence per pound of standard gold: Provided always, That the said Governor and Company shall in all cases be entitled to require such gold bullion to be melted and assayed by persons approved by the said Governor and Company, at the expense of the parties tendering such gold bullion."

Now, sir, what is that but a part of the expense of coining, and which will be included in this seigniorage charge if the section shall be agreed to—

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to propound a single question to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.] I will ask the gentleman whether we have not a statute, passed in 1800, which provides that a charge shall be made upon all bullion brought to the Mint, which needs refining before it is in that state which is proper for coinage; and whether the provisions of this act are intended to be superadded as an additional charge to that provided for by the act of 1800? That act, I think, charges one half of one per cent. for putting this bullion in a condition fit for coinage.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will reply that the bill now before the House is intended to supersede, and it will supersede, if agreed to, all other charges for coinage at the Mints of the United States. The gentleman says the charge now made at our Mints is one half of one per cent. I guess he has not examined the subject, and is therefore in error. But admit that he is correct, and that the present charge is as high as he states it, you will at once see that most of the expense proposed to be charged under the provisions of this bill is already charged under existing laws; and the service for which that expense is incurred, and which the gentleman says is one half of one per cent., is now charged upon all gold before it is received at the British Mint. It is true that the British Government does not make the charge, for the reason that it does not perform the labor. In England, it is done and paid for in an assay office, distinct from the Mint. Here our Mints perform the service, and should charge for it. The principle is the same—

Mr. SEYMOUR. The act of 1800, of which I have an extract before me, expressly charges it for the expense of refining the gold, and not as seigniorage.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman's special pleading will not avail him. Seigniorage, as we use and understand it, is a charge upon any or all of the various stages of coinage, and is intended to make the owner of bullion pay the expense of putting it into coin, that he may use it. You have to assay the bullion, and separate the impurities from the purities. Bullion is merchandise, and may be and is used as merchandise; but you cannot use it as coin until the refining process is applied to it, and it receives the stamp of the Mint; and for the expense incurred in turning it into coin, it is proposed not to charge one half of one per cent., as the gentleman argues, but it is proposed by the committee to make one per cent. the maximum of the charge. They propose to charge a seigniorage in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, which shall not in any event exceed one per cent., and not in any event exceed the expense of coinage at the Mint. The Secretary is not bound to charge the maximum; the discretion was given, that he might, from time to time, regulate the charge with proper judgment and discretion, so as to inflict no improper injury upon the country. The question now is, shall this Government be required to expend millions of dollars annually in establishing and keeping up these Mints for the benefit of bullion dealers? The expense of the various Mints we have now is not much less than three quarters of a million of dollars; and if you establish the California Mint, and the New York Mint, you will have upwards of a million of dollars to pay annually to keep up your system of Mints. And is it right that the people should be taxed to that extent for the purpose of protecting any one interest over any other?

NEW SERIES...No. 100.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) I believe there is no doubt about the fact that this business of coinage is one which belongs exclusively to the Government. Why, I ask, is it that the Government should be paid for performing this duty of stamping the currency of the people, any more than for performing any other constitutional duty?

Mr. HOUSTON. In answering the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON,] I will say what I was going to say at first. It is said the Government has this monopoly under the Constitution. Why is that? It is not because the Government profits from it. But it is that the Government may protect the people against plunder by a hundred different kinds of coins—coins of various devices and values.

But I have not answered the gentleman's question. I say the Government of the United States is as much bound to protect the manufacture of one thing as of another, and if we are bound to put gold in a condition to be used, the Government has the same obligation resting upon it, to put the cotton of the cotton-grower, the tobacco of the tobacco-grower, the rice of the rice-grower, in a condition to be used in market. Gentlemen say the Government does not require you to bale your cotton. True enough. Nor does it require the bullion holder to coin his bullion. I am willing to give Mints, as far as my vote goes, to any point where the interest of the people demands a Mint, upon the principle that, after the Government builds them, they shall sustain themselves by a tax on coinage; upon no other principle will I vote for additional Mints. If you require the Government to sustain them, then I say the one at Philadelphia, and the one at New Orleans will coin promptly double the quantity of bullion ever brought to this country; and it is as little as the owner of it should expect, that he should carry it to the Mints already in operation. The Government is not profited by them; and certainly, as they can do double the coinage required, it should be called on to establish no more, unless upon the principle that they will sustain themselves, as proposed in this bill. The charge for coinage, contained in this bill, is not one per cent., but, as I have said, is discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury. A bill passed the Senate unanimously, after weeks' discussion, containing this same principle. They must be much less intelligent than gentlemen of this House, very remiss in the discharge of their duties, or the gentlemen here from New York must be mistaken; this House must determine which.

Mr. DEAN. Will the gentleman answer me one question? I want to know whether this seigniorage is applied to all the Mints in the country?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir; every one of them. The provision is applicable to the Mint of the United States and all its branches. The Government is to receive what is charged, and to receive it for the purpose of defraying the expense of coinage.

Mr. DEAN. Then I understand that the Government, for assuming this monopoly of coinage, and preventing anybody else from going into it, is going to tax the gold producer?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not care how the gentleman understands it. I should regret exceedingly if I were responsible in any degree for his understanding. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means stated that it was the intention that this bill should supersede the charges already made for refining gold brought to the Mint in bullion under the act of 1800. I should like to hear that part of this bill read.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the intention. I would like to discuss this question fully, but I will not further interfere with the bill. My aim on this occasion was to controvert what I regard as improper statements. I withdraw the motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has the main question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. TOOMBS. The bill ought to be voted down. It affects the currency of the country. I object to the gentleman's withdrawing his motion.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. HOUSTON, to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. TOOMBS. We had better look at that bill; and I therefore move that the House adjourn.

The question was put upon the motion to adjourn, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 39, noes 51.

[Cries of "No quorum!" "No quorum!"]

The SPEAKER, (Mr. STUART temporarily occupying the chair.) The House refuses to adjourn.

The amendment then recurred upon the first amendment proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, which was read by the Clerk as follows:

"Page 1. Strike out the word 'temporary,' in 8th line, and insert, in lieu thereof, the word 'suitable.'"

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EVANS. There is no objection to the California Mint bill, but we do not want to trouble the gold of the country. I move the House adjourn.

The question was put upon the motion to adjourn, and there were, upon a division—ayes 45, noes 67.

[Cries of "No quorum!" "No quorum!"]

Mr. EVANS. I rise to a point of order. The business of the House cannot be proceeded with, inasmuch as a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The gentleman raises the question of order, that inasmuch as no quorum votes, the House cannot proceed with business. The Chair thinks the gentleman is correct in his point of order; but also thinks that, in point of fact, there is a quorum in the House, and hopes measures will be taken to ascertain that fact.

Mr. FOWLER demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and APPLETON, of Maine, were appointed.

The question was again taken upon the motion to adjourn, and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 72. No quorum voting.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I move a call of the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is not in order to move a call of the House after the call for the previous question has been sustained.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order. The main question has been ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted, but the Chair thinks there is in fact one in the hall.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is competent for the Speaker, by any means he may resolve upon, to ascertain whether a quorum is present, though one has not voted, and it may not be in order to move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Taking the vote upon this question, by yeas and nays, would test the fact whether there is a quorum in the House or not.

Mr. CLEVELAND demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn, and it was disagreed to—yeas 42, nays 80. So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I merely wish to state, on behalf of myself and colleague, [Mr. McCORKLE,] who are more, perhaps, than any other members, interested in this question, that we want the question taken upon the amendment so as to secure the action of the House upon the bill at its next meeting. We are, of course, as everybody upon a moment's reflection would see, opposed to this amendment. We are willing it should be voted out—in fact, anxious it should be. We hope the House will take that much action upon it, so as to secure the bill before the House the next time it meets.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question was then taken upon the following amendments proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, to the bill, and they were severally adopted:

Page 1. Strike out the word "immediately," on 9th line. Page 1. After the word "and," on 19th line, insert the words "until the thirteenth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five."

Page 1. After the word "of," on the 22d line, strike out "five," and insert "four."

Page 1. After the word "thousand," on 22d line, insert the words "five hundred."

Page 1. After the word "of," on 25th line, strike out "four," and insert, in lieu thereof, the word "three."

Page 1. After the word "of," on 25th line, strike out "three," and insert, in lieu thereof, the word "two."

Page 1. Strike out, after the word "men," on 27th line, the words "not exceeding twenty."

Page 3. Strike out, after the word "laws," on the 2d line, the word "made," and insert, in lieu thereof, the words "now in force."

[A message was here received from the Senate, at the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House of the passage, by that body, of certain bills.]

The Clerk then read the following amendment, proposed by the committee to be added at the end of the bill:

"Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That there shall be charged a seigniorage on the coinage of gold in the Mint of the United States, and each of its branches, at a rate, or rates, to be established from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed, in his judgment, the actual expense of the coinage at said Mint, or branch Mint, respectively: Provided, The same shall not be more than one per centum on the amount coined."

"Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall procure or erect the buildings provided for in the second section of this act, or commence operations under any of the provisions of the same, at San Francisco, State of California, it shall first be his duty to make a contract, or contracts, for the erection of said buildings, and procuring the machinery necessary for the operations of said Mint, at a sum or sums which shall not in the whole exceed the sum of $300,000, which said contract, or contracts, shall be secured by good and sufficient sureties, to the satisfaction of the said Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States."

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I demand the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. SEYMOUR. Very well. I am convinced that amendment will not be adopted, that the law will be left as it now stands, and therefore withdraw my call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLEVELAND. The friends of the Mint think that amendment ought to prevail. I hope it will. I renew the call for the yeas and nays.

The House was divided on the demand for the yeas and nays, and there were—ayes 22, noes 75—no quorum voting.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is one fifth.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consent to adopt that principle, and decide that the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. This is an important question. The House is thin. I inquire if this bill is not under the operation of the previous question, and whether it will not come up when we meet again?

The SPEAKER. The main question has been ordered to be put.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Of course that will bring it up after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the impression that it will be the first business in order after the morning hour.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The first hour is devoted to the calling of committees for reports. Then you may go to the business upon the Speaker's table. You go from there to the business specified in the 26th and 27th rules, and then, when you have got through with all of the business thus provided for, you can proceed to the orders of the day—to the unfinished business of the preceding day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am surprised that the gentleman is now in the wrong, for he is generally right. That applies to a case where the previous question is not moved. If the previous question was not pending, we could not get to the unfinished business; but where the previous question has been sustained, it brings it up in advance of everything else in the House. I move, therefore, that the House adjourn.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is only befogging himself.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Have not the yeas and nays been ordered?

The SPEAKER. They have been ordered.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered. That will keep the bill before the House. I now move that the House adjourn.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to.

So the House adjourned, according to special order, to meet on Friday next.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 18, 1852.

The House met pursuant to adjournment. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion to lay upon the table the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT.] On Tuesday last a motion was submitted by the gentleman from New York, for a call of the House, which the Chair decided to be out of order. From that decision an appeal was taken by the gentleman from New York, and the question now is upon the motion to lay that appeal upon the table.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled, an act for the relief of William S. Payne; an act making appropriations for the payment of Navy pensions for the year ending the 30th of June, 1853; and a joint resolution to change the name of St. Peter's river in Minnesota Territory; which were severally presented to the Speaker, and received his signature.

Mr. STUART. Before proceeding to the business embraced in the morning hour, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table and pass two or three bills from the Committee on Territories. They are such as will give rise to no discussion, and it is important that they should be sent to the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If there is a quorum I will consent, and not otherwise.

Mr. CARTTER. I object.

A Voice. Let us adjourn—there is no quorum here.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I do not and will not object to that proposition, or any other proposition of the kind, but it is very clear that the question of quorum or no quorum will be made, and I propose that the House do now adjourn until Monday next.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to the motion being made, but upon that question I shall ask for a division, and if there is a quorum here I shall have no objection to proceed to the consideration of these bills.

Mr. STANTON. If it should appear that there is no quorum here, we cannot adjourn until Monday, and we will be put to the necessity of coming back here to-morrow without purpose and object.

Mr. JONES. Upon the motion made by the gentleman, [Mr. STANTON,] I shall ask for a division, to test whether there is a quorum or not.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask for tellers. Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. STANTON, of Tennessee, and STEPHENS, of Georgia, appointed.

The question was then taken, and there were—ayes 98, noes 19.

So the House agreed to adjourn till Monday next.

Mr. STUART. I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to proceed to the consideration of certain territorial bills.

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to report a resolution from the Library Committee. It is a resolution merely authorizing them to accept a portrait of HENRY CLAY, presented by an artist of New York.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object at present, and move that the House adjourn.

Mr. DANIEL. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House then adjourned, to meet on Monday next.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

Also, the petition of E. W. Steele and 102 others, asking for the establishment of a mail route from Apple Grove, Iowa, via Freels, Hartford, and Palmyra, to Indianola.

By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of J. P. Boyd, Jonathan Ogburn, and 42 others, citizens of Union, Wayne, and Randolph counties, Indiana, asking for a tri-weekly mail route from Liberty, via Centreville, and to Winchester.

By Mr. HIBBARD: The petition of S. W. Thompson and others, praying for the establishment of a new mail route from Lower Bartlett to Gorham, in the State of New Hampshire, to intersect with the Atlantic and St. Lawrence railroad.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 19, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 11th June, directing him to communicate to that body whatever information he may have obtained in Mexico and elsewhere in relation to the Gardiner claim. The Secretary states that he has laid the same before the President, who is of the opinion that the information desired would not comport with the public interest; and further, that he concurs entirely in that opinion. The communication was ordered to be laid upon the table and be printed.

Also, a report from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the liquidated balance due the Creek Indians for losses sustained by them during the late war with Great Britain; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Also, a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, a report of the Register of the Treasury, and other papers in relation to the claim of Nahum Ward; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a reconnoissance of the Gulf of California and the Colorado river, made in 1850 and 1851, by Lieutenant Derby, of the Topographical

Engineers; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Laurel, Indiana, and of a meeting of citizens of Napoleon, in the same State, recommending that provision be made by law for the organization of the Territory of Nebraska; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of L. Bradish, William C. Bryant, and other citizens of New York, praying that the collection of Indian Scenes and Portraits of Mr. George Catlin may be purchased by the United States; which was referred to the select committee on the subject.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT presented two petitions of citizens of Goshen, Indiana, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MASON presented a memorial of citizens of the Seventh Ward of the city of Washington, praying that the Potomac bridge may be rebuilt on its present site; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of the administrator of Michael Everly, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the children of the late Lieutenant Michael Everly, a revolutionary officer; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BRODHEAD, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the payment of workmen on the extension of the Capitol, during the suspension of the work; which was read and passed to the second reading.

On motion of Mr. BRODHEAD, the bill was ordered to be printed.

MILITARY POSTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WELLER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill for the organization of an additional regiment of mounted men for the establishment of military posts in California, and for other purposes of defense.

Mr. WELLER. In submitting this resolution, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the necessity of providing an additional military force for the protection of the people of California. The last advices from that country give us the intelligence that murders and robberies, in that section of the State where the Indians are found, are becoming alarmingly frequent, and are constantly increasing. In an address, signed by the two Senators and four Representatives in the State Legislature from the counties of Shasta, Trinity, and Klamath, I find that, in a very few months past, one hundred and thirty white men have been murdered, and property worth $240,000 destroyed. They say:

"The evil is increasing every day, as a more intimate knowledge of the whites makes the Indians more bold and reckless in their attacks. Already they enter our towns and villages at night, and steal or set fire to property; the habitations of the industrious miners, while they are at their labors, are entered with impunity, and robbed of their contents; the pack animals, on which the miners must depend for their provisions, are either killed on the spot where found, or driven away, to be roasted and eaten by the depredators. The people are compelled to travel from one portion of the country to another in companies, well armed, to repel attacks.

"It has been charged that the hostility of the Indians was superinduced by acts of injustice committed by the whites. As a general thing, we can state that, from our own knowledge, this has not been the case, and have no hesitation in saying that it emanates from the known character of the Indians—a mischievous disposition, and desire for plunder. In but few instances have the first offenses been committed by the whites.

"This state of affairs cannot continue much longer. If that protection which every State should extend to her citizens is not soon granted to our people, they must either unite and exterminate the Indians in their neighborhood, or withdraw from it altogether."

This communication is addressed to the Executive of the State, and earnestly implores him to adopt the necessary measures to arrest the progress of these Indians. The Governor promptly addressed a communication to the general commanding your Federal troops in that State, calling his attention to this important subject. In this communication he says:

"In contingencies like these, a simple but imperative duty is imposed upon the Executive, to place the State in the hands of the General Government, and to demand that aid and protection which the guarantees of the Federal Constitution assure us we are entitled to receive. If the General Government is then neglectful of the demand which we make upon it; if it is unmindful of the duty which it owes to us, we have one other alternative—to fight our own battles, to maintain our independence as a sovereign but isolated State, and to protect ourselves from intestine troubles as well as from the incursions of merciless and savage enemies."

"I deem it my duty to assure you, that unless prompt protection is afforded to the citizens of this State by the General Government, I shall feel bound to resort to the only means left me to defend the frontiers, and to conquer a lasting peace. A resort to these means will increase the debt of the State, and add to the burden of taxation imposed upon our citizens. To dispense with such a necessity, I indulge the earnest hope that you, as a military representative of the General Government in California, will exercise your authority to arrest hostilities, and to secure to us the blessings of a permanent peace."

Now, Mr. President, there never has been a sufficient number of troops in California to protect her extensive frontier from Indian depredations. This is known and seriously felt by all who have any knowledge of that country. General Hitchcock, I do not doubt, has every disposition to do all in his power to extend the necessary protection to our people, but with the force at his command, this is utterly impossible. If, as should be the case, authority was given him to accept volunteers, when called into service by the Executive of the State, the difficulty, to some extent, might be obviated. But in my judgment the public necessity demands that some five or six strong military posts should be established at once. There should be a strong post at the mouth of the Gila river, which will have to be kept up for a series of years;—there is a very large number of warriors within a few miles of this point, and as it is on the emigrant route from the East, depredations are constantly being committed. This important post was garrisoned last summer by a lieutenant and eight men! I am glad to learn from a letter received yesterday from the Adjutant General, that a sufficient force has been stationed at this point.

There should be a smaller force stationed at "Cajon Pass"—a military post at or near Tulare lake, in Mariposa; one near Reading's Ranch, and two in the North, adjacent to the Oregon line. By the establishment of these posts, with a sufficient force to send out detachments whenever public necessity demanded, and power to accept volunteers called out by the Governor, ample protection could, I think, be given to our people.

The people of California are, it is true, located in a country far distant from the Federal Government; but they stand upon American soil, and are as much entitled to the protection of the Government as if they occupied the center of the Republic. That they have a right to complain of the neglect of the General Government, hitherto, is undeniable. They have scarcely known you in any other way than through your tax collectors. You place your officers at all her ports and exact a high duty upon the very bread they eat. They paid, in the shape of duties, during the past fiscal year, more than $3,000,000, and yet our harbors remain undefended, our coast unlighted, our immense commerce unprotected, and our people left to the tender mercies of the untamed savages. Now, I tell you, Mr. President, that if you desire to preserve the peace and tranquility of the Union, if you wish to bind more closely these States together in the bonds of affection and fellowship, you must take care to extend your protecting wings over every part of it. You must do justice to all. He who stands upon your frontier settlements and looks upon your glorious flag, must feel and know that the protecting arm of the Federal Government is extended over him; that however poor and humble he may be, his person and property shall be defended.

It is not to be expected that a Government too weak to defend, or so unmindful of its duty as to refuse adequate protection, can command the respect or affection of its people. Sir, I know the people of California are devotedly attached to the Union—they have been taught from their infancy to regard it as the richest legacy ever bequeathed to any people. They feel that they are under the highest obligations to transmit unimpaired, unsullied, that magnificent inheritance to their children. Although far from their native States, and many of them far from those who are bound to them by the ties of kindred and affection, still they feel that they are a part of that glorious Republic which has stood, for three quarters of a century, the wonder and admiration of the world. But when they find themselves neglected by the Federal Government, left to defend themselves against the merciless Indians; when they see their commerce unprotected, their friends murdered, and their property destroyed, because of that neglect, they must be allowed to utter their complaints.

If you intend they shall protect themselves—if you intend to throw them upon their own resources, suffer them to avail themselves of all their means, and my word for it, the work will soon be accomplished. Recall your tax collectors, your horde of Federal officers, and California would soon take care of herself. But if you tax us; if you claim our allegiance to the Federal Government; if we are to contribute towards its support, you must protect us. There must be a reciprocity in this matter. That some disaffection exists amongst the people, growing out of these causes, is certain; that unless the cause is removed this will increase is equally certain.

There are at least 75,000 Indians within the limits of that State, and they need but a master spirit to confederate the tribes and involve the whole frontier in a bloody and desolating war. I am not prepared to say that the commissioners, who have been so assiduously engaged during the past two years in feeding these Indians a million of dollars' worth of beef, have done no good; but this I will say, that the policy of making reservations in that State must be entirely abandoned. The whole military strength of the United States would be necessary to enforce your Indian laws upon these reservations. I have as much sympathy for the Indian as most men, but all experience has demonstrated that the two races cannot live peaceably together. The extermination of the Indian is inevitable. It is a melancholy reflection, but it is nevertheless unavoidable. The Indians of northern California are as wild as the country which they inhabit; nothing short of omnipotent power can so change their habits as to convert them into useful members of society. Extermination is a mere question of time. In the meanwhile I am willing to do all that can be done, to alleviate their sufferings or better their condition. As to inducing these untamable savages to engage in agriculture, as the Indian Commissioner seems to anticipate, is to my mind absurd. It never can be accomplished. It is a loss of time and money to make the effort to place them upon reservations in the heart of the settlements; and to expect them to remain quiet, and respect the rights of their white neighbors, is the worst species of folly. Their condition is in many respects materially different from that of the Indians on this side of the Rocky Mountains. A policy which might succeed here, but must fail there. But the Executive session is the proper place to discuss this subject.

Mr. President, I ask permission to read a letter which I received by the last steamer. It is from a gentleman of high character, and well acquainted with this subject. He says:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, May 14, 1852.

DEAR SIR: The complicated state of our Indian affairs in this country, and the unprotected condition of our citizens, have induced me to communicate with you for the purpose of drawing more attention to the subject. A week ago I called on General Hitchcock, and urged on him the necessity of immediately sending troops up to the north so as to protect the people in that region. He spoke very fairly, and promised to do all that he could, and is now doing everything in his power, but the truth is, his forces are very inadequate to the services required. The country is much more extensive than generally supposed, and the localities very imperfectly known. Of this you are well aware yourself, and it is very difficult to make people understand it. There is now little or no danger to be apprehended from the Indians, except those living in the extreme northern and southern portions of the State, while those portions are almost entirely destitute of any protection from the General Government. The southern, it is true, have recently fared tolerably well, but now that there is a temporary cessation of hostilities, the troops are mostly to be withdrawn, and the people again left to the tender mercies of the savages. The north has never seen a single soldier, except a small party that came through from Oregon, and the rough treatment they received on the way from the Indians ought to have been sufficient demonstration of the necessity of establishing a military post somewhere in that region. Such, however, has not been the case until now, when about a hundred men are to be sent to protect the people of a region five hundred miles in length by three hundred in breadth, embracing the most mountainous country in the United States, and filled with hostile Indians, fattened into good fighting order by the liberality of the commissioners.

The commanding officer is not to blame for these things, but the Government at home is, and the utter neglect with which we have been treated, is fast engendering a feeling that no good Government should ever afford a cause for. If we are to be held only to furnish the people of the Eastern States with gold to save them from bankruptcy, and obtain no protection from the Government, why, we must endeavor to find some way to prevent that gold from leaving the State. These sentiments I would dislike very much to be compelled to make public, and combated them warmly in the Legislature, but necessity may force me to it.

You have doubtless seen the correspondence had with the Governor on these affairs, and understand something of the matter; but the extent of it can only be fully known by those living in the exposed districts. Without protection of any kind, our people have been exposed to the most vexatious depredations; our friends and neighbors most inhumanly butchered; their property stolen or destroyed to an amount unprecedented, and no effort made on the part of the Government to chastise the perpetrators. In addition to this, when the people, driven to madness by these repeated injuries, turn out to redress their own grievances, they are told by the Government officials, that they have brought "lasting disgrace upon the American name," and these very officials purchase large amounts of property from our people under color of their office, and then the Government refuses to pay the account.

These complaints are not for imaginary wrongs; they are stern realities. If the Indian Commissioners have done wrong, why not recall them, and punish them for transcending their authority; but do not let the Government commit such a heinous wrong as to swindle our people out of their property, under color of official misconduct. Pay the people for the property they have furnished the Government in good faith, and punish the offending officers.

Now, we have no earthly use for any Indian department in this country, and the whole thing has arisen out of a want of knowledge of the Indian character here, and its effects have been, and will continue to be, most pernicious. Withdraw the whole thing, and send us a few more troops, and it is all that is required. The treaties are more farces, without any binding force or effect, and are worse than useless. The Indians know nothing about a treaty, and the only way to manage them is—to flog them and tell them to behave themselves. If this course is pursued, my word for it, we will soon be free from their depredations. It is all tomfoolery to be feeding them, for it only enables them to be the more mischievous. Besides, they do not require it. None of their means of subsistence is taken from them. The fish, game, acorns, and grass seed, are just as much within their reach now, as ever they were, and they desire nothing more.

Why is it that the Government should deem it necessary to send an expedition to Japan, to punish injuries inflicted on a few sailors, while our citizens are murdered by hundreds at home, and little or no notice taken of it? Is it because clat will follow the one, while nothing but duty requires the other? This seems to be the natural conclusion, for if the imprisonment of some dozen American citizens made it necessary to send a fleet to the other side of the globe to punish the offenders, it would seem to be still more necessary to chastise those who have murdered hundreds of our people.

I must again repeat that we want no Indian bureau—no Indian commission in this country, but we do want troops, and troops adapted to mountain service; and while on the subject, I will say that we want a full and complete investigation of the conduct of the commissioners that have been sent out here, for I am very sure that some of them at least, have been engaged in business that no Government officer should ever be concerned in; not directly but indirectly, under the cloak of other persons.

I will now leave the matter with you for the present, hoping that something will speedily be done for our benefit. Write to me at Sacramento City.

I remain, yours truly,

Hon. J. B. Weller.

In answer to some questions propounded, the Adjutant General addressed me the following letter:

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, June 16, 1852.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 14th instant, I respectfully inform you that the force now stationed in California, consists of two companies of Dragoons, three of Artillery, and the Second Regiment (ten companies) of Infantry, making in all fifteen companies, and distributed as follows:

Stations.	Description of companies.	Officers.	Men.	Aggregate.
Post on Cow Creek....	1 company, 2d Inf....	5	43	48
Benicia.....	1 company, 1st Drag 3 companies, 2d Inf....	19	215	234
Presidio San Francisco	1 company, 3d Art....	4	38	42
Monterey Redoubt....	1 company, 3d Art....	4	45	49
Camp Miller.....	2 companies, 2d Inf....	8	73	81
Rancho Del Chino....	1 company, 2d Inf....	3	66	69
San Luis Rey.....	Detachment 1st Art.	1	6	7
San Diego and vicinity.	1 company, 1st Drag 1 company, 1st Art....	8	163	171
Post at Mouth of Gila.	3 companies, 2d Inf....	11	195	206
Total.....	15	63	844	907

In addition to the foregoing, the 4th Regiment of Infantry, (ten companies), and ninety Dragon recruits, making probably nine hundred men, are now assembling at Fort Columbus, in the harbor of New York, preparatory to embarkation for the Pacific—a portion to proceed by the Panama route, and the remainder around Cape Horn. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Hon. J. B. WALLER, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

I regret that a portion of these troops have been sent around Cape Horn, as four or five months must necessarily elapse before they can reach the field of labor. After they shall have arrived, with the troops reported to be already there, a sufficient force, I trust, will be found to give the necessary protection; provided authority is given, as I have already said, to accept the services of the militia when the public exigency requires. In my opinion, a larger proportion of dragoons should have been sent out, as they would have been found much more effective than infantry. I must also be permitted to express a doubt whether the force reported is correct. In my opinion, there cannot now be more than six hundred effective troops in the State. The State of California has already expended more than a million of dollars in protecting the inhabitants against the depredations of the Indians, in giving that protection which you should have given. Whether the fault has been with the legislative or executive department, or both, I will not now undertake to determine. Be this as it may, I sincerely hope there may be no cause of complaint in the future. We have only asked that the protection which you extend to your people elsewhere should be extended to us. We ask no more—it cannot be expected that we would be satisfied with less.

Now, although I would not withdraw the Indian agents from that State, because, under a different system, they may accomplish some good; yet for the protection of our people, and the preservation of peace, I prefer seeing additional troops sent out. For the safety of the frontier, I would depend much more upon cartridges, than upon beef.

The resolution, after a verbal correction, was agreed to.

NEW POST ROUTE.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Aurora, in the county of Hancock, State of Maine, to township No. Thirty-Three, in said county.

CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate such information as he may possess relative to the practicability of constructing a canal across the peninsula of Florida, including the results of any surveys that may have been made by officers of the United States upon the peninsula, having a bearing upon this subject.

RESERVED LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up House bill entitled "An act to release from reservation and restore to the mass of public lands certain lands in the State of Arkansas."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we are hardly prepared to legislate upon that question under existing circumstances.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I beg that the Senator from Kentucky will not make any objection to taking up that bill. It is one that has heretofore been under consideration, and was postponed in consequence of a difference of opinion between myself and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. FELCH], as to the effect of the amendments proposed by the committee. The bill has reference to a small remnant of military reserves in the State of Arkansas, and embraces but a small class of settlers upon them. I have the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in its favor; and as it is not a matter of general interest, I think it can as well be decided now by the few Senators who are here, as at any other time. It was only postponed for the purpose of obtaining the information which I have received from the Commissioner, and I have the authority of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands for saying that this information being obtained from the Commissioner of the Land Office, he would withdraw his objection, and not insist upon the amendments. As I have obtained the opinion of the Commissioner, which is favorable to the view which I took, I hope the Senator from Kentucky will not urge his objection to the consideration of the bill at the present time in consequence of the small number of Senators present. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will make no objection.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Then I ask that the bill may be now taken up.

The motion to postpone the special orders for the purpose of taking up the bill was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the several tracts of land in the State of Arkansas, heretofore reserved for the satisfaction of military bounties under the war of 1812, and which now remain undisposed of, be released from such reservation and restored to the mass of public lands, to be disposed of in the same manner as any other unoffered public land: Provided, That the person who may, at the date of the act, be an actual settler on any one of said tracts, and who but for the reservation thereof might have claimed the right of preemption thereto under the act of 4th September, 1841, be authorized to enter the same, or any subdivision thereof, upon making proof of said right, and paying the minimum price per acre, within a year after the passage of this act, or prior to the day fixed for the public sale of the tract; and that all sales of said land, or locations thereof by military warrants (other than those of the war of 1812) which have been inadvertently permitted to be made, and which are in all other respects fair and regular, except as embracing reserved land not offered at public sale, be confirmed, and patents thereon which have issued, shall be as legal and valid as if said land had been released from reservation and offered at public sale prior to such sales or locations; and also, that all of said warrants which have not been satisfied, may be located on any of the public lands not subject to private entry at the time of the location of the same.

The amendments proposed by the Committee on Public Lands were as follows:

Insert after the word "thereof," in the fifteenth line, the words "not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres," so as to limit the amount which a person might be authorized to enter to that number of acres.

Strike out the words, "within a year after the passage of this act, or," and strike out the third section of the bill, as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all of said warrants which have not been satisfied, may be located on any of the public lands subject to private entry at the time of the location of the same."

Mr. SEBASTIAN. That brings up the point of difference between myself and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. FELCH], who, I regret to see, is not now in his seat.

When the subject was under consideration by the Senate on a previous occasion, it was postponed because that Senator apprehended—as did the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] also—I believe, that the bill was defective in several particulars; and I insisted then that the amendments proposed by the Senator from Michigan would not alter the legal effect or force of the bill. On account of that difference of opinion, the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and I have since obtained from the Land Office the views of the Acting Commissioner, in a communication, in which he shows that the amendments were entirely unnecessary, and that they do not alter the legal force or effect of the bill, and do not impair its adaptation to answer the purposes contemplated. On the contrary, that they would probably cause an embarrassment in the Land Office in relation to the known rules of construction which obtain there.

I ask that that communication may be read.

It was accordingly read, as follows:

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, June 17, 1852.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing House bill No. 238, with three amendments thereto, as proposed by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

You advert to a communication recently addressed to you in reference to the second of the three amendments referred to, and you now desire the opinion of this office as to the other two.

In reply to your query as to the first one, I have to state, the words proposed to be inserted are not deemed necessary to limit the preemption to one hundred and sixty acres, or to a regular quarter section containing as near that quantity as practicable. The tract authorized to be entered, is that which the party might have acquired under the preemption law of 4th September, 1841, or any subdivision thereof, and that law allowed a quarter section, or by legal subdivisions a quantity not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres. The insertion of the words might indeed embarrass the privilege, where the particular quarter section claimed should contain, as is sometimes the case, on the north or west of townships, a small number of acres beyond one hundred and sixty.

The third amendment, the striking out of the third section of the bill is not deemed essentially necessary, nor would it change the effect of the bill. This third section, it is presumed, was inserted in the House, prior to the passage of the act of 22d March last, it being prior to that time absolutely necessary to the accomplishment of the object manifestly intended by it, because, prior to the 22d March last, the location of any military warrant was prohibited on any land which had not been offered at public sale prior to 3d March, 1851. The retention of this third section would be a mere reenactment of existing provisions of law, and therefore unnecessary, but it could not "dispense with, repeal, or modify," any of those provisions.

With much respect, your obedient servant,
JOHN WILSON, Acting Commissioner.
To Hon. W. K. SEBASTIAN, United States Senate.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. That removes all doubt as to the necessity for the adoption of the amendments, and establishes the propositions for which I have contended, that the amendments but correct the phraseology without affecting the substance of the bill.

Now, in reference to the question which comes up, upon the proposition to concur in the amendments of the Committee on Public Lands, I have simply to say, that the letter which has been read shows that the amendments reported by the committee are entirely unnecessary, and as such, scarcely constitute a sufficient reason for sending the bill back to the House of Representatives, where, it is probable, in consequence of many contingencies that may arise, it will not pass this session.

I have now to ask that the Senate will not concur in the amendments as proposed; and that I may have the bill put on its passage. We shall thus be enabled to avoid a delay which can bring no useful results, but may be followed by consequences which I am anxious to avoid.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am compelled to differ with my friend from Arkansas. The Acting Commissioner of Public Lands has not referred in his communication to that one of the amendments which proposes to strike out of the bill the words "within a year from the passage of this act."

Mr. SEBASTIAN. If the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will allow me, I will say that when the bill was formerly under consideration, this very subject was mooted between myself and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I obtained a letter, which has not been read here, but which is adverted to in the letter from the Acting Commissioner of the Public Land Office, and in which the Commissioner states that he will construe this bill in accordance with the views presented by the chairman of the committee [Mr. FELCH] on that occasion. That letter I handed to that gentleman, and it is now on the files of the Committee on Public Lands. I cannot, therefore, produce it, but it states that the construction which the bill must receive will be precisely the same as would be obtained by the adoption of the amendment to which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has alluded. As I have said, I submitted the letter to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. FELCH;] he professed himself to be satisfied, and said that if I would get a letter embracing all the other amendments he would agree to it. That accounts for the letter not being here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That accounts for the letter not being here, but does not constitute a reason why the amendments proposed by the committee should not be adopted. All these amendments were considered in the committee, and this about which there is nothing said in the letter from the Acting Commissioner, which has just been read, was considered a very important one, unless you determine to enter upon a system of not requiring payments to be made immediately you perceive that this proposes to give twelve months before proceeding to the sale of the lands. We proposed to strike out that because it is the introduction of an entirely new feature, and no promise of a department to construe the bill in a particular way, can get over the plain meaning of the English language. I am surprised, therefore, that the Acting

Commissioner of the Public Lands should have given a letter promising a construction upon a bill directly contrary to the language expressly contained in the bill. If, then, you make this amendment, in order to avoid the introduction of a new feature for allowing credit upon land sales, your bill will have to go back to the House of Representatives; and if it goes back at all, you may as well make the other amendments also. The only recommendation which the Commissioner gives for allowing the bill to remain as it is, is, that in his opinion, the amendments are unnecessary, and that the bill will be construed in the same manner either with or without them. But the committee, through abundance of caution, thought it proper to make the amendments, so as to leave no doubt about the matter. I am a member of that committee, and I do not feel willing, in the absence of the chairman of that committee, who concurred with me with regard to the propriety of making these amendments, to dispense with them upon the recommendation contained in the letter which has been read, particularly when it is silent with regard to this second amendment. I hope, therefore, that my friend from Arkansas will allow the bill to lie over, or the amendments to be adopted as they are. If we concur in the amendments, I have no doubt it will facilitate the passage of the bill, and that, therefore, we had better adopt them.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have but a very few words to say in answer to the objections of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD.]

I find that he has seen the very letter from the Land Office to which I have referred, and, nevertheless, he has insisted on the adoption of the amendment to which he has alluded. He insists that this is a new feature in the preemption system. It conforms precisely to the terms of the act of 1841, which authorizes the preemptor to enter within twelve months, or sooner if the sales come on, before the expiration of that time. I have obtained the authority of the Commissioner of the Land Office, for stating that the legal effect in both cases is precisely the same. Such is the purport of the first letter, and yet the Senator is not satisfied that the bill will not produce the evils he fears, although we have the guarantee of the head of that office, an official declaration, that the bill will be so construed as to preserve the same features as in the old preemption system of 1841—the sole difference is, that it will be made applicable to a new class of lands not heretofore subjected to the preemption system. It has probably escaped the notice of the Senator, that by this bill the entry and payment of money must occur at the same time, and that the delay of twelve months does not extend a credit on the entrance money, no more than a similar indulgence which was extended to the settler by the law of 1841. If this attempt to obtain perfect legal and verbal accuracy with regard to mere technical points were to be constantly insisted on, we should be kept here until the whole of the Calendar would fall through at the end of the session for want of time to act upon it.

I have endeavored to present the bill in such a shape as to embrace all the views of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] and yet he stands out on a difference between the Commissioner of the Land Office and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. What are likely to be the consequences? If we pass the bill as it is, it will effect the objects the Senator has in view; but if we tack on to it these amendments, which do not alter its legal effect, it must go back to the House of Representatives, and be exposed to the chances of loss from want of time. I must, therefore, urge that, in a matter of such slight importance as this, save to those to whom it secures a home, the time of the Senate shall not be any longer consumed; and I hope that the amendments will be disagreed to, and that the bill will be passed in its original shape.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I really think it a strange thing, on the part of my friend from Arkansas, when he says he has not the letter to which the one which has been read to-day refers, and when he tells the Senate that the Commissioner will be governed by a construction put upon the bill by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands—

Mr. SEBASTIAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state, that the letter was satisfactory to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and I supposed it was so to the other members of the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no recollection that the bill has come up before the committee for consideration since we agreed upon these amendments. If it has been considered in that committee, in connection with that letter, it has escaped my recollection; and, really, I am not willing to be governed by my friend's recollection of a letter which has not been submitted to me, and which has not been submitted to the Senate, and of the contents of which we cannot well decide, when, as I think, a new principle is to be introduced, as the bill now stands, and one that has not been sanctioned heretofore; for the expression is, if the payment is made "within a year after the passage of this act, or prior to the day fixed for the public sale." If the payments are made prior to the day of sales, it is sufficient, and not to extend to a payment within a year. It is a principle which the committee could not sanction. I hope the amendments will be adopted. All that the Commissioner says is, that it will not alter the construction of the law. Then it will not do any harm to adopt the amendments. But that which I object to mainly is the thing about which the Commissioner is entirely silent. I consider it my duty to make this opposition to the passage of the bill without the amendments proposed, being a member of the committee which proposed them. I think the amendments should be made, and I have no doubt that the House of Representatives will concur in them.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to say one word. I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on Public Lands when this subject was last before the committee; but the bill as it has been read, and the proposed amendments seem to me to present the subject before the Senate in a light so clear and plain, that there can be no misunderstanding of the merits of the question. The proposition is a single and a simple one. It is merely to place the remaining military reservations in the State of Arkansas which are not now claimed by those to whom the military warrants were issued, back in the same condition as the other public lands are, and to subject them to precisely the same conditions as regards the preemption laws which now exist with regard to other lands. That is the sum and substance of it, and there is no new arrangement whatever proposed. Can anybody hesitate as to the propriety of doing this? In order to satisfy the land warrants in the war of 1812, certain lands in the State of Arkansas were set aside to be located by these warrants. All these warrants, so far as can be ascertained, have been satisfied, and now there is a parcel of public lands in that State withheld from settlement and sale, for no public purpose whatever; and this bill is simply to restore these lands, which are not now necessary for the purpose for which they were originally reserved, to the same condition as other public lands. The question is no more nor less than that. The Senator from Kentucky is certainly wrong, in my opinion, in saying that this is the introduction of a new principle, and the establishment of a credit system in the sale of public lands. I am sure he has failed to look at the bill, or he would see that the credit extends no further than the credit to all preemptioners now extends. Any man can go upon the public lands and settle down under the last preemption law, and is not required to make his payment until the lands are to be sold.

It also requires that those who have preemption claims, shall come forward, make proof, and pay up before sale. It effects nothing more. It completes the conditions on which the preemptors shall obtain possession, and places the land precisely on the same footing as all other public lands. No advantage is given to parties who may have settled on them, greater than they would have acquired by settling on other lands. They have lain so long in the market that many persons have settled on them inadvertently, and in some cases the Land Office has been at a loss to ascertain whether they were reserved or not, and have issued patents erroneously; the bill is to allow the Land Office in such cases to confirm the sale just as in other cases. The only real difference, therefore, between this bill and others of a similar character, is, that it affects a class of lands quite distinct from those usually offered at public sale.

It is important that the bill should pass without these amendments; for, as my colleague has observed, at this late period of the session, when both the Calendars are very heavily loaded, and when it is almost impossible to get up any bill for consideration, if we adopt the amendments the chances are that the bill will be lost for want of time in the House of Representatives. It is almost certain that such will be the case; and thus a measure of some public importance, both as regards the interests of the United States and the interests of citizens, not intended for the special benefit of individuals, nor for the purpose of taking a single dollar from the Treasury, but, in reality, giving the means of obtaining a revenue from lands which would otherwise lie a dead weight, will be delayed and thrown over until next session. The passage of the bill as it came up from the other House will obviate all these evils. Before this bill came up to the Senate, a bill of similar character was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, but its friends thought it would be better to abandon it, and accept this bill, which had already received the sanction of the other branch of the National Legislature. So far as its substantial provisions are concerned, it seems to me that they can scarcely become the subject of discussion now, the bill having been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and reported back favorably by them.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have come to an understanding with the Senator from Kentucky, and I will not ask that the bill be acted upon now. I will therefore move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

CASE OF HANNAH THOMPSON.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire that certain papers relating to the case of Hannah Thompson, who prays for a pension, shall be recommended to the Committee on Pensions. I have had a conference with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. FOOT,] who made an adverse report a few days since in this case, and at his request I ask that the papers may be recommended to that committee, as some new facts and additional papers are to be presented.

The motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to submit the following resolution, and ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it may be considered at the present time:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether any steps have been taken by his Department to investigate the charges preferred by Colonel McClennan against the commissioner appointed to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and Mexico; and if so, to make a report thereof to the Senate.

It will be recollected that some time since, a resolution was introduced by me, calling for a copy of the charges against the boundary commissioner made by Colonel McClennan. The Secretary of the Interior has sent in a communication, from which we cannot tell whether these charges have been investigated or not. I merely wish to know whether these charges have been investigated; and if so, what was the information obtained by the investigation.

Unanimous consent being given, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIME.

On motion, it was Ordered, That a message be sent to the House of Representatives, requesting the return of the bill to amend an act entitled "An act for the punishment of crimes in the District of Columbia."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to take up a bill which I am sure will not give rise to any debate: if it does I will consent that it shall lie over. It is a bill of the justice of which I am perfectly satisfied from a personal knowledge of the facts in the case, and one in regard to which the committee has made a decidedly favorable report. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Claims, for the relief of Richard Fitzpatrick.

Mr. DAVIS. It seems to me there is scarcely a sufficient number of Senators present to legislate upon topics of that character; I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BRADBURY. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw that motion, to allow me to move to proceed to the consideration of Ex-executive business. I will state that there is some business of an urgent character to be attended to, which will occupy but a few moments.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Florida, then, comes under consideration.

Mr. MALLORY. I withdraw it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I now move to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 21, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, a report of Lieutenant Charles H. Davis, the officer charged with the superintendence of the American Nautical Almanac; which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

LEASING OF ISLANDS ON THE PACIFIC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a copy of an agreement entered into by him on behalf of the United States with Alexander G. Abell, by which Mr. Abell is to take possession of the Island of Santa Cruz, on the coast of California, in the name of the United States, and to hold and enjoy it for a year.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to make some remarks on this subject before submitting the motion to refer the report and accompanying documents to the Committee on Public Lands.

This system of leasing the property of the United States, so far as my knowledge extends, originated in California. I have no knowledge of any exercise of that power by the Executive Department of the Government except in that State. About five years ago the limits of the city of San Francisco were largely increased by General Kearny, who issued an order or edict giving to the corporate authorities all the lands, or water lots, in front of what was then the town of San Francisco. General Kearny had no authority to make such a disposition of that property; but, under this order, very important interests grew up, and the principal business portion of the city is now situated on this grant.

At the same time he reserved for Government purposes several squares of the ground—twelve in number, I believe. Near three years ago, a military officer having the control of the Government there, leased out these reserves—which had in the mean time become very valuable—at a merely nominal sum, for the period of ten years. As soon as I ascertained that such disposition of this property was in contemplation, I denounced it publicly there, being in the country at the time; and I stated, that if elected to the Senate, being a candidate for that office, I would do all in my power to have these leases, if made, annulled.

To show that this is not the first time I have acted in this matter, I will bring to the notice of the Senate what I said near eighteen months ago, on the subject of these leases. On the 8th of January, 1851, the subject under discussion being a bill to establish a board of commissioners to settle claims in California, the Senator from Missouri—not now a member of this body, [Mr. Benton]—proposed a substitute to my bill, and which contained an unconditional grant to the city, of the land given to San Francisco by General Kearny, and also these reservations, except so much of them as was needed for public purposes. Here is what I then said, as quoted from the National Intelligencer:

"In the same section, all the Government reserves, except such as shall be needed for military purposes, or necessary public buildings, are granted to the city of San Francisco. I am in favor of this, also, with the reservation that private rights shall not be infringed upon by this grant. A portion of these reserves has been leased for the period of ten years, by officers of the United States Government, during the de facto government of General Riley. I was opposed to these leases; and was, and am, of the opinion that they never should have been made. I denounced them when I heard they were in contemplation, and notified the parties interested that, if elected to the Senate, I should exert myself to have them annulled. On my arrival in this city, nearly a year ago, I applied to the Secretary of War to annul these leases. I urged him to act promptly, that the parties interested might not have time to dispose of their interest in the same for a valuable consideration, to persons ignorant of the transaction, who would have an equitable claim upon the Government for protection. My representations were unheeded, and I am now informed that many hundreds of persons have made improvements on these reserves, and have expended vast sums of money in making these improvements."

I delivered this speech on the 8th of January, 1851. At that time, I was entirely ignorant that the leases which had been made, by a military officer, for a mere nominal sum of $3,000, when, if put up at auction, they might have been leased for $300,000, had been confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior. I have not the document now before me; but the Secretary of the Interior, in the recess, I believe, between the long and the short session of the last Congress, did ratify these leases; without giving notice of the fact at the next session of Congress, through his report to the President, to be laid before Congress. The leasing of these lands for a long number of years, or of confirming leases made by a military officer, was an important act, and I knew nothing of it until it was brought to my attention on my return to California, a year ago last spring. I was at first incredulous upon the subject, until the act of the Secretary was shown to me. One session of Congress has passed since the leases were confirmed, and we are now in the midst of another, and this official act of the Secretary of the Interior has not been laid before us.

As I said, very important interests have grown up in consequence of the act of General Kearny, in the making of these leases, and some of the most important legislation of the State of California has resulted from them. Charges of the most injurious character have been brought against individuals, on account of the disposition which has thus been made of the property of the United States. I now come to the lease of the Island of Santa Cruz. There are two members of this body, and two members of the House of Representatives, who are presumed, from the position which they occupy, to have some knowledge of what will promote the interests of the State of California, and protect the public property there; but so far as my knowledge extends, not one of the delegation from that State were consulted in regard to this matter. Incidentally it came to the knowledge of my colleague, and, if I am not mistaken, he disapproves of the act of the Secretary. None of the rest of the delegation knew anything of it.

Mr. WELLER. I will state, that the Secretary of the Interior did ask my advice on this subject, and I advised against leasing that island, either to an individual or any set of individuals; but that if the island was wholly unoccupied, I said that the best course would be to send some of the officers of the Army of the United States, then on the Pacific coast, along with a revenue cutter, that they might make a reconnaissance of the island and report to the Department, and then the Department would be able to act understandingly on the subject. But I was utterly opposed to leasing that island to any person for any purpose. I thought the Department should have the facts in its possession. I never knew anything of the lease until after it was made.

Mr. GWIN. When I ascertained that the island had been leased, I collected all the information I could in regard to it, from the Coast Survey, which I shall publish, having learned that some of its officers had been taking some observations there. It contains some forty-seven thousand acres of land, and has a very good harbor, as good as that of Santa Barbara, and fine water. It is situated not a great distance from the coast—about fourteen miles from Santa Barbara:

OFFICE COAST SURVEY, }
WASHINGTON, June 19, 1852. }

DEAR SIR: Our information is somewhat meager in regard to Santa Cruz Island. It averages twenty-one miles in length, three and a half miles in breadth, is sixteen miles from the main land, and contains seventy-three and one half square miles, or about forty-seven thousand acres.

Prisoners' Harbor is a good anchorage in the summer months, and is referred to by Lieutenant Commanding Alden in his sailing directions, as per paper marked A.

It is probable that some additional information will be received from Lieutenant Alden, on his return from his second trip down the coast.

Yours, &c., ISAAC J. STEVENS,
Assistant in charge of Office.
Hon. WILLIAM M. GWIN, United States Senator.

N. B.—I inclose two sketches—"B" showing Santa Cruz Island and Santa Barbara Channel, and "C" Prisoners' Harbor.

P. S. The sailing directions for the anchorages at Santa Cruz, San Simeon, and San Luis Obispo, as they are only open roadsteads, are comprised in a few words. During the summer months, say from April to November, anchor at any convenient distance from the shore; but in the winter, anchor far enough out so as to be able to clear the land to the westward, should a southeaster come up and render it necessary to slip and go to sea.

In regard to the title, there is no human being in the world who disputes that of the United States. It is included within the boundaries of one of the counties of California. In regard to the fear expressed in the communication of the Secretary, that the subjects of some foreign Government, or some adventurers from our own country, may get possession of the island, and give some trouble, I look upon as simply ridiculous. What foreign Government would come within fifteen or twenty miles of our coast to take possession of an undisputed portion of our possessions? What benefit is it to the United States, that any individual should gain the exclusive privilege of taking possession of near fifty thousand acres of the public domain, when the right of property of the United States there is as safe as in this city—in this building? It is said that the island is not occupied. Neither are the heights of Sierra Nevada, or the Rocky Mountains; and are we in danger of losing possession of that portion of the public domain because it is not occupied? I will not discuss this subject further at this time. I believe, from what we have seen in the city of San Francisco, that this initiatory step will lead to difficulty, and therefore I conceived it to be my duty to bring the subject immediately before the Senate; and I intend to make the motion to refer the communication to the Committee on Public Lands, with a view to have the lease declared null and void, and thus put a stop to this mode of disposing of the public domain of the United States by the Executive Department of the Government without authority of law.

As to speculators being thwarted, as the Secretary says, by this act of his, I beg leave to differ with him. I look upon the speculation as all on the other side. I look upon this thing of giving one individual a lease for near fifty thousand acres of the public domain on an island in one of the most delightful latitudes in the world, with a perpetual spring, a good harbor, and a very plentiful supply of water, as one of the most mammoth speculations of the day. Any one conversant with the public sentiment in California at this time, must know that there are thousands and tens of thousands of Chinese in that State, and going there, who are or may be prohibited from working in the mines, and an individual having such an island as this leased from the Government could, under the authority of that lease, induce them to go and settle there with him, and might thus collect thousands of these persons; and build up a community and interests which we may be bound to respect. The anxiety of the Secretary to put a stop to speculation by thus leasing the public domain to an individual, and thereby keeping citizens of the United States from going there, it seems to me, is founded in error, and may prove highly mischievous. I do not impugn the motives of any one connected with this transaction. I say there is no authority of law for the exercise of such a power, and it is a dangerous exercise of power to lease the public domain without authority of law.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question for information? When was the lease first made?

Mr. GWIN. Within a week or ten days. The moment I heard of it, I introduced the resolution. I want, before anything is done under this law, that Congress may act to show the individual that he has no power under it to take possession of this island. I therefore move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SHIELDS presented five petitions of citizens of Illinois, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of New York; a petition of citizens of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; and a petition of citizens of Coshocton county, Ohio, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRADBURY presented a memorial of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Cumberland county, Maine, praying to be allowed additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GWIN presented a memorial of officers of a committee, appointed by the citizens of Sacramento, to procure and disburse funds for the relief of emigrants by land to California, praying that William Waldo may be remunerated for his services and expenses in behalf of those emigrants; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CASS presented five petitions of citizens of Wheeling, Virginia, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of citizens of Groveland, Michigan, praying that the bill now pending before Congress, commonly known as the "homestead bill," may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, seven petitions of citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, protesting against any disposition of the public lands except in limited quantities to actual settlers; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SEAMEN'S PROTECTIONS AND SHIP'S APPRENTICES.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the law which requires seamen to obtain protections; and, also, into the expediency of requiring vessels employed in the foreign and coasting trade, to provide themselves with one or more apprentices.

THE ALANTHUS TREE.

Mr. WALKER, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution for the removal of the alanthus trees from the public grounds and streets of the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill to protect actual settlers upon the land on the line of the Central Railroad and branches, by granting preemption rights thereto; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BROOKE, it was Ordered, That the representatives of William Scott, deceased, have leave to withdraw their petition and papers.

LINES OF MAIL STEAMERS.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, that fifteen hundred additional copies of the report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in relation to the establishment of lines of mail steamers between certain ports in the United States, and between the United States and foreign countries, be printed for the use of the Senate, it was Ordered, That the motion be referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Theodore Whitney, praying to be allowed to change the location of a tract of land, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that he have leave to withdraw his memorial; which was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF A TRUSTEE.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the memorial of Stephen Caldwell, praying for special powers of sale and settlement, on behalf of the heirs of Joseph Ball, within the District of Columbia, have directed me to report a joint resolution appointing a trustee for the estate of Joseph Ball, deceased.

The resolution was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the resolution at this time. I presume there will be no objection to it. The resolution is of such a character that I do not suppose there will be any objection to it.

The joint resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares: That whereas Joseph Ball departed this life in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1821, intestate, and without issue, and seized of certain real estate in the District of Columbia; and whereas the heirs-at-law of said deceased are exceedingly numerous, and reside in different and widely-separated parts of the country, in consequence of which it is almost impossible to obtain their names or their cooperation in any proceeding for the division or sale of such real estate; and whereas much of the estate has already been sold for the payment of taxes, and lost, in consequence, by adverse possession, and the residue is in danger of loss, unless some one shall be appointed trustee for said heirs, and be authorized to represent them in any legal proceedings: it is, therefore, Resolved, That it shall and may be lawful for Stephen Caldwell, administrator of the estate of Joseph Ball, deceased, or for his successors in said administration, to sell, either at public or private sale, for the best price that can be obtained, any real estate in the District of Columbia which descended from Joseph Ball to his heirs-at-law at the time of his death; and, as trustee for said heirs, to make all such contracts and deeds as may be proper or necessary for the recovery and sale of the property; and also to represent the heirs in any proceedings in law or equity which it may be necessary to institute, prosecute, or defend, in order to maintain the lawful rights of the heirs of the property: Provided, That Stephen Caldwell, and his successors in the administration, shall first give a bond, with sufficient security, to be approved by the orphans' court of the District of Columbia, conditioned for the faithful performance of the trust.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move to amend the bill so as to confine the power to sell at public sales. I therefore move to strike out the word "either," and the words "or private," so that the resolution will convey power "to sell at public sales." I will merely state that this property lies in the District, and is going to waste. There is no guardian for it, and none can be appointed under the law as it now stands. This resolution proposes to appoint Mr. Caldwell a trustee to take charge of the property, under the direction of the orphans' court, and to dispose of it for the benefit of the heirs. He is the administrator and the confidential friend of the deceased. I understand from the Senator from Pennsylvania, that he is one of the most honest of men—a man of wealth residing in the city of Philadelphia; and his sole object is, to take charge of this property, and dispose of it for the benefit of the heirs, they being scattered all over the country, and the property going to waste. Some of it has been sold for taxes, and in a few years, I understand, it will be worth nothing, unless something of this kind is done.

Mr. BADGER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois, from what committee this joint resolution comes?

Mr. SHIELDS. From the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BADGER. It seems to me that it involves much much more serious and important principles than my friend seems to suppose. I apprehend that we are now proposing to enter into an entire new scene of legislation, to undertake by law to appoint guardians or trustees for particular estates, or under particular circumstances. I dare say this gentleman is everything my friend from Pennsylvania represents him to be—a very worthy, honorable and correct man—a man of fortune, who will do everything that is right and proper in the premises. And no doubt a great many such men could be found. But the difficulty is, in Congress undertaking by law to appoint a particular man the guardian or trustee of a particular estate of a particular individual. It is in its nature a judicial power. It is one which I believe we have not been in the habit of exercising. I know no instance in which we have done it. I think it is not exercised by the State Legislatures, and their authority over this subject is quite as large as ours. I would suggest that this would be setting an evil example. If the powers of the courts of this District are not sufficient to provide for cases of this kind, let a law be passed enlarging those powers. Something, I dare say, would be proper. But I hope, at all events, that this resolution will be allowed to lie over. I think it too serious an innovation upon the practice of the Government to be hastily acted on.

Mr. SHIELDS. After I state the facts, perhaps my honorable friend from North Carolina will be able to present some mode of accomplishing the object. I have consulted with some of the lawyers of this District in relation to the matter, and they can furnish no other mode. Mr. Ball departed this life in Philadelphia, intestate. Mr. Caldwell was his friend, and I believe his partner, engaged in the same business, and administered upon his estate. Real estate was found to belong to the deceased in the District of Columbia, but all the heirs could not be found. Some of them are in one State, some in another, and some are unknown. They are very numerous. The court here could not appoint a guardian, and had no power to appoint a trustee; so that the property is without any protection or guardianship whatever. Now the question is, how the property is to be taken care of under these circumstances. The courts in this District, I understand, have no power whatsoever to appoint a guardian in the absence of heirs who are unknown. I have consulted with some lawyers of the District in relation to the subject, and they tell me that this course was pursued before, and that there is no other way of preserving this property from waste, dilapidation, and destruction.

Mr. WELLER. Why can we not pass a single law authorizing the orphans' court to take the necessary steps to preserve this estate? It seems to me that is all that is necessary.

Mr. BADGER. Make a law in reference to all cases similarly situated.

Mr. WELLER. Or let us make a general law, investing the orphans' court of this District with authority to take all necessary steps in order to preserve the estates of distant or absent heirs.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would state that the only objection to that course is, that this gentleman, who has taken upon himself the management of this estate, is a man of character and standing, and has the interest of the orphans more at heart than the court can have; and at the same time, he can do nothing without the consent of the court.

Mr. WELLER. That is an excellent reason why the orphans' court should appoint him to take charge of it.

Mr. COOPER. I am not advised of all the facts in reference to this case; but I understand that Mr. Caldwell consulted counsel both in Philadelphia and here, and that he was advised to this course; and a bill substantially the same, if not the very same, as that which is now proposed, was advised. He is a man of the very highest character. I understand that this property is not only deteriorating, but that a great portion of it has already been disposed of for taxes, and that more of it will speedily be disposed of, unless some such provision is made. I hope that if there be no constitutional objection in the way, this joint resolution may be passed, investing the administrator with the necessary power to preserve this property for the heirs, who, as my friend from Illinois has said, are scattered all over the Union, and some of them are unknown to the administrator, and to those in charge of the personal estate.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I do not think there is any objection to the general principle of this resolution. On the contrary, it seems to me that the honorable gentleman from Illinois shows a strong case for legislative interference, but I do think that the objection raised by my friend from North Carolina, is very substantial in its character, that we should not legislate a particular individual into a trusteeship. That is a matter for inquiry and consideration on the hearing of evidence by a court, and should be settled in court. It would, therefore, seem to me to be much better to leave that matter open to the judgment and discretion of the court. In the next place, I thought there was another defect in the joint resolution as proposed by the Senator from Illinois. He proposes to give the power to sell. The power to convey is perhaps implied, but usually in such laws as I have seen, there is an express power given to sell, and the power also granted to convey by deed, or to execute deeds throughout, by signing, sealing, and acknowledging. Now, sir, I am inclined to think that if such a law does not exist in the District of Columbia, it is quite time that one should exist; and it would be much better to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, and let that committee bring in a suitable bill covering this case exactly.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly, that would be the proper course.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then I will make that motion; and, in the mean time, I will suggest an objection made to me by a very able lawyer of this city on that very point; and that is, the impropriety of giving to the orphans' court of this District, power of appointing a guardian or trustee in the absence of heirs—

Mr. WELLER. Without notice?

Mr. SHIELDS. Without notice, or with (what is tantamount to no notice) notice through the public newspapers, to heirs, some of whom may live in California, some in Oregon, and some in Illinois, &c.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman permit me to make another suggestion to him? I think no such authority should ever be assumed, unless on the application of some of the heirs. They might get the authority from the court by applying to the court for it. That should be the provision. And then the mode of giving notice should be prescribed by the law, and the parties should be held to a conformance with it. I think that if the Senator from Illinois will consent to refer his bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, he will get one of that description.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then I move to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. And I shall depend on my friend from North Carolina to guard the law in such a way that there may be no fraud committed in this District under it.

Mr. BADGER. I beg to say to my friend from Illinois, that I cannot accept any such devolution of authority. I cannot stand as a supporter of any such expectation—to pass a law so as to prevent the commission of any and all frauds under it. Such a law was never passed from the beginning of the world to this day.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to release from reservation and restore to the mass of public lands certain lands in the State of Arkansas; and,

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That it be recommended to the Committee on Public Lands.

MICHIGAN SALINE LANDS.

On the motion of Mr. FELCH, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill to extend the time for selecting lands granted to the State of Michigan for saline purposes. It provides that the time for selecting lands for saline purposes, granted to the State of Michigan by virtue of the fourth subdivision of the first section of the act of June 23d, 1836, be extended to January 1st, 1854; and the lands so selected previous to the day last mentioned shall be granted to that State for the same purposes, and on the same conditions, and with the like effect as if the same had been selected and confirmed within the time limited by the act of 1836.

Mr. FELCH. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for this bill. It is made necessary to propose an amendment on account of information received from the Department on the subject, varying the previous statements concerning the facts with regard to the selection of the land. The selection of the salt spring lands, granted to the State of Michigan, in common with the other new States, was made by the Governor of the State according to law, and returned to the General Land Office in 1836. It was the intention of the Department, and such I believe was its act, to confirm these selections. Subsequently, however, it appeared that a portion of them had been taken up by individuals, and therefore a title could not be made; and so it was reported to the Senate, upon the call of a committee, that there was a deficiency of twelve sections. The act of the Department confirming these selections was afterwards rescinded. It now appears, however, that a mistake was made at the Department in copying the lists, and that the lands which were originally selected and confirmed, were really open to selection and confirmation, and the State would have had the title to them, but for the subsequent action of the Department. In making a copy of the list, one of the clerks, in the first instance, placed upon his list the sections upon which the salt springs were located; then the lands which were selected for salt springs, and in carrying down the columns, an error was made. The lands were in another township, but in carrying down the columns they were put in the same township with the salt springs. There was thus an error in the township. This fact being ascertained, the Department has prepared a substitute for this bill, which simply confirms to the State of Michigan the lands which were originally selected for salt springs under the act, and to which it is entitled, no person having as yet entered those lands. All we now ask is, a confirmation of those lands. The same thing could have been obtained by a reselection or relocation of the lands, but the time having expired within which those selections could be made, the Department now recommends, as the easiest way of securing the rights of all parties, simply to confirm the locations originally made. I therefore offer a substitute for the bill, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the selection and location by the State of Michigan of the lands lying in said State, described as sections numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 21 and 22, in township seven north, of range fourteen east, heretofore made under and by virtue of the fourth proposition contained in the first section of an act entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act to establish the northern boundary line of the State of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of the State of Michigan into the Union on certain conditions,' approved June 23d, 1836," be and the same are hereby recognized as valid and confirmed to said State in lieu of twelve other sections, which were incorrectly noted as confirmations under said act, by reason of an erroneous interpretation given at the General Land Office to the original list of selections.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 21, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. L. F. MORGAN.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order, is the motion to lay upon the table House bill No. 280, making grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. As there are many absent from this side of the House, and as it is improper for us to proceed with business in the present thin state of the House, I move that we adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw for a moment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I agree with the gentleman that it is improper for us to vote upon anything relating to the business of the House, when so many members are absent; and should any such motion be pressed, I would vote to adjourn—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am perfectly willing the gentleman shall make it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There lie upon the Speaker's table some territorial bills, which should be taken up and acted upon.

Mr. HOUSTON. The House will not take them up. I was about to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ALLISON,] who made the motion to adjourn, to withdraw it, and let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and make speeches, but take no vote. I will vote to adjourn at any moment, should any gentleman propose to take a vote upon any bill. I am willing to go into the Committee of the Whole, for I think this course would be a harmless one, and would be useful in the economy of time. Speeches are to be made, and will be made, and there are sufficient members present to hear them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdrew his motion to hear a single suggestion.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman can make his motion again.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew my motion.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I hope the House will vote it down, and allow gentlemen to make speeches in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Upon the motion to adjourn I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. STEPHENS, of Georgia, and STANTON, of Tennessee were appointed.

The question being taken, the tellers reported that there were—ayes 69, noes 26.

Mr. COBB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and accompanying papers of H. P. Babcock.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to any business being done until we ascertain whether there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MEADE. I rise to a question of order. It seems to me that the House, by the vote just taken, decided to adjourn.

The tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 26; and then the yeas and nays were demanded.

The SPEAKER. Before the decision was announced, the motion to adjourn was withdrawn.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. OLDS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. It has been proposed to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to make speeches. I wish to know if less than a quorum can go into committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that the only motion in order, under the rule, is a motion to adjourn, or for a call of the House.

Mr. OLDS. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House adjourned until to-morrow morning at twelve o'clock.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CABLE, of Ohio: A petition from George Webster, and other citizens of Steubenville, for a canal around the Falls of the Ohio, on the Indiana side of the Ohio river.

By Mr. ROBBIE: A petition for a mail route from Savona, Steuben county, New York, by Bradford, to Tyrore, in said county.

By Mr. CHANDLER: The memorial of Stephen Baldwin & Co. and many other mercantile firms in Philadelphia, asking Congress to provide for deepening the ship channel at the mouth of the Mississippi.

By Mr. FLORINCE: The memorial of Caleb F. Clarke, Peter Hinkles, John Levering, and 22 other citizens of Philadelphia, praying Congress to pass a law to give one hundred and sixty acres of land to soldiers of the war of 1812, the Indian wars, &c.

By Mr. FITCH: Six petitions from sundry citizens of Cass and adjoining counties, Indiana, asking a grant of land in aid of the construction of the New Castle and Richmond and the Lake Michigan, Logansport and Ohio river railroads.

By Mr. SIBLEY: The memorial of David Cooper, P. P. Furber, and Martin Leavitt, committee appointed by the board of trustees of Cottage Grove Academy, Minnesota, praying a grant of land for the establishment and maintenance of that institution.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 22, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. WADE presented a petition of citizens of Ross county, Ohio, praying an extension of the time for locating Virginia military bounty land warrants; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. BROOKE presented the petition of Harris Hill, on behalf of himself and the heirs and legal representatives of William S. Scott, deceased, praying remuneration for a tract of land granted to the deceased by the Spanish Government, and sold by the United States as public land; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. RUSK. I have been charged with a memorial of the Board of Visitors, appointed to attend the examination of the Military Academy at West Point, to which I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs. The memorialists say, that it is not in view of that institution, simply as a college of learning belonging to a State, or to a section of the United States, that they invoke the attention and extended patronage of Congress, but rather as a national institution, composed of cadets selected by the General Government itself from each of the States in a justly-regulated proportion of number; and though representing, as they do, all the geographical sections of the Union, they cordially unite in this petition. The memorialists conclude by recommending that the number of cadets be increased by an addition of sixty-two—that is, one for each Senator in Congress; that the whole term of education be extended to five years; that to the present course of studies be added ancient and modern history, physiology, elocution, and belles-lettres, book-keeping, so far as may be necessary for fiscal accounts and army papers; the concordance of natural and revealed religion, and the evidences of Christianity. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It was so referred.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of Ann Van Wart and Samuel B. Van Wart, children and heirs-at-law of William Van Wart, praying to be allowed arrears of pension and bounty land which they allege their father was entitled to for services as a soldier during the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of Mary Martin, formerly widow of Robert Lindsay, praying remuneration for a slave captured by the enemy during the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, two petitions of citizens of the city of New York, protesting against any disposition of the public lands except in limited quantities to actual settlers; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion to print one thousand five hundred additional copies of the report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in relation to the establishment of lines of mail steamers between certain ports in the United States and between the United States and foreign countries, submitted a report in favor thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the motion to print the resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, relating to the removal of the sand bars at the mouth of the Mississippi, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was recommitted the adverse report on the petition of Joseph Nock, praying remuneration for losses sustained in consequence of the violation of a contract for supplying the Post Office Department with locks, submitted a resolution referring the papers in the above case to the Solicitor of the Treasury, and requesting that he will examine the case thoroughly, and report the reason for which said contract was abrogated by the Post Office Department, and whether it was or was not in consequence of the failure of the said Nock to comply with the said contract on his part; what sum the said Nock is legally or equitably entitled to in case the said contract was abrogated, without any failure on the part of said Nock to comply with the same; and that the Solicitor of the Treasury be authorized to take such legal evidence as the said Nock may offer on his own behalf, and also to notify the Postmaster General to furnish any evidence which may be in his power touching the same, and to report the result of his proceedings, together with his recommendation, to the Senate at its session in December next.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Holata Emathla, and other Seminole chiefs, asking compensation for services rendered during the Florida war, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for the payment of certain Seminole warriors in the military service of the United States; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Manufactures, to which was referred the petition of John Pope and others, citizens of Tennessee, praying that certain expenses attending the exhibition of American goods at the Industrial Fair, held in London, may be defrayed by the United States, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred so much of the message of the President of the United States, of the 11th June, 1852, as recommends the use of the military to repel hostile incursions made within the United States, on the frontiers of New Mexico, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial and documents in relation to the claim of John Walker to a pension and bounty land for services during the late war with Great Britain, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that they be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

DISTURBANCES ON THE RIO GRANDE.

Mr. RUSK submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, copies of all orders and instructions issued to the officers of the United States upon the Rio Grande during the recent disturbances in that quarter, together with copies of any opinions of the Attorney General, which may have accompanied the same.

BILL PASSED.

The engrossed bill to extend the time for selecting lands granted to the State of Michigan for saline purposes, was read a third time, and, the title having been amended, on motion of Mr. FELCH, it was passed as follows:

"An act to confirm to the State of Michigan certain lands selected for saline purposes."

CORRECTION OF A REPORT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to correct a slight mistake of the stenographers. In the remarks which I made the other day on the subject of inventors, in referring to steamboats, I used the name of James Rumsey, in connection with the names of Fitch and Fulton. In the report, the name of James Rumsey was omitted. There are, among my constituents, some of his descendants, and I should not like to have it appear in print, that in connection with that subject I had omitted to mention the name of their ancestor, who was, I believe, the first man on earth that ever propelled a boat by the power of steam, which he did, in 1784, on the Potomac river, at Shepherdstown, in the State of Virginia.

RE-EXPORTATION OF GOODS TO MEXICO.

The bill authorizing imported goods, wares, and merchandise, entered and bonded for warehousing in pursuance of law, to be exported by routes to ports or places in Mexico, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any imported goods in the original packages which shall have been duly entered and bonded in pursuance of the warehousing act of August 6th, 1846, may be withdrawn from warehouse at any time within two years from the original importation for immediate exportation, without payment of duties, under the provisions of the act aforesaid, to Chihuahua, in Mexico, by the routes designated by the first section of the act of March 3d, 1845, or by such other routes as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury; and that any imported merchandise, duly entered and bonded at Point Isabel, in the collection district of Brazos de Santiago, or imported and bonded at any other port of the United States and transported thence in bond, and duly rewarehoused at Point Isabel, in pursuance of the provisions of the warehousing law of August 6th, 1846, may be withdrawn from warehouse at any time within two years from the date of original importation, for immediate exportation, without payment of duties under the provisions of the warehousing act aforesaid, to ports and places in Mexico by land and water, or partly by land and partly by water, on such routes as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury. It further provides that any imported merchandise duly entered and bonded in the United States, may be withdrawn from warehouse at any time within two years from the date of importation, without payment of duties, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of August 6th, 1846, for immediate exportation for San Fernando, Paso del Norte, and Chihuahua, in Mexico, through the port of La Vaca, in the collection district of Saluria, in the State of Texas, and be transhipped inland thence to San Antonio, and from the latter place to the aforesaid destinations in Mexico, either by way of Eagle Pass, the Presidio del Norte, and San Elizario, all on the Rio Grande; and the Secretary is authorized to prescribe such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as he may deem proper and necessary respecting the packing, marking, inspection, and proof of due delivery at foreign destinations, of the exports so authorized. It further provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint inspectors of the customs, to reside at San Antonio, Eagle Pass, the Presidio del Norte, and San Elizario, or such other points on the routes as he may designate, not exceeding four in number, who shall each receive an annual salary of $250, and who shall make a report semi-annually to the Secretary of the Treasury, of all the trade that passes under their inspection; and also, that no goods, wares, or merchandise exported out of the limits of the United States, according to the provisions of this act, shall be again voluntarily landed or brought into the United States, or on being so landed or brought, they shall be forfeited; and every person concerned in their voluntary landing or bringing, shall be liable to the penalty of $400.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the Senate have already passed a bill embracing substantially the principles contained in this bill, with one single modification. Prior to the tariff law of 1846, all goods were permitted to be reexported on giving bond. When the bill making the system applicable to Texas was passed, it contained a provision that the duty should absolutely be paid, and not a bond given, as was the case prior to the tariff act of 1846. It was the impression, I believe, of the Committee on Commerce, at that time, that the tariff law abrogated so much of those special laws as allowed goods to be reexported to Canada and the adjacent provinces. But, on investigation, it was found that at all other places where goods are reexported, they are reexported on filing a bond; and consequently the law which we have passed, allowing persons to reexport goods from Texas to Mexico, differs from the general system. On conference with the Treasury Department, the committee have come to the conclusion that the system should be uniform. At present it leads to unnecessary perplexity, in demanding the payment of duties which are again to be refunded. It will be noticed that the bill itself provides that if the goods are again brought back, they are to be forfeited; and this will, I think, be a sufficient guarantee to the Government against any frauds which might be committed. With this explanation of the case, I apprehend there can be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 22, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion to lay upon the table House bill No. 280, making grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes.

Mr. APPLETON, of Maine. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to communicate to this House, if the same can be done without injury to the public service, such correspondence on file in the State Department between the American Consul and the Sultan at Zanzibar as relates to the cessation and resumption of our consular intercourse there in 1850-51.

Mr. ALLISON objected, and the resolution was not received.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not like to trouble the House, sir, but there are some bills upon the table that will elicit no discussion, and to which I apprehend there is no objection, that I desire to have disposed of. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the territorial bills upon the Speaker's table and put them upon their passage.

Mr. COBB. Will that come out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to take up these bills before we proceed to the execution of the morning hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am entirely indifferent whether these bills come up during the morning hour or not. I only desire to get at them.

Mr. OLDS. I shall object if the time devoted to them shall be taken from the morning hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then let them be taken up before the morning hour commences.

Mr. OLDS. I desire to know if the morning hour has commenced or not?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not commenced. By unanimous consent the House has agreed before proceeding to the morning hour, to dispose of the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in regard to territorial matters.

House bill No. 256, relinquishing to the Territory of New Mexico all the right, title, and interest which the United States may have to certain real estate within the corporate limits of the city of Santa Fe, New Mexico, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without amendment, came up as the first in order.

Mr. STUART. That bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. The question was pending upon the motion to recommit, so the Clerk informs the Chair, when the House last passed from its consideration.

Mr. STUART. I thought it was recommitted, but if there is any doubt about it, it ought to be recommitted.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I made a motion in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to lay this bill aside with a recommendation to the House that it be recommitted to the Committee on the Territories.

The question was then put upon the motion to recommit, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Territories.

House bill No. 257, to amend an act entitled "An act to settle and adjust the expense of the people of Oregon in defending themselves from attacks and hostilities of Cayuse Indians, in the years 1847 and 1848," approved February 10, 1851, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without amendment, came up next in order.

The question being upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. MEADE. I desire to make a verbal amendment to that bill.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the amendment?

Mr. MEADE. It is to strike out the word "deceased," and insert the word "died" in lieu thereof.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

House bill No. 258, to reduce and define the boundaries of the military reserve at the St. Peter's river, in the Territory of Minnesota, and to secure the rights of actual settlers thereon, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without amendment, came up next in order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time and passed.

Mr. SIBLEY. I move to strike out that portion of the title of the bill which refers to securing the rights of the settlers thereon. The section relating to that matter was stricken out by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The amendment was agreed to.

House bill No. 259, to provide for the protection of the Territories of New Mexico and Oregon, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with an amendment, came up the next in order.

The amendment reported from the committee, making the provisions of the bill applicable to the States of Texas and California, was concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and subsequently being engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to amend the title of the bill by inserting the words "to the States of California and Texas;" which was agreed to.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a resolution that a message be sent to the House of Representatives, requesting the return of House bill No. 21, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the punishment of crimes in the District of Columbia.'"]

The following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, without amendment, coming up in order, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and subsequently, being engrossed, were read the third time and passed, viz:

House bill No. 260, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the territorial government of Oregon," approved August 14, 1841; and House bill No. 262, to authorize the President of the United States to designate the places for the ports of entry and delivery for the collection districts of Puget's Sound and Umpqua, in the Territory of Oregon, and to fix the compensation of the collector of Astoria, in said Territory.

House bill No. 263, to provide for additional clerks, and extend the session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with an amendment, came up next in order.

The bill was read by the Clerk.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I should like very well to learn what necessity there is for four clerks in that Territorial Legislature. I wish the chairman of the committee who reported the bill, to inform the House what necessity there is of doubling the number of clerks in that Territorial Legislature. The Legislatures of different States, where there is more business and more members, get along with just half the number proposed here. Another objection I have to the bill is, that it extends the time of the session—the short session as well as the long one. Perhaps the chairman of the committee will give me this information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The reason for authorizing this additional number of clerks is this: The Legislature of New Mexico is different from all other legislative bodies in this Government. The members are made up of those who speak the Spanish language, and those who speak the English language. The proceedings have to be interpreted from one language to the other. They are compelled to have one set of clerks who speak the Spanish language and another who speak the English; and the necessity thus arises, absolutely, for this increase of the officers there. I will state to the gentleman, in relation to the other matter, as to the time required for the session of the Legislature—laboring under the disadvantages which they have heretofore, for they have been able to do but little—they only ask for one extended session. They are to have no more. The bill provides for no more. It is necessary that they should have a good deal of legislation, if they had any at all, for the people of New Mexico are now living, I believe, under a code prescribed during the time that our army was there.

Mr. CLEVELAND. It seems to me that the explanation of the gentleman from Illinois does not obviate the difficulty at all in relation to these clerks. Everybody knows that there are never two men speaking at the same time in different languages, and if not, it does seem to me that two clerks who can understand both languages perfectly, can discharge the duties just as well as two hundred. The only trouble is, that they wish to employ clerks who understand the Spanish language, and do not understand the English, and clerks who understand the English language, and do not understand the Spanish. Now, there would be no necessity for so many clerks if they could all understand both languages. Then, whether a man was speaking in Spanish or in English, they would understand him, and be able to record what he said.

There is really no necessity for an additional number of clerks, in my judgment. At any rate, I do not see the force of the reasoning employed by the gentleman from Illinois. Certainly there would be no two men speaking or communicating in different languages in the presence of these clerks at the same time. And unless such is the case, why should you increase the number of clerks?

Mr. RICHARDSON. With the permission of the gentleman from Connecticut, I will state, when a motion is made in the Legislature of New Mexico, it is necessary that it should be repeated both in the English and Spanish languages. It very often happens that an American who has learned to speak the Spanish language very well, cannot write it at all, and you must have clerks who can do it.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I would ask the gentleman whether, in his judgment, two clerks who understand both languages perfectly cannot perform all the duties required of the clerks in the Territorial Legislature of New Mexico?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am told that they cannot do it.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Has any one satisfied you of the reasonableness of the proposition to have four clerks instead of two?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The application for these extra clerks was made by the Legislature of New Mexico. I ask the gentleman from New Mexico if I am not right in that?

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The application comes from them, and that is enough to satisfy me. The Legislature of New Mexico would not have made the application unless there was some reason for it.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. I have had some little experience in the matter, and I therefore think it my duty to say something. We were so situated in Louisiana for many years that we had to have a double set of clerks and translators. I suppose that in this country you would not require that six thousand inhabitants who do not understand a word of English shall obey laws which they cannot read, and which they cannot understand when read to them. It requires, therefore, extra clerks to translate the proceedings into the Spanish language.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Does it require more than two, in your judgment?

Mr. MOORE. It requires a double set of clerks. I can assure you that we had a great deal of experience in this matter in Louisiana. For twenty or twenty-five years the proceedings in the Legislature of that State were carried on in both languages. Every speech which was made was translated from English into French, and very often the French had to be put into English. If you wish these people to understand your language, and the genius of your Government, you must give them some means of learning it, and not keep them in the dark—saying that they must obey laws which they cannot read or understand when read to them. I hope this bill will pass just as it is, and that there will be no objection to it.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Louisiana one question. How many clerks are employed in the popular branch of your Legislature?

Mr. MOORE. There are some eight or ten.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Well, if it is necessary that they should have these clerks, I have no objection to it.

Mr. MOORE. I recollect now that there are eight clerks in our House—four in English and four in French.

Mr. STUART. I rise for the purpose of moving the previous question on this bill.

A MEMBER. It is not necessary; there is no disposition to debate it.

Mr. STUART. We want to pass all these territorial bills; but if the House is ready for the question, I will not move the previous question.

The question was then taken on concurring in the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was concurred in.

CRIMES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McLANAHAN. A mistake has been made by the Senate in sending back to this House bill No. 21, which provides for the punishment of the crime of arson in the District of Columbia. The Senate have passed a resolution, asking the House to send back that bill, in order that the amendments may be passed upon there. It was sent here by mistake, supposing the amendments of the Senate had been passed upon, and that the bill had been got through the Senate. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, that the bill may be returned to the Senate, according to their request.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN OREGON.

The following bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a recommendation that it do not pass, then came up, viz:

An act (S. No. 283) to authorize the President of the United States to designate the places for the ports of entry and delivery for the collection districts of Puget's Sound and Umpqua, in the Territory of Oregon, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HOWARD. Let the bill be read.

Mr. STUART. I will state to the gentleman and to the House, that another bill has been passed precisely like that.

The question was then taken on Mr. Jones's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

SCHOOL LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The following bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, without amendment, next came up in order, viz:

A bill (No. 264) to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain townships and fractional townships in the Territory of Minnesota, not before provided for.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

SURVEYOR GENERAL IN OREGON.

The following bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with amendments, next came up in order, viz:

A bill (No. 224) to amend an act entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon; and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands."

The amendments were concurred in. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files the petition and accompanying papers of H. B. Babcock, which were referred at the last session of Congress to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAMILTON. For what purpose?

Mr. FLORENCE. To be used in another way.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is usual to leave copies upon the record. If that is done the Chair supposes that there will be no objection.

Mr. FLORENCE. Copies shall be left.

Mr. HAMILTON. I withdraw my objection. Leave was then granted for the withdrawal of the papers.

PORTRAIT OF HENRY CLAY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution, authorizing the Library Committee to receive and place in the Library a likeness of Henry Clay, presented by an artist in New York.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the portrait of Henry Clay, presented to the nation by Giuseppe Fagnani, a resident in New York, be placed in the Library of Congress.

There being no objection to the resolution it was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman from Maryland give way for one moment, to allow me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to present resolutions of the Legislature of my State?

Mr. HAMILTON. I must insist upon the call for the regular order of business.

GRANTS FOR EDUCATION AND RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business before the House, the question upon laying on the table House bill No. 280, "making grants of lands to aid in the construction of railroads and for other purposes," upon which question the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it in order to move to lay that motion upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. BENNETT. I move, then, that there be a call of the House. A great many members are absent who wish to vote upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair recollects aright, we are now acting under the operation of the previous question. If so, it is not in order to submit a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is a very important bill, and as the House is not very full, I hope it will be passed by for the present.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the gentleman that this is an exceedingly important bill. But there is now a motion pending to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it can be fully discussed and perhaps better understood than it is now. There are certainly enough present to refer it.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope gentlemen will allow this bill to be passed by for the present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table; and there were—yeas 73, nays 99, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, Averett, Bissell, Bocock, Bragg, Albert G. Brown, Busby, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Caskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Cobb, Colecock, Daniel, John G. Stephens, Stratton, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Venable, Walbridge, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, and Wells—99.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. APPLETON, of Maine, when his name was called, stated that he had paired off with his colleague, [Mr. SMART,] or he should have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. POLK said he was out of the bar when his name was called, and asked leave to have his vote recorded.

Objection was made.

Mr. POLK. I then wish to say that I should have voted to lay the bill upon the table.

[A message was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of MILLARD P. FILLMORE, his Private Secretary, announcing that he had signed sundry bills.]

The question then recurred upon the motion to lay on the table the motion made by Mr. MEADE, to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the main question to be put.

Mr. ALLISON demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and being taken, the result was—yeas 94, nays 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Allison, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bocock, Bowie, Bowne, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, George H. Brown, Caldwell, Cartter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Daniel, George T. Davis, Dimmick, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Marshall, Mason, McCorckle, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Molony, Nabors, Olds, Orr, Peaslee, Phelps, Polk, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Ross, Savage, Scurry, Smith, Stuart, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Townshend, Venable, Wallace, Alexander White, Wilcox, Woodward, and Yates—80.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. McCORKLE. I desire to inquire, if the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not yet expired.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the following amendment, as a substitute for the third section of the bill:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That of the lands hereby granted to the eleven first-named States, a portion of the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the said States respectively, in the manner directed in the preceding section, to aid in the construction of the following lines or routes of railroads, namely: From Toledo, Ohio, via Logansport, Lafayette, and Peoria, to Burlington; from Cincinnati, Ohio, via Vincennes, to St. Louis, with a branch from a point in Illinois, via Mount Carmel, to New Albany; from such point on the Mississippi river, within the limits of Arkansas, as that State shall appoint, via Little Rock, to Fort Smith, Arkansas, with a branch from Little Rock to Fulton, on the Red river, and a branch from Little Rock to Cairo, at the mouth of the Ohio river; from Terre Haute, in Indiana, via Springfield, to Bloomington, in Illinois; from New Orleans, by the way of Jackson and Canton, in Mississippi, thence to connect by the nearest and best route with the proposed Nashville and New Orleans railroad, and from Canton, by the way of Holly's Springs, to the line of the State of Tennessee; from Girard, in Alabama, to the waters of the Mobile bay; from Brandon, in Mississippi, to Montgomery, in Alabama; from Pensacola bay, in Florida, to Montgomery, in Alabama; from the river or Lake Saint Clair, or the waters flowing into the same, to Lake Michigan; from the southern boundary of Wisconsin, through Jaunesville and Fond du Lac, to Lake Superior; from Selma, in Alabama, to Gunter's Landing, on the Tennessee river; from the Atlantic Ocean, in Florida, to the Gulf of Mexico, in said State; from Davenport and Burlington, in Iowa, to the Missouri river, and from Dubuque to the Sioux river, and to Keokuck, in said State; from Manitowac, in Wisconsin, to the Mississippi river; from San Francisco to San José; from the Saginaw river to Mackinaw, in the State of Michigan; from Mobile bay, in Florida, and to the Chattahoochee river and Flint river, in Georgia; from a point opposite New Orleans to the Sabine river, in Louisiana; from Shreveport to the Mississippi river. Said railroads to be constructed on the most direct and feasible routes between the points before mentioned, and the proceeds of the residue of the land herein granted to the said eleven first named States respectively, to be applied by them to aid in the construction of such other railroads as the Legislatures of said States may respectively designate: Provided, No more land shall be taken by any State under this act in the whole, than is granted to said State by the first section thereof.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I rise to make an inquiry. I understand that the railroad from Girard, in Alabama, to the waters of the Mobile Bay, is not included in the bill. I inquire of the Chair whether such is the fact? If not, I desire to submit that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the provision to which the gentleman from Alabama refers, is in the bill.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Then I am satisfied.

Mr. COBB. I desire to make an appeal to the gentleman who introduced this bill, [Mr. BENNETT.] That gentleman says it was his intention to have included the Memphis and Charleston Railroad in the bill, but it was omitted by some error. I ask the consent of that gentleman and ask the consent of the House to have it put in.

[Cries of "Order!" and "Object!"]

Mr. CLEVELAND. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STUART. I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be divided if the gentleman will indicate the point where it is susceptible of division.

Mr. STUART. I ask for a division upon each road specified in the amendment.

Mr. BEALE. If it is in order, I ask that the part of the bill to which this is a substitute, be read.

The third section of the original bill was accordingly read, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That of the lands granted by this act to the said first-named eleven States, a portion thereof shall be applied in conformity with the foregoing provisions, to aid in the construction of the railroads already commenced by said States respectively, or for which said States have made appropriations, or pledged the credit of said States respectively, and the remainder of the land hereby granted to each of said several States to be applied, in the manner aforesaid, to aid in the construction of such other railroads as the Legislatures of said several States may respectively designate.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to strike out the entire section, and insert the amendment in its place. The Chair, after a moment's reflection, thinks the amendment is not divisible.

Several MEMBERS. That's right.

Mr. STUART. Would not each portion of the amendment be perfect if you were to strike out any of these roads, or all of them? As I understand it, the question is certainly susceptible of division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot submit a motion to strike out any portion of an amendment after the previous question has been ordered.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. STUART. I do not make a motion to strike out any portion. But here is an amendment containing a dozen or fifteen different and distinct propositions, so that the House may vote down any one of them, or all of them, and still the amendment will remain perfect, and therefore it is that I say I have a right to call for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that were it not for the fact that the House is acting under the previous question, it would be in order to amend the section. But the question is now upon striking out one whole proposition and inserting another; and the Chair decides that it is not in order to call for a division of the matter proposed to be inserted.

Mr. ASHE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. ASHE. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

I now move to take up the Pennsylvania contested-election case.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to submit a point in regard to the order of business. The gentleman from California [Mr. McCORKLE] is anxious to take up and pass upon the unfinished business in relation to the establishment of a Mint in California.

The SPEAKER. That bill will be the first business in order, if the House refuse to go to the business on the Speaker's table, or to the contested-election case. That is the first business in order before the House; but it is competent for the House to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, or to the contested-election case, by vote.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to ask a simple question. Is not the French spoliation bill which passed the Senate on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. FLORENCE. Will not that bill come before the House if the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, as the first business in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is there not a motion before the House for the reference of that bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what position it has upon the Speaker's table, without referring to the record; but many other propositions are before it, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. FLORENCE. I was under the impression that it was on the Speaker's table, and if we should go to the business on the table, that it would come up as the first business in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not positive about it, but will decide the question when it comes properly before the House.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. ASHE, to proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case from Pennsylvania; and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution proposed by the Committee on Elections.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. Is it in order to move to postpone the consideration of this election case until Thursday next?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion is in order.

Mr. MARSHALL. I make that motion. I am sure that such was the understanding, and I am surprised that it should be urged now.

Mr. CLARK. Was not the consideration of this business set down for to-day?

The SPEAKER. There was no order to that effect.

Mr. MARSHALL. It was certainly suggested, and certainly understood, that Thursday should be the day upon which this election case should be considered.

The SPEAKER. There was no order of the House upon the subject.

Mr. ROBBINS. The gentleman from California [Mr. MARSHALL] is mistaken as to the day to which the consideration of this subject was postponed. It was agreed that it should be postponed until to-day, not by the order of the House, but by general understanding.

Mr. MARSHALL. The understanding of the House was, that it should be taken up on Thursday, and not before.

Mr. HAMILTON. If I understand the proposition of the gentleman from California, [Mr. MARSHALL,] it is to postpone the consideration of this matter until Thursday next. It was the understanding of the parties in this case that it should be taken up to-day, and I hope the House will now proceed to consider and dispose of the matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. I wish to say—

The SPEAKER. The proposition is not debatable. The question is on the motion to postpone the consideration of this subject until Thursday next.

The question was then taken, and there were on a division, yeas 76, noes 64; when—

Mr. VENABLE demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered; and, the question being taken by yeas and nays, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 77, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernethy, Allison, David J. Bailey, Bell, Bennett, Bowie, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Brook, George H. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Chinguan, Conger, Cottman, George T. Davis, Dockery, Duncan, Edmundson, Fowler, Freeman, Gaylord, Giddings, Goodnow, Grey, Harper, Hart, Haws, Haven, John W. Howe, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Landry, Mann, Edward C. Marshall, Martin, McCorkle, Meade, Miller, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Newton, Samuel W. Parker, Perkins, Polk, Porter, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stone, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Toombs, Venable, Walbridge, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Wilcox, and Yates—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Charles Allen, Willis Allen, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Bente, Bissell, Birge, Albert G. Brown, Burt, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Caskey, Churchill, Clark, Cobb, Colecock, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Durham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Floyd, Gilmore, Gorman, Hamilton, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hibbard, Hiltner, Holladay, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Morrison, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Phelps, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Robinson, Ross, Savage, Smith, Stratton, Stuart, Sweetser, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Wallace, and Woodward—77.

So the consideration of the contested-election case was postponed until Thursday next.

CALIFORNIA MINT BILL.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I move now to take up the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The California Mint bill is the unfinished business, and the pending motion is to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. OLDS. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn, and the question first before the House is upon agreeing to section tenth, proposed as an amendment by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The amendment was read as follows:

"SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That there shall be charged a seigniorage on the coinage of gold in the Mint of the United States, and each of its branches, at a rate or rates to be established from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed, in his judgment, the actual expense of the coinage at said Mint, or branch Mint, respectively: Provided, The same shall not be more than one per centum on the amount coined."

Mr. HOUSTON. As I did not occupy the time allowed to me under the rule the other day, I hope the House will allow a letter to be read, from the Secretary of the Treasury, which gives important information upon this subject, which should be known.

Mr. BROOKS. I object to any argument.

Mr. HOUSTON. Very well. The gentleman objects to the reading of the communication. It is well that he does, for it shows that his objections to the amendment are baseless.

The following is the letter alluded to by Mr. HOUSTON:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 17, 1852.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 15th, calling upon the Department for further information on the subject of the proposed charge at the Mint for seigniorage on gold bullion deposited by individuals for separation, assay, and coinage, I have the honor to state, that there is no seigniorage charged by the Mint in England, as the separation and assay of gold bullion there, is done by private individuals designated by the Bank or the Mint, and the latter receive no bullion except in a state fully prepared for immediate coinage. The expense of separating and assaying gold bullion, is a matter between the owners of it and the above parties, but the Department has no accurate information as to the amount of the charge made therefor; but from the best unofficial information it has been able to obtain on the subject, it is believed the cost is nearly or quite one half of one per cent. The gold thus prepared for coinage is purchased by the Bank, which, by law, is obliged to receive and pay for it in coin at the standard price of £3 17s. 9d. per ounce, but the value of an ounce of gold in coin is fixed by law at £3 17s. 10½d. sterling, so that the Bank has an advantage of a penny half penny, or three cents per ounce, equal to about one fifth of one per cent. on its value.

Under these circumstances, individuals never present their bullion to the Mint for coinage, preferring this small charge which may be considered as a seigniorage on the part of the Bank, rather than to incur the trouble and delay of taking their bullion for coinage to the Mint, all of which is averted by presenting it directly at the counter of the Bank, between which institution and the Mint, the needful arrangements are made as regards the coinage. The Department, without being able to obtain official authority for the fact, understands that the Bank pays the Mint the expense upon such portion of bullion received by it in the above mode, which the institution requires to be put into coin, for much the larger portion of the gold in the vaults of the Bank, is always in the form of bars or ingots. As the bullion that is coined at the Mint belongs to the Bank, it would be but just and reasonable the latter should pay this expense, particularly in view of the large and advantageous privileges she obtains and enjoys from the Government, with the further additional advantage already alluded to of about three cents per ounce in the purchase of the bullion below its coined value, and which on the amount coined in the United States during the last year, would amount to nearly $100,000. These advantages would be a full justification for making the institution bear this comparatively small outlay.

As regards the British Mint, therefore, it appears there is no charge of seigniorage for parting, assaying, and alloying, from the simple fact that it obliges individuals to have those operations performed at their own proper expense, by private assayers, before she will receive the gold; and if any gratuitous service is performed by the Mint, it is merely the coinage, and that, as already stated, it is believed is paid by the Bank.

On silver coinage, the British Government has a seigniorage equal to about ten per cent., or what is the same thing, from pure silver of the value in gold of ninety shillings, it makes and issues one hundred shillings of coin, and will not receive silver for coinage from individuals except on the basis of giving for one hundred shillings of pure silver one hundred shillings in coin by tale, the latter containing only ninety shillings of pure silver.

The Government Mints in British India, which issue a very heavy coinage, charge a seigniorage of two per cent. on both gold and silver.

In France there is and always has been a charge of seigniorage on gold and silver. This charge at present in the French Mint is about three eighths of one per cent. on gold, and one per cent. on silver.

The Continental European Mints, it is believed, are generally modeled on that of France; but the information on this point possessed by the Department does not warrant it in making any positive assertion respecting them, except that a seigniorage exists in Prussia and Denmark, but to what extent the Department is unable to state.

As regards your inquiries as to the probable bearing and the result of the charge of seigniorage upon gold bullion, the Department is decidedly of opinion that it would be both just and proper that such a charge should be made, and that no possible injurious consequence could flow from it, either as regards the currency of the country or the future supply of bullion, the receipts of which the Department believes would in no way be unfavorably affected by such a measure.

The Department has from an authentic source account sales of a shipment of California gold dust from New York to London, which produced, when melted in London, an assayed value including the silver parted from it of £1,098 5s. 8d. The charges attending it in England were.... 4 15 0 which leaves an advantage of 60-100 per cent. in favor of retaining the bullion in the United States, even after paying the seigniorage of one half per cent.

The parting, alloying, assaying, and coining of gold dust, is an actual manufacture of a raw material from the crude state in which the metal is found at the mines, and by which its value to the owners, when made into coin, is increased greatly beyond the amount of the proposed charge by the Mint. The Department can see no just reason why this species of manufacturing of gold should be conducted for the benefit of individuals at the expense of the Treasury, which would not equally apply to a claim from the agriculturist to have in like manner his wheat ground into flour.

As a general rule, neither governments nor individuals incur a particular expense for the benefit of others without making a charge therefor, nor is the justness of this rule lessened by the arguments, that though the benefit primarily inures to the individual it is ultimately for the general good of the community, and that in the acts of Government such as it reserves exclusively to itself, individual competition is prohibited.

In our own country the judiciary and the post office establishments are of the utmost importance and benefit to individuals as well as of great general advantage. The organization and general management of these two important institutions are reserved exclusively to the Government, yet the parties litigant are obliged to pay the cost of suits, and those who use the mails are taxed to an extent that fully reimburses the Treasury for its outlay. In like manner the progress of invention and knowledge is of vast importance to a nation, yet every inventor is taxed by the Government before he can secure his patent right, and where parties in the above cases, and in others, which might be named, refuse to submit to the charge made by the Government, they are debarred from the benefits which such payment would otherwise confer on them.

When bullion is coined gratuitously, it is manifest that a certain weight in gold is precisely of the same value as an equal weight in coin. There will, therefore, be no reason for retaining it at home, and when the course of trade requires an export of specie, such coin will at once be shipped, and though it has been manufactured at great expense, it is immediately melted and treated as so much bullion. It is a pretty well-ascertained fact that of the coinage executed in the United States within late years, about two thirds of it has been exported, and by far the greater portion of it without ever having been at all in circulation. It is, therefore, evident from facts, as well as from common sense, that coinage gratis has no tendency to increase the home circulation. If a charge is made, say of one half of one per cent. for coinage, it is evident that coin would be worth one half per cent. more than an equal weight in bullion, and it would, therefore, be directly against the interest of the shipper to send coins as a remittance instead of bullion for to melt up this coin abroad, and reduce it to its unmanufactured state the owner would lose one half per cent. The charge for seigniorage will, therefore, rather have the tendency to keep our coin at home for the circulation of the country, or if from concurring causes it went abroad, it would be an inducement to return it in order to save the loss of the half per cent.

It is of course not pretended that a seigniorage will prevent the exportation of the precious metals, but merely that it will retard the shipment of coin. Unmanufactured gold in the form of bars and ingots should therefore be issued by the Mint for the use of those who may have occasion to remit precious metals, and for the reasons already stated it will always be sent in preference to coin, which latter will remain the last, and form the circulation of the country until the supply of bars or ingots is first exhausted for any foreign demand.

The best authorities on the subject are decidedly in favor of a seigniorage, in proof of which reference is made to "Smith's Wealth of Nations," book IV., chap. 6; "Mills's Political Economy," vol. I., chap. 9; "McCulloch's Essays on Exchange, Interest, Money," &c. Chapter 3 of the Essay on Money, gives a full view of the subject. Alexander Hamilton's celebrated report on the establishment of a Mint is also very conclusive as regards it, and he recommends the imposition of a half per cent. seigniorage. (See American State Papers, vol. VI., Finance, vol. I., pp. 95, beginning "A third point.") He concludes as follows: "Under an impression that a small difference between the value of the coin and the Mint price for bullion is the least exceptional expedient for restraining the melting down or exportation of the former, and not perceiving if it be a very moderate one it can be hurtful in other respects, the Secretary is inclined to an experiment of half per cent. The fact which has been mentioned with regard to the price of gold bullion in the English market seems to demonstrate that such a difference may be made. In this case there must be an immediate payment made for the bullion offered to the Mint."

It was unquestionably the intention of Congress who passed the first Mint law to comply with the recommendation of Secretary Hamilton, but instead of charging one half per cent. for coinage and providing funds for the prompt payment of the bullion on ascertaining its value the charge of half per cent. was made the condition not of coinage, but of prompt payment. It seems to have been taken for granted that the delay of coinage would always be so great that depositors would prefer the payment of the half per cent. rather than await the course of manufacture, and both the first and second bank of the United States were, therefore, in the practice of cashing Mint certificates, with the deduction of the half per cent.

Under the present system, Government provides funds for the prompt payment of bullion so soon as it is assayed and its value ascertained, which is from one to five days after the crude gold is deposited, so that not only is the coinage gratuitous, but the Government advances its funds to the amount of many millions to the owners of bullion submitting itself to the loss of interest and delay of manufacture. If the amount now set apart in the Treasury for the use of the bullion fund was applied to the redemption of the public debt, it would save in interest, an amount nearly or quite $400,000 per annum, a loss which is now incurred exclusively for the benefit of the owners of bullion.

This loss, however, will be avoided for the future, and without creating any inconvenience to depositors, should Congress pass the bill authorizing Mint certificates to be received in payment of all dues to the United States, and directing the present bullion fund to the extinguishment of so much of the public debt.

The present and proposed arrangements at the Mint, it may be confidently asserted, afford greater facilities for the prompt realization of bullion deposited for coinage, and at a less aggregate expense than at any other national Mint in the world.

A seigniorage or charge for coinage may exist in fact, though the coinage be nominally gratuitous. Thus, if the owner of bullion be delayed two months at the Mint before he can receive coin in return, this delay, estimating interest at the rate of six per cent., is equal to one per cent. for loss of interest on his money, for it would be the same to him, whether he obtained prompt pay for his bullion with a deduction, either as a charge for seigniorage or for the advance of the money, of one per cent., or waited two months to get the full value. A charge of this kind exists in every other country but our own; nowhere else is prompt payment made for the value of bullion without any discount, for even in England, as has been stated above, the bank retains three cents per ounce, equal, at the average rate of interest there, to the interest of twenty-five days.

It is proposed to limit the charge of seigniorage to the actual expense, but in no event to allow it to be more than one per cent.; but from the best information the Department possesses, the charge will probably not exceed five eighths of one per cent., which is also intended to include the present charge authorized by law for the parting of the silver.

If the act respecting the new silver coinage now before Congress should become a law, by which the Mint and its branches are authorized, at the option of the depositors, to coin bars or ingots, and the charge for so doing is limited to the actual expense, it will, for ingots of $50 or $100, be much less than the above estimate, and still more so if they are made of the denomination of $500 or $1,000, or even of larger amounts. Under a provision of that kind, the probability is, that all the depositors would require their bullion to be returned in ingots of large denominations; for, with the Mint stamp, they would be equally valuable and available as coin, either for banking purposes or for exportation, and being subject to a greatly less charge at the Mint, would of course be more universally prepared.

These large ingots would also have a preference over coin, by the public and private banking institutions of the country, to be retained in their vaults as specie capital, and in all cases of foreign demand would possess the advantages for exportation of being more convenient, and, also, would not be subject to loss in weight by abrasion, as is always the case, to a greater or less extent, with coin which has been in general circulation; for the value of our coin abroad, as already stated, is exclusively governed by its weight as bullion.

Under the system of assaying large ingots, the coinage of the Mint would probably be limited to the comparative small amount of ten or fifteen millions annually, as the supply of coin would only be required for the actual wants of the country, and the above yearly additional amount would soon saturate the circulation, particularly as the substitution of ingots would let loose a vast amount of coin now resting in the vaults of the banks, and would likewise, to a considerable extent, no doubt, be used as general circulation between banking institutions and in settling large transactions.

It may also be observed, that there is nothing either in the existing or proposed law which prevents owners of gold dust from having it parted, alloyed, and cast into any sized ingots or bars by private individuals, if they prefer to do so, or can have it done more economically than at the Mint; and when thus properly prepared, as is now done in England, they could bring it to the Mint either for its stamp as ingots, or to be changed into coin at the option of the parties, and paying only the actual expense which may attend the one or the other process.

It is difficult to understand how the proposed charge for seigniorage can in any way affect either the supply of gold to the country or its circulation here. If the course of trade requires an export of gold from the United States, no possible advantage can accrue by first bringing the bullion here and saddling the Treasury or individuals with the expense of coinage, for the mere purpose of immediately transferring the coin thus made to foreign crucibles; and if, on the contrary, an export demand does not exist, our citizens who are the owners of this crude gold bullion will hardly send it to Europe in order to bring it back from thence in foreign coin, particularly when the expense for seigniorage or other charges, nearly or quite equivalent to that it is proposed to demand in the United States, will be exacted there, with the still heavier additional expense of double freight and double insurance, going and coming. It is an important fact bearing on this subject, that in France, where the permanent specie circulation is by far the greatest of any other nation, and where the coinage during the last year has been unprecedentedly large, they have a seigniorage, which shows that a charge on coinage has no effect in restricting its issue or encouraging its export.

So far as a foreign demand may exist upon the United States for gold, it is an object rather to be desired that such demand should be supplied by the article in its crude state rather than to subject us to all the tedious and expensive processes through which it must pass before it assumes the shape of coin; for the whole operation would result in loss of labor to the country, as well as a loss of the materials used in the process, without the least benefit to any one; for the owners of the bullion would of course receive as full a value for it in Europe as they could in the United States.

It, therefore, does not appear to be either good policy or justice to put the public Treasury to the expense of coining gold for exportation merely to have it remelted on its arrival in Europe. It may be as well to state that the cost in Philadelphia for acids employed in the parting process amounts, for this single item of expense, to $150,000 annually. Two thirds of which, besides the labor, is an actual loss to the country, if, as there is little doubt of the fact, that proportion of our entire coinage has been exported to Europe and there melted up and recoined.

The expenses connected with the preparation and coinage of gold bullion is greater at the present branches than at the Mint in Philadelphia, and will be still more so at San Francisco, when Congress establishes a Mint there; but the Department would respectfully suggest that the law on the subject should be so worded as to make the charge uniform at the Mint and its present, as well as any new branches which may be established, with, of course, the proposed maximum limit of one per cent.

For the reasons already assigned, the Department is convinced, that under the proposed new coinage law the depositors of gold dust will universally require bars or ingots, in which case, the expense of furnishing the needful additional coin that may be required for the circulation of the country will, so far as the cost of coinage is concerned, have to be at the expense of the National Treasury, and the only charge to the owners of the bullion will be the very small one of forming it into large ingots.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. L. HODGE,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.
Hon. GEORGE S. HUSTON,
Chairman Committee Ways and Means,
United States House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. They were ordered the other day, and upon that the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The record does not show it.

Mr. HART. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I would inquire, for information, if this tenth section is an amendment reported by the committee?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Then I hope it will pass.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 108; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Boccock, Briggs, L. D. Campbell, Cleveland, Cobb, Colcock, Conger, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dimmick, Disney, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Faulkner, Ficklin, Floyd, Goodenow, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hibbard, Holladay, Houston, Ives, Jackson, George W. Stephens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Sweetser, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Venable, Wallace, Watkins, Wilcox, Woodward, and Yates—108.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. Another amendment is proposed to the bill by the Committee on Ways and Means, which will be reported to the House.

It was read, as follows:

"Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall procure or erect the buildings provided for in the second section of this act, or commence operations under any of the provisions of the same, at San Francisco, State of California, it shall first be his duty to make a contract, or contracts, for the erection of said buildings, and procuring the machinery necessary for the operations of said Mint, at a sum or sums which shall not in the whole exceed the sum of $300,000, which said contract, or contracts, shall be secured by good and sufficient sureties, to the satisfaction of the said Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States."

The question was then taken on this proposed amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. McCORKLE. There is another amendment which was offered by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The amendment referred to by the gentleman from California [Mr. McCORKLE] is not in order, except by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. McCORKLE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks the unanimous consent of the House to propose an amendment, which will be read for information.

The Clerk accordingly read the proposed amendment, which is as follows:

Strike out section nine, and insert:

And be it further enacted, That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1851, and for other purposes," approved 30th of September, 1851, as provides for the appointment of a United States assayer, and for contracting for the assaying and fixing the value of gold in grain and lumps, and in forming the same into bars, be, and the whole of the said clause is hereby repealed.

[Cries "Agreed! "Agreed!"]

Mr. JONES. What is the ninth section which is proposed to be stricken out?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the ninth section.

The Clerk accordingly read the section, which is as follows:

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That so soon as the said branch Mint is established in the State of California, and public notice shall be given thereof, and of the mode to be designed by the Secretary of the Treasury, then so much of the act making appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30th 1851, and for other purposes, as provides for the appointment of a United States assayer, and the contracting for the assaying, and fixing the valuation of gold in grains and lumps, and for forming the same into bars, be, and the whole of the clause containing said provisions, shall be hereby repealed.

Mr. JONES. I think the ninth section is better than the amendment. The object of the amendment, if I understand it, is to repeal the assaying office as soon as this bill passes.

Mr. McCORKLE. That is the object of my amendment.

Mr. JONES. I object to the introduction of the amendment.

Mr. McCORKLE. If the gentleman will allow me to explain, I think there will be no further trouble about the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to on the left of the Chair.

Mr. McCORKLE. I hope the gentleman [Mr. HUNTER] will withdraw his objection. I will raise a question of order in relation to this matter. This amendment was offered at my request, by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, before the previous question was demanded. It is therefore in order.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman wishes to occupy a few moments in explanation, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] withdraw his objection?

Mr. JONES. I cannot withdraw my objection to the introduction of the amendment, but I have no objection to allowing the gentleman to explain.

Mr. McCORKLE. In offering the proposed amendment, I only consult the interest of the miners, the laboring men of California. They are immediately interested in the repeal of the law creating the "assay office" in California, while the bankers, brokers, and those interested in the assaying business, desire to prolong its existence.

The only change in the Senate bill which my amendment will effect is this, and I hold it to be a most important one, for the simple reason that unless it is made, there will be as great a delay in putting the Mint in full operation by the present Administration, as there has been in all other matters in California, in which interests of great magnitude are involved, and for which appropriations have been made, and not, as yet, expended.

The delay in the passage of this bill by the House, which was sent to us from the Senate on the 15th of December last, has been occasioned by those interested in the perpetuation of the assay office in San Francisco, out of which they are and have been realizing fortunes at the expense of the Union.

The only effect of my amendment will be, to stop at once the operations of the assay office, which is flooding California with a currency which is spurious, and which must and will depreciate in the hands of the miner. The banker and broker never lose by these operations. They are keen of scent, and are always on the look-out, and are seldom caught napping; while the laborer, and in this case the miner, is sure to be caught, and must suffer the loss.

By the clause creating the assay office, the miners of California are taxed two and three quarters per cent. for the assaying of their gold, whilst to them no processable advance is made in the marketable value of their gold dust.

Mr. JONES, (interrupting.) I will ask the gentleman from California, how they will get their gold assayed from the time this bill passes, until the Mint goes into operation, if his amendment is adopted?

Mr. McCORKLE. In reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, I will say, that the miners of California do not, and never have had, as a general thing, their gold assayed at this institution. Those interested in the assay office, which is owned by capitalists on this side of the continent, have the money, and send their "runners" into the mines, to purchase "the dust" at sixteen dollars per ounce, and under the unwarranted and unconstitutional order of the Secretary of the Treasury, coin it into fives, tens, and twenties, put it into circulation, and realize out of the transaction an amount which would surprise men of moderate fortunes in this country.

Mr. JONES. Then the miners can wait for the Mint.

Mr. McCORKLE. The miners can well afford to wait for the Mint, if the Administration favor the continuance of the assay office, and defer the establishment of the branch Mint. All that a Democratic Congress can do, is to make the appropriation necessary to establish and put in operation a branch Mint in California; but a Whig Administration may delay in this case, as they have in the erection of light-houses, the execution of the law for twenty months. The miners may not be able to wait, and if they do, may lose money by the operation.

The miners themselves do not generally have their gold assayed, but it is bought up by the agents of the assay office, and being coined as directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is put into circulation, and when the coin as authorized by this law is put into circulation, this spurious coinage must fall to a still lower discount than it is as present quoted in the money articles of the New York Herald, an authority that no one conversant with such affairs will dispute.

The New York Herald quotes the gold assayed by this assay office in the banks in New York at one half per cent. discount, and I am informed by citizens of California, that in Central America and South America, it is at ten per cent. discount. This loss, which must inevitably fall back upon the miners of California, is what I want to prevent. It is true that by the unconstitutional "circular" of the Secretary of the Treasury, this coin is received in payment of Government dues; and customs at San Francisco may keep this coin issued by this assay machine "at par" in that State for a short time. Yet it is inevitable that when this "order" is reversed, as it must be, and as it ought to be, in justice to the other States, this same coin must depreciate to the expense of the miner.

I would, Mr. Speaker, continue an explanation of this amendment, only that I fear that my remarks may delay the passage of this bill, which is of the last importance to my constituents in any shape. But in justice to the people of California, whom I have the honor to represent, I must say to the gentlemen who desire the continuance of the assay office, that the tax of one per cent. as seigniorage is a small item as compared with the cost to the miner for the delivery of his gold dust in the Mint in Philadelphia or New Orleans. We have paid heretofore at the rate of fifteen per cent. Under the law of the United States one half of one per cent. is all that is charged; but owing to the failure of Congress to establish a branch Mint in California, the miner of California has suffered a loss of fifteen per cent.; which, on the aggregate amount of gold produced per annum in that State, amounts to millions each year.

I would, Mr. Speaker, continue these remarks, but I fear it may open a debate which will delay the passage of this bill. The delay of Congress to pass this bill has cost the people, the miners, of California five hundred thousand dollars per month.

As evidence of this fact, I now read the report of the committee of the Legislature of California on this subject:

"During a portion of the period of the above shipments, the value of gold dust, in this State, averaged sixteen dollars per ounce; and the balance of the time sixteen dollars and fifty-five cents per ounce. During all this time, the average value of the same metal, at the United States Mint, was eighteen dollars and thirty-two cents per ounce.

"Thus, it will be seen, that a loss has been sustained by the producers and laborers of California, by the difference in the amount actually received for gold dust, taking the highest estimate ($16 55) and its true value, ($18 32), which is the amount they should have received, during the year 1850, of at least five millions three hundred thousand dollars ($5,300,000); during the year 1851, about seven millions, ($7,000,000); and that during the year 1852, it will not fall short of nine millions ($9,000,000) of dollars. It needs no argument to prove that these immense losses have actually been sustained, and that the present system operates as a tax, to the amount named, upon the labor and industry of the State.

"The astounding fact that in a period of three years, the laborers of California have been taxed to an amount exceeding twenty-one millions of dollars, ($21,000,000), and that that tax or loss has arisen from the want of a Mint within this State, your committee judge should of itself be sufficient to induce immediate and liberal action upon this all-important measure."

The immense loss thus sustained by the miner is, on this side of the continent, almost incredible. The following letter from the Superintendent of the Mint in Philadelphia, will show that what I have said is correct, in that the coin issued by the assay office, under the circular of the Treasury, is not received in bank at New York at par. Read the following letter from the Superintendent of the Mint in Philadelphia:

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES,
PHILADELPHIA, June 7, 1852.

J. THOMPSON, Esq., Bullion Broker, No. 2 Wall street, New York—Dear Sir: A heavy pressure of business, consequent upon a large arrival of California gold, prevented me from answering on Saturday your note of the fourth instant, which, with the deposits therein named, were received on that day. The directions we are unable to comply with; nor would your object have been attained even if they had been. One hundred dollars is the minimum fixed by law for a separate deposit and assay; and as only two of your parcels of coin reached that amount, the rest had to be thrown together, or returned. Now, as every lot of coin made in California (and it would scarcely be going too far to say every coin) varies in "intrinsic value" with the gold of which it happens to be made, and the proportion of silver contained therein, an assay, such as you desire, would not, and could not, give the requisite information. Under these circumstances, it was deemed most for your interest to make one assay of the coins and another of the grains.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. C. DALE, Treasurer.

This shows that the coin, as assayed in California, is not equal to the coin as recognized at the Mint. The bankers of New York, on Wall street, of whose operations the New York Herald gives the best and truest account, I rely upon. This comes as the true account, as I place more reliance, and have more confidence in the money articles of the Herald, than any other paper in the country.

The people of California have lost, in consequence of the delay to pass the Mint bill, one million of dollars, and if this Mint is put in operation by the Administration as soon as it ought to be, the people of California will be saved millions of dollars. But as I know that an objection will prevent its passage, I have no hope among men who do not understand the condition of things in my State.

I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will recall his amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to state to the House and the gentleman from Tennessee, that before calling for the previous question, at the request of the gentleman who has just addressed us, I did submit this motion. At the time I, of course, doubted whether it was in order. I offered it pre-
